—Swiss Church, Whitewater, Kan.: A small plastic bag was given each family, into which a silver coin was dropped each day, until the bag contained thirty pieces. This unique offering, amounting to $143.90, was received Easter morning and was put into the missionary phase of the Lord's work. The choir, under its director, Wilbur Roth, presented an Easter cantata. They also participated in the annual song festival, May 1, in the Memorial Hall on the Bethel College campus. D. H. Rutschman and Mrs. Margaret Ewert were married March 27. Thomas Dean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Zuercher and Joan Annette, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Claassen were dedicated to the Lord, May 8. It was our privilege to sponsor the "Faith and Life" program over station KJRG, Newton, Kansas, for one week in March. Our pastor, Dan U. Dalke, was the speaker that week. He also gave four devotional messages over KBTO, ElDorado, Kansas, recently. A new Sunday school library was put into use April 24. A series of fine films, on the "Restoration of Israel" is being shown to the combined C. E. groups. Rev. Dalke served the First Mennonite Church of Waka, Texas, in a week of evangelistic meetings May 8 to 14.—Mrs. Donald Claassen, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, S. Dak.: Our men are organizing the Disaster Committee by registering their availability and tools they have. Four persons were received into membership on Palm Sunday, while sixteen young people confessed Christ in baptism on May 29. A number of our young people will serve in Voluntary Service and DVBS teaching this summer. The men's chorus of the West Zion Church, Moundridge, Kan., with their pastor Harris Waltner, presented a much appreciated program on the evening of May 1. Our youth fellowship collected a total of $1234.78 toward the Northern District Retreat Grounds at Swan Lake. Recently a number spent work days there in preparation for the summer's activities. The parents and thirteen children took part in a consecration service on May 8. Contributions to relief made lately are 1040 pounds of lard for soap, 1100 pounds of clothing which included 214 comforters and quilts, 35 pounds of bandages and the balance new clothing, while children contributed 90 Christmas bundles. As part of their monthly meetings the Women's Mission Society has studied Colombia and now the Mennonites in Paraguay. One of our members collected eleven sets of harness and a number of horse collars and sent them to our mission at Lame Deer, Montana. An adult C. E. program of talks and pictures on 1-W and PAX work presented by recently returned men was much appreciated. On May 22, Rev. Fretz exchanged pulpits with Rev. Harold Thieszen of the Bethel Church. As projects for the rest of the year our Sunday school has adopted a $900 scholarship fund for Cachipay, Colombia, children and $1000 toward the Japanese evangelism budget of our Board of Missions.—Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Downey, Calif.: Mother's Day is always something special. This is the day we honor mothers. On this day, eight children were dedicated to the Lord. They were: David Spenser, (Mr. and Mrs. Ted Carrell) Dennis Duane, (Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hayes) Robert Franz (Mr. and Mrs. Fane Quillan) Allen Frank (Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Regehr) John Herman (Mr. and Mrs. Joe Sanchez) Paul Glenn (Mr. and Mrs. Levi Stauffer) Heather Jayne (Mr. and Mrs. John Wilson) Paul Robert (Mr. and Mrs. Paul Yoder). God bless all of these youngsters. The Laudisti Singers gave us an unusual and interesting evening of fine singing. The Bethel Ensemble gave us a program of sacred music. Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Adams and Dr. and Mrs. D. Eitzen are both celebrating their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary in June. Both are having open house. Dr. Francis R. Steele from the University of Pennsylvania and its Museum, was one of our special speakers. He has made three archaeological expeditions to Iraq. He is the home secretary of the North African Mission. He gave a most inspirational message. We are in full swing collecting for our Christmas bundles. A farewell social was given in honor of our organist, Ervin Regehr, and his family who is moving to Delano. We will certainly miss him but wish him God's speed and blessing as he endeavors to work for the Lord in a new church. The young people had an afternoon of games and fun at Lepp's house one Sunday. Twenty were in attendance and a fine time was experienced. Tommy Thompson and Charla Jean Gray were united in marriage May 20. We all wish them God's very best as they start life together.—Elsie Heer, Corr.

Meet a Representative of Korea's Needy

A family with whom Katherine Dyck of Rosthern, Sask., became acquainted during the course of her work in a Pusan medical clinic illustrates the needy people whom MCC seeks to assist. This account by Miss Dyck describes the family of one of the infants she treated in January.

"Mr. Kim bought a small refugee shack in the heart of the city for his wife and three children, hoping to find some kind of work. However, a few days later he was forced into the army leaving the family without support. During the course of the war Mrs. Kim had lost one leg and her husband had made her a crude wooden leg. But if she walks on it for any length of time the end becomes raw and infected. To make matters worse, several days after her husband left (and she has not heard from him since) the national police ordered all refugee shacks in that part of the city torn down. Many moved theirs to the hillsides but Mrs. Kim had no one to help her. For a year now she and her four children (a newborn baby having been added six months ago) have been living under a bridge and every day she goes about begging food for her family. She told us she wished she could die but knew she had to go on living for the children's sake. My Methodist roommate and I are trying to find them a better place to live. I suppose there are thousands of cases similar to this one."

Why Do I Read My Bible?

"Thy Word have I hid in mine heart."

I read my Bible because within its pages I find power for the ordering of my inner life.

"It is my meditation."

I read my Bible because it offers a way of escape from these inner perils which threaten our modern life.

"The entrance of thy words giveth light."

I read my Bible because in its pages are found the secrets by which men walk the pathways of light and hope and freedom.

"Oh how much more value is a man?"

I read my Bible because it assures me that man is supremely dear to God.

"Teach me thy way, O Lord."

I read the Bible because it tells me whither I am bound and why.

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good."

I read the Bible because it offers me a sound social philosophy.

"Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them."

To "Brain-wash" Christians?

Any system designed to hold youth for military indoctrination and training over a ten year period, or even for eight years, smacks of a purpose to permanently condition the mind, emotions, conduct, and character of American youth . . . . Is this supposed necessity for the development in adolescents of a "military posture" a sort of "brain-washing"—designed to wipe out the tender teachings of mothers, of Sunday schools, churches, and Bibles—teaching based on principles such as "Thou shalt not kill," "Love thy neighbor as thyself," "If thine enemy hunger, feed him," "Forgive those who despitefully use you and persecute you," "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you," and others which I have not detailed because of the time limits put upon us? It seems to me that what is involved in the development of a "military posture" for all young men of America, involves the suppression of so much teaching that it falls in the category of what may be termed "brain-washing."

"Teach Christ Now"

The gigantic task of preparing the nation's Protestant Sunday school population, more than 30,000,000 in all, for responsible living as adult Christians in the next generation will be the chief underlying concern of a great religious gathering in Cleveland this summer.

The 23rd International Sunday School Convention, designed to provide information and inspiration to volunteer church workers, will be held in Cleveland, July 27-31.

Ten thousand volunteer Sunday school workers will be on hand, declared Bishop Reuben H. Mueller, Indianapolis, of the Evangelical United Brethren Church, chairman of the convention.

"To adapt to today's conditions," Bishop Mueller said, "new techniques and media such as film strips, tape recorders, and television are being used by more and more churches. To learn about these things, to explore better ways of handling their Sunday school charges, the church workers will meet on the theme, 'Home and Church—Teach Christ Now.' "

Between the opening session remarks by Harold E. Stassen, assistant to President Eisenhower, who is president of the convention, and the concluding address by evangelist Charles B. "Chuck" Templeton, the Christian educators will hear five other major addresses, three times attend 89 "interest group" meetings, and examine hundreds of church school materials and equipment in booths in the main exhibit hall.

This convention celebrates the 175th anniversary of the founding of the Sunday school which began with Robert Raikes in England in 1780. The First National Sunday School Convention met in New York in 1832 and similar conventions have followed to this day. These meetings indirectly influenced the beginning of schools in Mennonite congregations and stimulated the formation of the International Uniform Lessons in 1872 and the establishment of the International Council of Religious Education.

This quadrennial meeting for Sunday school workers is being sponsored by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches and the Canadian Council of Churches. While members of the General Conference have not often attended these interdenominational gatherings, workers from our congregations may attend and will find in the conference inspiration as well as information, without committing themselves in any way. Further information on registration and program can be secured by writing to the Central Offices, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas.

Film Review

The Transfiguration, 16 mm., sound, black and white, 20 min., available from Association Films. Rental $6.50.

The story of this film begins as Jesus, with His disciples, is on His way to Caesarea Philippi. A number of previous incidents in the life of Jesus are introduced, particularly the call of some of His disciples, and some of His miracles. The confession of Peter is also given.

Following this the account of the transfiguration is portrayed. The words of Jesus concerning His death and resurrection follow. The final part of the film shows Jesus healing the boy in the village after the disciples had been unable to heal him.

The film follows the Bible rather closely. The transfiguration is shown with reverence and simplicity and yet with deep meaning. There are a few times in which there is an interpretation given. The young boy is called an epileptic. He may have been but the Bible does not name the illness. Jesus is shown throughout the entire film. Some people may not like this. For those who do not have any questions about this, it should be mentioned that Jesus is portrayed in a way that helps to make Him more real to those who see the picture.

I Repudiate War

"The weapons of the third world war will not be discriminating weapons. They will be weapons of mass murder, aimed especially at noncombatant life. To say that we must in certain events be prepared to use such weapons in order to defend our "Christian values" is rank blasphemy. Doubtless, Communism is an evil thing, but not more evil than the sin of mass murder or preparation for it.

The simple ethical attitude which any Christian man or nation should adopt is this: "I will under no circumstances be an accomplice in a policy of mass murder, and, whether the enemy takes advantage of the situation or not, I repudiate war as an instrument of national policy, since war is now in its essence a mechanism of mass murder."

—Joseph Johnston, Ex-Senator in Eire Parliament, Irish Times, February 2.

The Cover Picture

The newly completed educational wing of the Buhler Mennonite Church was dedicated with special services at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, June 19. The dedicatory sermon was given by the Rev. Edmund Miller of the First Church of Christian of Moundridge, Kansas.

Dedication of the wing marks the completion of a project which was first discussed by members in 1947. Ground breaking services were held on Monday, August 23, 1954. Work started immediately and continued without letup till the wing was completed. The laying of the cornerstone was on November 28, 1954.

The new wing is attached to the north end of the present sanctuary, and extends eighty-eight feet east. It is thirty-six feet wide. It is of block and steel construction with an exterior of light brick. It is two stories high with a full basement.

The building contains nineteen Sunday school rooms, a church parlor with kitchenette for smaller groups or sewing circles, a pastor's study, a church office and a large kitchen.

This project marks the third major building project undertaken by the Buhler Mennonite Church. The first was the original meeting place, built in 1913, which was replaced by the present sanctuary in 1927.

Since its organization, the church has been served by P. R. Voth, J. M. Suderman, John F. Schmidt, Henry Fransen, and the present pastor, Irvin Richert. It is a member of the General Conference Mennonite Church. At present, its membership is 384.

TAKE ANT CONTROL PROJECT

The Men's Brotherhood of the General Conference Mennonite Middle District at their recent meeting undertook the responsibility of raising $2,000 for the Ant Control Project for the Neuland Colony in Paraguay.

According to the secretary, Ellwyn Hartzler of Berne, Ind., their aim is to raise as much as possible during the next several months.

This $2,000 has been promised to Neuland by the Board of Christian Service of the General Conference. Another $2,000 for this same project will be raised in Western Canada.

The Mennonite Central Committee workers in Paraguay have made arrangements with STICA for the new poison called "Methyl Bromide." This is a liquid which becomes a gas heavier than air and thus forces itself into the deep underground ant nests.

Dale Mueller, a member of the Salem Mennonite General Conference Church, Freeman, S. D., has begun work as an assistant in the Relief Section at MCC headquarters, Akron, Pa. A graduate of Bethel College this spring, Dale takes over the material aid work from Wendell Metzler, a member of the First Mennonite Church, Nappanee, Ind., who has served in this capacity during his two years of 1-W service. Material aid work consists of making arrangements for the collecting, packing, and transporting of relief supplies to ports for shipment overseas.

Editorial

THE ANCHOR HOLDS

How can one write an editorial except on the subject that is so real and deep in one's experience? We were busy unpacking and getting settled in our Goshen home, and had just about completed another day's work when a messenger came to the house with the startling announcement. "Your son David has been killed in an auto accident."

The announcement was such an absolute shock that the first reaction was, it can't be true, surely there is some mistake; not David, so full of vitality and the joy of living. Why, only a month before his voice was radiant with joy as he telephoned us at Chicago announcing the arrival of their first son. It couldn't be true—but it was!

Then came the days of arrangements: the meeting of the brave young wife and mother and the little daughter who says she is "two and a half," but now nearly three; our first meeting with the new son who will never know his father's love and guidance; the kind friends who with sympathetic handclasp and understanding words and letters expressed their nearness of spirit. Then the day of the funeral—the minister's helpful message—the burial—and now—life must be picked up again.

Of course the inevitable question arises in the mind. The question thousands have asked on such occasions throughout the centuries—"Why?" Why was one taken in the very prime of life when so much needed by the family? But it is a question one must not dwell on long. We cannot fathom the answer. But even Christ on the cross cried out, "Why?" The more important question is "Whom?" In whom will we put our trust? On whom shall we depend for comfort and strength to take up life again and go on? To whom shall we look for guidance in the days ahead?

During the almost forty years in the ministry it had been my duty many times to try to bring comfort and hope to homes into which the tragedy of death had come. This was the first experience in our own home. Did the words of comfort and confidence and assurance from our Heavenly Father now hold when the experience became our own? Yes! Thank God His presence and help is abundantly real. The waters may be deep but the foundation underneath is firm. Jesus' promise, "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you," has been tested and proved. Hope is not blotted out by despair. Faith does not fall before tragedy. The soul does not cry out to accuse God by saying, "It is not fair," but draws all the closer to the Heavenly Father and desires more than ever to have Him abide in us and we in Him. It is good to know that faith in Him can stand the hardest test, and that He does abundantly more than we ask or think. THE ANCHOR HOLDS!

On such an occasion parents naturally reflect upon the whole sweep of life as it touches the departed. The deep joy of his arrival at birth, particularly deep since it appeared for a few years that we might be denied the blessings of parenthood. His early childhood, his first day at school, the many events of youth, his baptism, his choice to stand resolutely for peace and the Civilian Public Service experiences; his marriage and the happy years together—they had celebrated their sixth wedding anniversary only two days before. He had remarked only recently to his wife, Barbara, concerning the joys of country life—which he had been denied as a child—that he never felt so close to God as when working in the field.

David was deeply appreciative to God for the joys of their home life. Only the night before the accident, as they knelt together in their prayers of gratitude, he had thanked God for "the miracle of childbirth." He also shared a real concern for his church and had visions of a church building that would be more adequate for the coming needs of children.

We gather many sacred memories which shall be cherished through the years. But for David's sake and as a living memorial to him we—his parents, brothers, sister, and his wife with her two small children—rededicate our lives anew to God and consecrate again ourselves to His service. We desire a memorial, not of elaborate granite, but in the lives of those of us closest to him, that we may build into life the faith and practical Christianity which he, who has gone a few steps ahead, held sacred. Out of this tragedy may there come deeper experiences of close fellowship with God. "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord."

May all sorrowing souls take comfort from words sung at the funeral by a close friend:

"Come, my soul, thou must be waking,
Now is breaking
O'er the earth another day;
Come to Him who made this splendor,
See thou render
All thy feeble strength can pay.

Mayest thou on life's last morrow,
Free from sorrow,
Pass away in slumber sweet;
And, released from death's dark sadness,
Rise in gladness,
That far brighter Sun to greet."

To you—passing through the Valley of the Shadow—join with us as together we express from our hearts the confidence of the Psalmist: "I will fear no evil FOR THOU ART WITH ME." In His abiding Presence we are comforted and sustained.

No Race Prejudice

DAVID SCHROEDER

A Canadian attending the Race Relations Conference held at Goshen, Ind., on April 22-24th stated proudly that in Canada we have no "race" problem. To support this he cited an instance where an attempt had been made to exclude negroes from a hotel but that the hotel had lost the case in a court decision. This caused me to reflect on the Canadian scene and on my own attitude toward race.

Perhaps there are many areas in our Conference where the same notion that we do not have a race problem is held merely because there are no other races represented in the area. This may mean however that the problem is greater than in other areas because it has never really been faced. It is easy to say that we are free from prejudice and attitudes of superiority when there is no occasion that will challeng or test such a statement.

In Canada, for instance, in areas where people live happily in the thought that there is no race problem you have large business firms making it a policy not to hire Jews and you have beach signs reading "for gentiles only." The few people of colored races know their bounds and do not go where they would not be wanted or attempt to do things which would not be permitted them. In many Mennonite communities you have English, Scotch, French, Jews, and Chinese people represented but they are never seen as even potential members of the church fellowship.

The Race Relations Conference was a great help to me in assisting me to see my own attitude on race. Theoretically and theologically I had no problem. I knew that science had conclusively proved that the blood of all races was the same and that the Red Cross no longer kept a record of whether the blood donor was white or colored. Even more, I knew that the Bible teaches that God "caused to spring from one forefather people of every race" (Weymouth, Acts 17:26). I could not imagine a God who would make a distinction between persons of different races. I knew God to be a God of love who makes no distinctions because all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, but are acquitted freely by His grace through the ransom given in Christ Jesus. Even the Church, the fellowship of believers, I regarded as being able to transcend all human differences. "Here there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcised or uncircumcised, barbarian, Scythian, slave, freeman, but Christ is all, and in all," (Col. 3:11).

Thus when the Conference spoke on the race problem in theoretical and theological language I could go along wholeheartedly and say "yea" and "amen." But when it came to imagining this to be worked out in an actual situation and have it realized in our fellowship on a local or inter-community level I felt that maybe I wasn't as emancipated from race prejudice as I had taken myself to be.

I had had opportunity to work with colored people in Chicago. I had visited their homes, invited them to attend the Woodlawn Church and asked them to accept Christ as their Savior and Lord. In all this I was absolutely sincere. Nevertheless, at the Race Relations Conference, some of the colored brethren helped me to see that we can do all this without actually having fully overcome the race prejudice that is so deeply rooted in all of us.

Through their help I realized that our usage of "we" included nonchristians of Mennonite background sooner than Christians of a different skin. Also I noticed that both our habit of staring at persons of a different color and our efforts to go out of the way to welcome them and to show them that we accept them are equally revealing of a prejudice that is still coloring our actions. All they asked was to be regarded as human beings but in our words and thoughts and deeds we were still making distinctions between Christians and Christians.

So I asked myself again whether that which I said "yes" to in theory and doctrine was actually realized in my own life and practice. Theoretically and theologically I was emancipated but actually and emotionally many attitudes still remained which were in direct opposition to what I professed and believed.

Look for the report on the Conference in the Mennonite papers and as you read the Conference statement ask yourself whether you have by God's grace overcome race prejudice in your own life and practice.

If a farmer waited until he was sure of the weather he would never raise a crop. He has to reckon with the weather and contend with it, but he cannot be sure of it. So every year he makes a venture of faith.

We cannot let the wind and clouds of circumstance determine our course. We cannot grow a harvest for God with one eye on the weather. Just as with the farmer, circumstances are to be considered, and we shall not foolishly disregard them. But we must not let them be the main factor in making our decisions.

Too many saints live fearfully from one "weather report" to another, scanning the skies and watching the clouds, conscious of "conditions" rather than of Christ. Faith goes ahead in fair weather and foul. It breaks up the fallow ground, sows the seed, cultivates the crop, and gathers the harvest. There may be pests and floods and droughts, but the Lord of the Harvest will see to it that our labor is not in vain.

Report of the Pacific District Conference

HERBERT R. KING

Location

The fifty-sixth session of the Pacific District Conference convened on June 1-5 at the First Mennonite Church of Monroe, Washington. This host church, together with the Country Mennonite Church, graciously provided for the physical comfort of all, for which we were deeply grateful. Other city churches also helped provide meeting places for some sessions.

Representation

The twenty-three churches of the conference sent 91 official delegates, 150 people registered for lodging, and many local people attended also.

Conference work

The theme of the conference was "Watch and Pray" based upon Mark 13:33-34. President Aaron Epp alerted the people to "watchfulness"—to stand together to reveal strength and courage in the battle against satanic forces and seize every opportunity for service. (See message in another Mennonite issue.) Reports of committees and schools and various recommendations were presented and passed upon. Two new congregations were voted into the conference; Faith Memorial Mennonite Church of Filer, Idaho—W. Harley King, pastor, and the Fresno Mennonite Community Church—Peter Ediger, pastor. The Evangelization Committee was given authority to further explore the possibilities of churches in the Moses Lake district of Washington and Lancaster, California.

Mission emphasis

Andrew Shelly, who recently visited many mission fields, gave a general mission challenge stating, "If the gospel was meant for anyone, it was meant for everyone." He spoke highly of the work of our missionaries and reminded us that their average length of service was 24 years. Our response to missions must be a desire for a greater knowledge of our conference missions which will result in a greater effort in prayer and giving.

Aron Jantzen, of India, spoke of the unfinished mission task in India.

Rev. and Mrs. Gerald Stucky of Colombia, challenged the delegates to a greater prayer effort in combating the evil forces which hinder mission work there.

Dr. and Mrs. John Zook of Portland, were consecrated to the work of missions in the Belgian Congo in an impressive commissioning service on Sunday.

Other conference guests

P. K. Regier, executive secretary of the General Conference, spoke on the work of publications, education, and the General Conference as a whole.

Arthur Jost spoke concerning mental work.

S. F. Pannabecker spoke in behalf of the Seminary.

Young People's Union

The young people presented a good program on Saturday evening, after their banquet, with Dr. John Zook as speaker. At their business session the aims and purposes of the work and its relationship with the General Conference and the three point emphasis were discussed. Their budget includes the partial support of John Zooks and Earl Roths. Clair Bartel continues serving as president for another year.

Women's missionary work

The Friday evening service was presented by the women; Mrs. Stucky spoke and showed pictures of Colombia. The organization reports that every church has at least one society and the total membership is over 1800. This coming year each member is to contribute fifty cents; money is to go to the most needy missionary work as designated by the general treasurer. The officers elected were Mrs. Ira Stevanus, president, and Mrs. Henry Franz, vice president.

The Men's Fellowship

The Men's Fellowship presented their program on Thursday evening. Arthur Jost spoke on the prevention of mental illness. The Christian film "The De Shazer Story" was shown that evening also. The Fellowship will help the Filer and Fresno church projects to the extent of $1,000 each. F. J. Wiens is president for another year.

Officers and next session

Conference officers for the coming year are: president, Aaron Epp; vice-president, Frank Harder; secretary, Earl Eymann; treasurer, Elmer Widmer. The invitation from the Downey, California, Mennonite Church for next year's conference was accepted.

Personal glimpses

"It was a great privilege to have been able to attend the conference in Monroe. Here the azaleas in full bloom, like a beautiful sunset, directed our thoughts God-ward in preparation for the blessings of a well-planned conference program. For these blessings and the gracious hospitality we thank our Heavenly Father." —Mrs. John Entz, Reedley, Calif.

"The minimum of organizational stress, the smoothness and order of the sessions allowed more freedom for the Holy Spirit to move and inspire through the medium of the conference speakers." —Julius Franz, Lind, Washington.

"We praise God for the many blessings of this conference, which were due to the well attended pre-session prayer meetings and the consecrated efficient handling of business by the president and all other officers. This conference was one of the best."

—Herbert R. King, Albany, Ore., conference reporter.

Did you see the Conference Stewardship Chart in last week's issue? Although receipts for the four boards to date were $68,612 below the budget they were $28,388 more than a year ago.

Practice Makes Perfect

CLAUDE F. BOYER*

In the past months, I have been made aware of something rather alarming. This has been detected in the truthworthy radio preaching, in reports from missionaries, and various other sources. At first, little attention was paid to it. Then recently one of my esteemed and respected colleagues in the ministry again brought this to my mind. I was lead to think of the church I serve, and continuous thought and meditation allowed me to arrive at several conclusions. This is a sort of summary of the observation and the general feeling in the minds of many church leaders. In a nutshell it is this: "the Church of Christ is being infested and slowed-down and slowly being rendered helplessly ineffective by a cancerous growth within it, known as 'worldliness.' "

"Worldliness Defined!"

This word, worldliness, should be defined. Worldliness and wickedness are not synonymous. A worldly life is wrong, but not because it is blasphemous, untrue, impure, unjust, or dishonest, but simply because it is taken up entirely with the things of time, material, and sense. By worldliness is meant the allowing of things like farming, business, law, medicine, art, music, culture—all things that are good in themselves, and necessary—to become so important that they take the place of God in the lives of men. When one gives first place—one's first allegiance—to these things, then they become a god to an individual and that person, in turn, becomes infested with worldliness.

It is this which is happening to the Church. She is forgetting that she is "the body of Christ" and as such is composed of those whom Christ has drawn out of the world. Instead one or both of these have occurred. Either she has been drawn by the world into it, or she has opened her doors widely, in an effort to be a social club, and allowed the world to come in.

"Solution Lies in Practice!"

The solution to this dangerous dilemma lies not in being condemnatory. Rather it lies in being hortatory and in suggesting positive avenues of changing the trend. The solution lies in the old saying—"practice makes perfect." It's true in sports, medicine, music, or any of the vocational careers. The athlete works hard at his particular sport. The nurse or intern spend many hours practicing so they may become as nearly perfect as possible in their work. The musician puts in many hours of practice to become an artist at his particular instrument. This is also true in Christian living. The Church is composed of individuals. What one does, what one is, decides the status of the Church. Worldliness can be eliminated in the Church, if the individuals of the Church will practice what they believe, and live up and above the world.

"Injunctions of Christ and Paul"

Our Lord said "If ye love me, keep my commandments." This is an expression that Paul took to heart, for he says in his great statement of faith, "For me to live is Christ." To be Christlike is to keep His commandments. To keep His commandments is to do them in life, and not only to give intellectual assent to them. In other words, we are to practice them in the daily walk of life.

"Some Basic Commandments of Christ"

We do well to consider some of the very definite and basic commandments given by Jesus Christ. Some of these He very explicitly told His disciples, and expects us also, to follow.

A COMMANDMENT TO STRIVE FOR PERFECTION. "You therefore must be perfect as your Heavenly Father is perfect." Here is Christ's plea for perfection. But what are the answers to such a plea? Impossible! Idealistic! Unrealistic! Because we are human, we shall not reach perfection in this life. Should we not expect Christ to uphold the best, the highest, for all of us? What a goal for us! Christ expects us to work toward it. In ourselves we certainly cannot do it. We need His grace, guidance and help. But the practice of discipleship, discipline, and prayer, that is necessary for such a life, will go far in eliminating worldliness in your life and in the Church.

Many of Christ's other commandments are of such a nature that they help us on this road to perfection—which we shall surely reach in the hereafter. But these commandments were also meant to be practiced. Here are some of the other explicit commandments.

A COMMANDMENT OF LOVE TO GOD AND MAN. "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind. You shall love your neighbor as yourself."

COMMANDMENTS TO WITNESS IN PRACTICAL LIVING. Included in these is the beginning of the Sermon on the Mount, the "salt" and "light" passages and the exhortation in Matt. 5:19—"Whoeven then relaxes one of the least of these commandments . . . shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven," (RSV).

A COMMANDMENT TO PUT CHRIST FIRST. The basis for this is the incident of the rich young ruler. He kept all the other commandments—but he was worldly. He had another greater allegiance than Christ. Jesus said: "You lack one thing; go sell what you have; give to the poor, and come, follow me." Add to this Jesus' other great commandment. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well."

A COMMANDMENT FOR TRUE GREATNESS. The disciples were arguing along the way. The issue was this: "Who would be greatest in the kingdom?"

Proclaming the Gospel Through the Printed Page

Providing German speaking Mennonites everywhere with an effective church paper, assisting in the establishment of another publication for Mennonites in South America, making available material for Sunday school teachers in mission churches in India, and planning for new materials for the churches in the United States were the concerns of the Editorial Committee of the Board of Education and Publication as it met for its spring session in Chicago on May 18 and 19.

The committee approved the appointment of Dr. Walter Quiring, as acting editor of Der Bote, to take the place of D. H. Epp who died March 31. It also approved the appointment of an editorial board to consist of J. J. Thiessen, chairman, Saskatoon, Sask.; H. T. Klaassen, Laird, Sask.; and Dr. Cornelius Krahn, N. Newton, Kan. In addition it appointed H. T. Klassen, Rosthern, Sask. A permanent editor for Der Bote will be appointed after the Council of Boards meeting in December.

The Editorial Committee heard reports on the establishment of Bibel und Pflug, a journal for South American Mennonites. This paper is published at Witmarsum, Brazil, where a new linotype was recently installed through the efforts of the Western District Brotherhood and the Boards of Missions and Christian Service. The Board of Education and Publication co-ordinates the interests of the General Conference boards in the Bibel und Pflug. The Editorial Committee expressed the hope that the new linotype would become the means for the future publication of Christian literature for South American churches and mission fields.

The committee made arrangements to make available to Sunday school teachers in India materials for their preparation in teaching. Advance copies of the Adult Quarterly will be mailed to Mrs. P. A. Wenger in Chicago who will translate and adapt this material for the Literature Committee of the General Conference mission in India. This material will be published monthly in the Hindi language magazine, Bandhu, which is printed at Jagdeeshpur.

Special emphases for the 1956 Sunday school lessons were chosen by the Editorial Committee. Evangelism will be stressed for one month in addition to which ten other Christian life emphases will be highlighted on one or more Sundays during the year. These emphases include Bible knowledge and use, salvation, Christian beliefs about God, discipleship, church fellowship, worship, witnessing, stewardship, the Christiaan home, Christian social relations, nonconformity, and Christian citizenship.

Other items being produced by the Editorial Committee include the Catechism Workbook, which will be published soon in a revised edition, and a companion volume which will be published next year. Sixty-seven of the 250 plates for the Youth Hymnary

Flashes of Thought

Strange Words, But True

Walter Gering

"NISI DOMINUS FRUSTRA" — what did they mean? In fact, what did all those figures mean? The emblem had been there in the hallway of the hospital for months. Visitors passing through the hall on their way to see relatives and friends could not help but see it. Patients entering for medical care often observed it as they committed themselves to the doctor's care. Did they know what it meant?

The entire emblem was most interesting. There was the figure of the American eagle with its wings proudly spread at the top; directly underneath were the clusters of maple leaves, symbolic of the Dominion of Canada, whose hospitals are affiliated with the American Hospital Association in this enterprise.

Three crosses were affixed to the shield within the circle. The Maltese Cross has been the emblem of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem since 1092 A.D. and for several hundred years also has been the emblem used by the St. John Ambulance service. The Lorraine Cross on the shield represents the emblem of relief to the unfortunates since medieval times. The Geneva Cross, the third cross on the shield, represents the international emblem for the relief of the sick and the wounded.

Then there are those two other figures. There is the figure of a wand with serpent coiled around it, the Wand of Mercy, symbolic of the healing art for several thousand years. The Urn Lamp, completing the shield is universally accepted as the symbol of knowledge. It is the official emblem of the Florence Nightingale Nurses.

But those words—NISI DOMINUS FRUSTRA—what did they mean? Inscribed upon a banner at the bottom of the shield—surely they must be significant. When the answer came it was thrilling indeed. Certainly it was significant: "Without God we can do nothing." What more appropriate words could be inscribed upon the walls of any hospital than those at the bottom of the shield? In an institution where so often life and death hang in the balances it is but proper to say: "Without God we can do nothing."

That is true in all areas of life. Jesus said unto His disciples: "Without me ye can do nothing." That is as true today as it was when spoken in the Upper Room centuries ago. Only as we go forth in the power of His Spirit can we hope to achieve the goal.

LORD, HELP US TO SEE OUR DEPENDENCY

Did you know that of the one special and 33 regular sessions of the General Conference eight were in Ohio?

Progress Among American Indian Missions

AGNES and ALFRED WIEBE

Below please find a report of the very significant events that took place May 8 in our Oklahoma mission field. I am sure you will agree with me in saying: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

JOHN THIESSEN
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

The Lord has sent us times of refreshing. First the Diamond Jubilee celebrations in April and then on May 8 the baptismal service at Fonda in the morning when 10 were baptized. Eight of these were closely related. Namely an elderly couple, two of their sons, one daughter, one daughter-in-law (the wife of the eldest son) and two granddaughters, (daughters of the eldest son and wife). Also a middle-aged man, husband of one of our Christians, and a young married woman. For all of these many prayers have been offered, but especially for the middle-aged man who had tremendous temptations to overcome—and the fight will still go on, so they need our prayers. With none the decision to follow Christ was made hastily. They had been struggling with this decision for from one to four years. How happy we are that they finally took the deciding step. It was a very special privilege to have brother John Thiessen with us for this occasion. A meal contributed by the church members was served after the service.

Another joyous occasion on that day was the dedication of the Seiling Church in the afternoon. About 170 Indians and white people gathered at the main entrance where a short dedicatory service of the bell was conducted by Arthur Friesen. Whereupon the keys to the building were presented by H. T. Neufeld, the door was opened, the people entered and the service continued in the auditorium.

Here, after singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," August Schmidt, read the Scripture lesson and led in prayer. Remarks were made by H. T. Neufeld under whose supervision the remodeling of the building was done and who has done his best to erect an attractive and practical house of worship. Hal Noble, pastor of the Methodist Church of Seiling representing the Ministerial Alliance, also made appropriate remarks. The dedicatory sermon which was very practical and impressive, was delivered by John Thiessen, secretary of the Board, who also offered the dedicatory prayer. Special musical numbers were brought by the Junior High School choir of Seiling and the Meno Men's quartet. These helpful services were much appreciated, as was also that of Miss Gladys Wiebe our niece who presided at the organ. After a light meal served and consumed in the open, an evening service, followed conducted by our helper, Daniel Allrunner, Brother Thiessen brought us another inspiring sermon. We felt that we had mountain top experiences that day.

But the blessing did not end with the close of the evening meeting. After the spiritual refreshings the Lord also sent us material refreshings. The service had barely closed when the clouds, that had looked quite threatening while the evening meal was in progress, released their contents and sent an abundant rain upon the thirsty earth and the long drouth was broken. About two inches fell that night and repeated heavy rains have changed the farmers' and water users' outlook greatly. May all bring their offering of thanksgiving to our heavenly Father for all His tokens of tender mercies.

Then our young people's retreat began at Roman Nose Park, and then the vacation Bible schools in our various churches. We know we can count on your prayers that the Holy Spirit may guide in all these efforts that real blessings may result from them.

P.S.: I do not want to close this report without making special mention of some of those who helped to make the Seiling Church possible. Local Indians and white men from surrounding and even distant churches have given of their money freely. Brother Jacob Hiebert, Cleo Springs, built a beautiful pulpit, the Alexanderwohl Church organ came to us from Brother Ferd Graevs, the Meschberger family gave two large pictures of Christ, also cash with which we bought a table and chair for the auditorium. To those mentioned and many others we are very grateful for their help. May the Lord bless them.

Jesus calls them to Him and gives this great commandment for humility and service. Later He acted it out in the Upper Room, when He washed their feet. "If any would be first, he must be least of all and servant of all."

A COMMANDMENT TO EVANGELIZE. According to Matthew these are the last words Christ spoke while on earth. He said them to His disciples, and He speaks them to all Christians in all churches. "Go, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, to the end of the age."

"This Is Our Task!"

These commandments were meant for us. We are to obey them. We believe them, but do we practice them? How can we effectively teach Christ's commandments to others until we have learned to obey them? We need to practice what we say we believe. We need to practice, not for the sake of perfection only, but because Christ expects us to obey His commands. Practice of His commandments will eliminate the lukewarmness of the Church. When Christians get to the place where they can truthfully say, "for me to live is Christ," then the Church will see worldliness removed from her midst.

Prayer-Fellowship Day

BERNARD and RUBY THIESSEN

The day has arrived! Another four weeks have slipped by and being the fourth Monday of the month to which all look forward means this is Prayer-Fellowship Day for the missionaries on the field. The Boschmans catch the six-thirty train, the Vorans arrive after two and one-half hours on the train, the Edigers and the Miyazaki four, Misses Friesen and Patkau, the Thiessens, arrive at ten. Each mission home has the privilege of being host twice a year—this month being the Verney Unruh's turn. We are fortunate that our stations are near enough that we see our missionary family once a month. Nothing but illness keeps adult or child away. This day together reminds one much of holidays spent at grandparents. The children are happy to see each other though at times there is verbal and physical disagreement—not serious—such soon heal and are forgotten. Among adults there is animated visiting, exchange of news from home and other missionaries which makes the day pass far too quickly. Early rising and train rides make appetites hearty and the hostess' deliciously prepared meals appeal both to sight and taste.

For the blessings of such fellowship we are thankful but the spiritual fellowship goes even deeper. Could heartier singing come from anyone than from the hearts and lips of missionaries each with a particular reason for praise? The short morning session is spent in singing and devotions led by the host for the day. Each is anxious to report the blessings and answers to prayer experienced since our last meeting. Occasionally a sister or brother confesses discouragement, inability to determine God's implicit will in a matter or some hindrance to the Spirit's working in power. For this one there is verbal and silent prayer. Each station represents pertinent prayer requests —a very poor family has just sent the "wage earner" off to school for Christian training needs our prayers for sustenance, another station requests prayer for an old man "not far from the kingdom," another missionary is concerned that God will work in coming evangelistic meetings, one station asks us to pray that Christians there might put Christ first in their lives, still another one needs our prayer for wisdom and guidance as he opens a Bible class. Then there are many reasons for praise—the restored health of one of our family, genuine interest on the Japanese in a newly opened class, God's marvelous provision of a Sunday school teacher to replace one who has left for school, evidence of deeper growth of Christians making them ready and willing to take responsibility in the church and rejoicing for one, two, three, or more who have been transformed from darkness to light in the past weeks. Reasons for praise and requests for prayer having been presented we go to prayer in faith. "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you . . . ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full," John 16:23, 24.

Children having been put in for naps the afternoon session of Bible study begins. Living in Japan has deepened the meaning of Christ's resurrection for us because we see multitudes worshiping dead gods. What hope! What power the risen Lord offers to the one who believes! The God given blessings of Christian parents, homes, Sunday schools, churches, and pastors are constant reminders that Christians here have not had these blessings thus often resulting in retarded spiritual growth. Spiritually we are reinforced as our brother presents Scripture truths which have come to hold greater depth and preciousness during past weeks. Each session is spiced with singing and hardly a day of prayer-fellowship passes without the singing of:

"The work is Thine, O Christ our Lord,
The cause for which we stand;
And being Thine, 'twill overcome
Its foes on ev'ry hand."

"Thy name can save, Thy name makes free;
We consecrate ourselves to Thee
As servants true, As warriors brave and true."

Solo and story by one youth member:

"I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go"

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord." How many times have I sung these words—in Sunday school, in church, in young people's meetings—but how lightly! Years ago I promised the Lord I would be His missionary but in the meantime it was crowded out of my mind with thoughts of teaching school, of travel, of Voluntary Service, until at last the Lord had to bring me face to face with that promise of long ago. "Will you spend your whole life in service for me, not just a few years as you did in Voluntary Service? I could resist no more! "Yes, Lord, with your help, I will." Such peace and joy as I had searched for, yet had not found, flooded my heart and soul! I was a new creature in Christ! It was a wonderful feeling! Even my friends wondered at the change that had come over me. God alone was able to do it!

After that experience I felt a great urgency for getting the best preparation possible in order to be the best worker possible in His great vineyard. College? Bible School? Seminary? The important thing was to seek God's leading and follow it. He was interested in every detail and would surely lead in this matter also.

It seemed strange in school that the Lord didn't call me to go to some definite place the way He had called some other missionaries, but I prayed and waited, talked to my pastor about it, and wrote to the Board of Missions. Then one day the answer came! A new work was being started in Japan. Would I be willing to go at the close of the school year? I prayed much about it in the next few weeks and finally had the assurance that Japan was to be my future place of service.

Those days of preparation: Buying, packing, traveling were busy ones but the sailing date finally came, the boxes, trunks, barrels were on board ship and soon the Golden Gate was a mere shadow and the mighty ocean a great reality.

Missionary: Those two weeks on the ocean passed quickly but the days at language school seemed to fly! It seemed I had hardly arrived at Kobe when I was hurried off to language school by my fellow missionaries. I was quite surprised when the first chapel service was conducted almost completely in Japanese. I understood nothing but there was still a wonderful communion in the hymn singing, Bible reading, and prayer. Imagine my surprise when I came to class and learned that I would study together with missionaries from Norway, Germany, and England. In our beginning class there are six people but in most of the other classes there are four or five. Our teachers teach by the M and M system—Mimic and Memorize, so we sound like a group of primary children learning our ABC's, which of course, is just what we are doing. The first hour the teacher who introduces the new lesson to us brings pencil, paper, and other objects to class to help us get the meaning of the new words. After that comes a five minute recess and then comes the review of the previous lesson. Could it be that I have forgotten so many words from the last session or two? The next recess is fifteen minutes long and gives us enough time for a quick workout in volleyball and enough air to wake up some of the sleepy heads. We seem to be moving right along but oh, there are so many strange characters to learn to read and write that I think I'll never learn them.

Going to language school day after day gets to be just a little tiresome. I thought I came here to preach the gospel and teach the Japanese a new way of life, but I find myself being the student. Well, it is a good thing that we have a few special opportunities to present the gospel or school life would be rather monotonous. I had not been here very long before I was asked to teach English. In the cities especially, so many young people want to learn English because more and more jobs are being made available to people who have a knowledge of English. Since I did not come here just to teach English I said I would be glad to teach an English Bible class because that would put me in direct contact with some of the young people. At the Toa Foreign Language Institute I found several boys who wanted to speak to me after class, and even walked home with me, all the while asking questions like: "How do you know there is a God?" "What is the origin of man?"

In addition to teaching at the Toa Foreign Language Institute once a week I also inherited the English Bible class at Kobe University which one of our missionaries who has now gone to Kyushu used to teach. To my surprise I learned that many of the university students know quite a bit of English because it is required as a foreign language of all the students. Well, that presented a wonderful opportunity to present the gospel in a language which I already knew. On these Mondays I usually went right from language school, ate with the students and then had my class right afterwards. These university students are really interesting people, so full of eagerness in their search for knowledge and truth. But then, let us let a university student speak for himself and his fellow university students.

University Student: Before you have been in Japan very long you will be able to recognize a student easily because of his black uniform. Every morning and evening and throughout the day as well, you will see many of us getting off and on the crowded trains because most of us commute to and from school even though some live in dormitories near the school. In government schools the tuition is very low, so low that even the poor can attend, only about $17.00 a year. Even then, many of us have part time jobs to help us pay for books and other expenses.

It may seem strange to you but our school begins in April and then we have only two months vacation from the middle of July to the middle of September which is the hottest part of the summer.

Most of our schools are coeducational but you will find many of the girls taking the two-year course while most boys continue through the four years. Very rigid examinations are given twice a year so if we don't keep up on our lessons we are likely to find ourselves looking for a new job. Entrance examinations are very difficult so we consider ourselves fortunate to have gotten into the school.

Missionary: These young university students are certainly challenging indeed. They do not want to become Christians just because their parents expect them to. The truth is their parents will probably persecute them if they do. They want to think through and be able to understand every aspect of the Christian life before they decide for it. That often is a great stumbling block because many things are to be learned after they become Christians. It also leaves out the element of faith which is such an important part of Christianity.

When I left Kobe after studying two years in the language school I did not really know what to expect at our new station. One thing I know, I am far from having mastered the language and will have to engage a private teacher just as soon as possible. Housing is another problem. It is almost impossible to find a suitable house to rent, so much of my time will have to go into supervising the building of a house. Japanese buildings are made quite differently from ours so that will take a lot of time.

Another urgent matter is to get some Bible classes started. Think of a situation where only you and perhaps two or three others are the only Christians. How would you go about establishing a Christian fellowship? A few people know English but not enough to start an English Bible class. I have no interpreter and do not plan to get one. My, how I wish I had had at least four or five years of language study. It is a challenge though, to know that everyone I meet is a potential Christian who is observing my life, my conversation, my all. I try to use every opportunity to speak of my Savior. One rainy day a number of the workers at the house asked me about Christianity. Another day my new neighbor had some questions and in the course of the conversation told me of two of his friends who are Christians. What a joy, to make such a discovery. I hope we can soon send word out to them and a few others and invite them for a time of testimony, Christian fellowship, and prayer.

Out here in Kyushu I have the feeling I am living in the country even though I am living in a town whose population numbers between 30 and 40,000. Perhaps it is because the town is somewhat scattered out with farmers living not too far away and rice paddies and other fields right within view. A farmer's life is really a busy one. Every day, seven days a week, he is out in the field, especially in the busy seasons. Not just he but the entire family goes out to help. I like the farmer because he is such a steady, friendly, and helpful person. I think I will let him tell you what life as a Japanese farmer is like.

Farmer: I think we farmers are the busiest people in all of Japan. The thing that perhaps keeps us the busiest is raising the main food of the Japanese people, rice. At the first signs of dawn you will see us stirring around the house and soon making our way to the little fields. Our life revolves around several busy seasons. Rice planting time comes during the rainy season when we have time for nothing else. Then there is weeding time and finally harvest, when we also need every available person to help gather in the crop, even primary school children are dismissed in order to help. After harvest comes a pause when we can repair dams, irrigation ditches, make rope and do many other odd jobs that were crowded out during the busier seasons.

Even during the war, we farmers fared much better than city folks because we could depend more on our own crops. Though rice is rationed, yet we have enough whereas folks in the city get only enough for ten days of every month. We eat barley with rice, too, and like the common vegetables and our native fruits.

Missionary: While the farmer is likely to be very conservative in his thinking and not easily persuaded to Christianity, yet, once he is reached for Christ, he will likely be a steady, reliable person who will stay in his community for many years. In the city quite the opposite is true. There they have what is called the "Back door problem." No sooner is a person won to Christ but he gets a different job, moves away, or just goes out the church's back door and does not return for some reason or other. Both of these groups need the strengthening force of Christian fellowship which takes them away from the distractions of the city or the busy work times of the country, and into the presence of fellow Christians and into communion with their God. To deal with both groups takes unlimited patience and utter dependence on the working of the Holy Spirit in their lives.

Closely related to the farmer is the fisherman, who sometimes lives in a half farming, half fishing village, depending on the type of fishing he does. Strangely enough the ones who were the first fruits of Jesus' teaching, the fishermen, are in Japan almost completely untouched by the peraching of the gospel. The startling thing is that there are so many of them, an estimated 1,500,000, who make up more than 10 per cent of the entire population of Japan.

These fishermen engage in several types of fishing. First there is coastal fishing which is catching smaller fish near the shore with a rod or net, and inshore fishing, which is carried on off shore in small motor boats of fifty or sixty tons. Then there is deep sea fishing, which uses large boats of three hundred to five hundred tons and operates far outside the home waters without returning to their port for months.

The coastal and inshore fishermen who comprise ninety per cent of the total number, engage in a very primitive and manual type of fishing and are by far the poorest group who must also do some farming in order to meet even the most basic family needs. In some places if a fisherman should realize 200 yen (about 55 cents) a day from his catch of fish he would be considered fortunate.

Since the fisherman is out on the water most of the time a heavy burden of responsibility falls upon his wife. If one of them were here right now I think she would say something like this.

Fisherman's wife: Being a fisherman's wife is a job that requires many things of me. I must be ready to send off or welcome my husband at any time, although I do not know whether the tide will let him sail morning or evening. Since the cruel sea, for that is how we think of it, so often snatches a boat and takes it and the people on it to its mighty depths, we do not send both father and son, or even brothers on the same boat for fear we would lose all our men. They may, however, go on different boats. When the fish are brought in I have to dispose of them, even peddle or dry them if necessary. At times when fishing is scarce it is very difficult to earn enough money to meet the family's needs, so I must cultivate a little garden plot on the sideline to help out our food supply. If it were not for my mother-in-law who lives with us and takes care of the children, they would get little attention. I wish I could do more for them myself but I must earn a living first.

Missionary: These are some of the people I have met since I came to Japan. There are others, too, I should tell you about, the factory worker, the busy housewife, the garbage collector who walks the street day after day rummaging through trash cans and garbage pails, but time does not permit. Each one, however, needs to know a Savior's love and forgiveness.

And so, we missionaries are kept busy each day trying to help some soul by being sensitive to the leading of the Holy Spirit in every encounter. We must have faith in God that people will respond to the wooing of the Holy Spirit. We must learn from the experiences of other missionaries and from our own as well, to work with patience because the first ones who come to classes come out of curiosity and therefore do not always stay with us long. Yet we must be careful because each person we meet should be considered as one whom God has prepared for His own. In many of our areas of mission activity the people are known for their conservatism and feudalistic patterns of thinking and because of the evil in the human heart it is hard for them to turn to God.

For these reasons, pray much: (1) For the missionary that with patience and wisdom he may continue to break the Bread of Life to hungry souls. (2) For the Japanese people we meet in our daily activities that they may be awakened to their need of a living Savior and made ready to accept Him as their own. (3) That the missionary may soon conquer the language barrier and speak clearly and understandably in the people's own language.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN SAID

"The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening destruction, and all attempts to regulate it will aggravate the evil. There must be no attempt to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated, not a root must be left behind, for until this is done, all classes must continue in danger of becoming victims of strong drink."

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Dr. G. Huebert of Winnipeg, Manitoba, spoke to the college students in chapel service recently. After student chapel Rev. H. Wall announced that work on the new college grounds had begun.

On a recent Friday night the college fellows responded to an urgent call for help to fight the flood waters of the Assiniboine River near Springstein. Since then the flood has receded.

The 1955 graduating class presented the annual graduate program. The theme of their presentation was "Be Ye Doers of the Word." They gave us a glimpse into the past, present, and possible future life of college students.

We have eleven graduates this year. Of these four are girls. They are: Martha Boschman, Mary Epp, Anna Neufeld, and Louise Wiens. The names of the seven boys graduating are: Bill Block, Nick Dick, Jake Giesbrecht, Bill Kruger, Joe Neufeld, George E. Janzen, and George M. Janzen.

have been completed, and as soon as the balance of the plates are made, this new hymnbook for young people will be printed. In addition to this the policies and production of ten other General Conference publications for the church and home were reviewed. These include The Mennonite, Junior Messenger, Der Kinderbote, Adult Quarterly, Young People's Quarterly, Sonntagschul-Lektionen, Herald Intermediate Bible Studies (General Conference edition), Mennonite Junior Quarterly, Mennonite Junior Teacher, and Herald Teacher (General Conference edition).

The Editorial Committee sponsored a writers' conference in co-operation with a committee from the (Old) Mennonite Church at Hesston, Kansas, May 3-6. Half of the thirty registrants were from the General Conference. A committee was appointed to plan another writers' conference to be held in Winnipeg, Manitoba, prior to the next session of the General Conference. In addition to this plans were made for the sponsorship of a writing contest in General Conference church schools next year.

Present for these sessions were Paul R. Shelly, Bluffton, Ohio; I. I. Friesen, Winnipeg, Manitoba; H. T. Klassen, Rosthern, Sask.; Willard Claassen, Maynard Shelly, and Abe Wiebe, Newton, Kansas. Other members of the committee are Jacob T. Friesen, Beatrice, Nebraska, and Mrs. E. J. Miller, Moundridge, Kansas.

Further testimonies of blessings received in personal Bible study or of God's evident working in other lives make the evening session informal drawing us closer one to the other as we unitedly draw near to God. It is late by the time we make up the rented "futons" (thickly padded mats the Japanese use for sleeping) and after another song or two each family retires to the room which has been made theirs for the night. Business is left for the next day. After this session "God bless you, we'll see you next month" comes from lips as one family after another rush off to the train.

Trends in the Church

To determine trends in the life of Mennonite congregations, a survey is currently under way as preparation for a study conference on the Believers' Church which will be held in Chicago, August 23-25.

Seeking information on practices of church organization, the ministry, the deaconship, interchurch co-operation, admitting members, and church discipline, the survey was mailed to the 285 congregations of the districts of the General Conference Mennonite Church. The survey was prepared by the planning committee for the Believers' Church Study Conference.

This study conference, which will be held at Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, August 23-25, was authorized by the executive committee of the General Conference in December, 1954. Responsibilities for planning this conference were delegated to P. K. Regier, executive secretary of the General Conference, and the executive secretaries of the Conference boards.

The aims of the study conference are to get basic direction for General Conference church life in the light of its God-given mission; to examine the concept of the believers' church in the light of Scripture; and to plan how to move ahead on these issues toward a more vital church life.

The results of the survey will be one part of the material studied at the conference. A larger portion of time will be spent on a study of the scriptural teachings relating to the believers' church.

Invited to the study conference are the officers of the seven district conferences. In addition a district may send one delegate for each 1,000 members in its district.

The survey included such questions as: "What offenses would your congregation consider grave enough to discipline the individual?" "Does your congregation require that a person baptized as an infant in another church be rebaptized upon joining your congregation?" "In what projects does your congregation co-operate with other Protestant churches?" "What are the duties performed by the deacon in your congregation?" "To what degree is the minister supported by your congregation?" "Who is eligible for election as chairman of the congregation—minister only—minister or laymen—laymen only?"

FERNHEIM 25TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION JULY 1

July 1 will be the "official day" of the two days of celebration and thanksgiving in Fernheim, Paraguay, commemorating the founding and naming of that Mennonite colony 25 years ago.

Appropriate worship and thanksgiving services will be held in the Mennonite Brethren Church which has the largest auditorium. Among those presenting messages will be Orie O. Miller, MCC executive-secretary of Akron, Pa., and Walter H. Dyck, of Whitewater, Kan., in South America for the General Conference Mennonite Church.

There will be a review of the history of Fernheim colony going back to Russia and the migration to Paraguay. At noon a fellowship lunch will be served in both Filadelfia churches.

A memorial marking the approximate site of the first camp and indicating its date is to be unveiled. There is to be a display of agricultural implements, household furniture and kitchen equipment as made and used by early Fernheim settlers. It is hoped those showing such articles would donate them to the colony for permanent display in a museum to be erected. There will also be a showing of modern implements and improved cattle and horses.

Officials of the Paraguayan government will attend the celebration. Two doctors from the Ministry of Public Health have indicated they will be present. President Stroessner has been invited, but has not yet responded. Should he attend, several cabinet members and other government officials will accompany him.

Several extra flights are planned by the government to take the guests to Filadelphia and return them to Asuncion, according to C. L. Graber, MCC South America director from Goshen, Ind. Without such co-operation from the government, it would be impossible for the many guests to attend the celebrations. Many Mennonites from Friesland, Volendam, and Asuncion have made reservations to gather at Filadelfia for the two days of celebration and thanksgiving.

CANNED BEEF BENEFITS KOREAN HOSPITAL PATIENTS

Harry Harms, PAX man from Sardis, B.C., reports that canned meat prepared by American Mennonites plays a vital part in the diet of patients in Korean hospitals to which MCC makes food supplies available. Brother Harms covers the distribution of relief supplies to hospitals, institutions, milk kitchens, and kindergartens in Taegu city. Altogether 78 institutions are covered by MCC material aid distributions in the province. "Of the seven hospitals included on a regular twice-monthly distribution," Brother Harms writes, "I found approximately 570 have TB. It's surprising how meager some hospital menus appear, especially during the present so-called "hungry season" just before barley harvest. What a privilege it is for Christians in America, who can afford to can meat, to give it to these protein-deficient patients through the MCC canning program. And what a help and blessing it is to the recipients."

Harley King of Filer, Idaho, will be guest speaker. It is also expected that either J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon or G. G. Epp of Rosthern will attend as representative of the Board of Home Missions.

Members of the groups have been very busy in recent weeks in an effort to bring the church building as near to completion as possible before the event. Week nights as well as Saturdays have been utilized by working-bees and individuals to sand and varnish floors and benches, paint walls, etc., so that at this point little remains apart from finishing work in the basement (including decorating of the Sunday school rooms) and exterior finish around the main entrance.

Our church was host to the Eighth Street and Middlebury Mennonite Churches on Sunday evening, June 12, for a hymn-sing. All appreciated and enjoyed this opportunity to fellowship together in praise to God in song. Several special numbers, vocal and instrumental, were also on the program. James Stemen, of the Eighth Street Church, led the singing of the hymns. Recent births to report from our church are: Gary Lee, to Mr. and Mrs. Olan Penland, April 18, and Peter Nathan, to Pastor and Mrs. Daniel Graber, May 11. At the last meeting of the Women's Missionary Society, June 23, the women packed the Christmas bundles prepared by members for shipment to the Mennonite Central Committee center. Clothing for relief was also packed at this time. A dedication service for the Christmas bundles was held Sunday morning, June 19.—Corr.

WHAT IS SUNDAY SCHOOL?

Ralph N. Mould, program chairman for the 23rd International Sunday School Convention which will be held in Cleveland, July 27-31, defined the work of the Sunday school in a recent speech. He said:

"Christianity is always just one generation away from extinction—always just one jump from the grace. Why? Because nobody, no not one, can inherit biologically one whit of Christian faith . . . . There is no built-in guarantee in any life that it will grow up as Christian.

"Such facts give the deeper urgency to the statistics of 40,000,000 boys and girls born this decade in the United States alone. Each is an alien, an invader on these shores who doesn't know our Christian language, most cherished thoughts and ways until they are specifically taught, and so learned. That is why the Sunday school is not just to 'manicure the minor virtues of young children.' It is the Church teaching her profoundest truths (in ways appropriate to the individual's age) to every child—and it won't get far with any until the adults in the child's home are also helped to "get on the growing road" as Christians."

THE STATE VERSUS CONSCIENCE

The state may lend its blessing
Our leadership its praise,
To those who kill in time of war
When killing is the craze.
But a love inspired conscience,
Still pleads both true and long
And with genuine compassion
Still whispers, "It is wrong."

Take Time to Live

Take time to live! Put first things first and leave lesser things undone. Budget your time and constantly examine your use of it. An emphatic No is essential to a resolute Yes in using time. What you leave undone determines what you can accomplish. Remember that while man requires bread for survival, he does not live by bread alone, but by the things of the spirit.

Do not exhaust yourself in surviving, take time to live. It does not profit a man to gain wealth and fame and then find himself a physical wreck, a mental hulk, a spiritual derelict. Work with moderation.

Choose recreation which really re-creates. Many forms of entertainment and amusement are benumbing. Take plenty of nourishment from Mother Nature. Expose your soul to the glories of night, dawn, sunset. Go often to beautiful and hallowed places. Listen with rapture to exalted music. Let imagination take flight with the poets. Discipline your mind by absorbing the wisdom of great books. Keep saturated with the stories of noble lives. Know your Bible, especially the teachings of Jesus.

Be at home in the invisible world of the spirit. Learn to see the unseen and hear the inaudible. Be alert to the presence of the living Christ. Watch God at work in nature, in creatures, in persons. Recognize every individual as a sacred shrine of the Eternal. See to it that your friendships are kept in good repair. Participate in the fellowship of an intimate group. Take the church seriously and give yourself to it. Absorb its beauty and harmony, its truth and holiness. Spend much time in silent solitude, thinking and praying. In fervent intercession, hold up individuals before God.

Do not exhaust yourself in fruitless activities. Take plenty of time to live!

Joins Office Staff

Miss Tina Block of Steinbach, Manitoba, Canada, has joined the office staff at the General Conference central offices, Newton, Kansas, as a secretary for the Board of Missions office.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius H. Block, Tina is a member of the Steinbach Mennonite Church. One of her brothers, William Block, will also be coming to Newton in the fall as a Bethel College student.

Before coming to the central offices on April 15, Miss Block was employed by the Canadian Federal Government, Department of Transport in Winnipeg, for one and one-half years.

According to Tina, "My reasons for coming to the central offices are twofold: to do Christian service for others, and to become better acquainted with the General Conference."

BLESSED BE FRIENDS

Blessed is the man who has friends; they shall be a strong tower of help in the time of deepest need. They share the sorrows as well as the joys; the darkness as well as the light. Their kindly words are balm to the wounded; like rays of light piercing the darkness. Their silent handclasps speak of the depth of their love; their quiet presence is a strength to the soul. Their letters, even though brief, speak volumes. Thank God for friends!

That man is poor indeed who neglects the cultivation of friendships. He may have abundant riches, achieve material success, yet if he lacks spiritual friends his life is cold and empty. He may be so busy in the accumulation of things that he neglects the communion of saints. Yet all the wealth he may achieve cannot speak comfort to the burdened heart.

Let us give more thought to the cultivation of Christian friendships. To keep friendships bright and in good repair takes time and effort and much unselfishness; but true friendship abides, for it springs out of Christian love. Jesus said to His disciples, "henceforth I call you friends." It was the high title He gave His followers. When one can honestly say, "Jesus and I are friends," then he can prove himself a real friend to those he has learned to know and to love. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly."

Thank God for friends. They are rare gifts He bestows upon His followers. In their presence we are able to be our best selves. In the sacred bond of Christian friendship we are made strong.

OUR SUMMER RETREATS

One of the finest contributions our churches can make to the children and youth is to provide for them some wholesome summer camping experience in a retreat program. The activities of a week's retreat have possibilities for spiritual growth not fully realized. The tone and atmosphere of the retreats must ever be kept on a high spiritual level so that retreaters are brought face to face with the claims of God upon their lives.

In the years to come, no doubt many Christian leaders and workers will date their decision for consecrated Christian living to some retreat experience at a summer camp. Here in moments of high inspiration, great commitments are made. These experiences can be real turning points in the lives of our children and youth.

Those responsible for our retreats should ever plan the best possible for the retreaters. The best leaders available should be secured; the best possible programs and speakers. Churches should fully cooperate so that no child or youth need be deprived of this opportunity. Parents should be willing to sacrifice what need be to give their children this opportunity.

In our various church and district camps, the retreats are now running on a full program. They should be made a matter of constant prayer and of special remembrance on Sundays so that God would reach out in unforgettable ways and touch the lives of all attending.

HOW LONG SHOULD A MINISTER STAY?

Beginning with the next issue we hope to present the two sides of this question; one article dealing with the advantages of the long-term pastorate and the other pointing out some advantages of the short-term stay. It will be seen that there are advantages either way. Both sides of the question will be presented in the hope that each minister may decide before God how the best work can be done for the Church.

There are numerous factors that enter into a proper solution of this question and no hard and fast rule can be given. The matter of the temperament and disposition of the minister enters in. Some men may do their best work in shorter terms and others in longer stays. Perhaps this reflects somewhat of the restlessness of our age.

No minister should decide to leave his charge for purely selfish reasons. There should always be the conviction that God is leading for His own good purpose. When one has put his roots deeply into a church community it is no small matter to pull up those roots and endeavor to transplant them elsewhere. On the other hand it is futile to stay on stubbornly when it becomes clear that a change would be a distinct advantage, both for the pastor and the church.

Watch for the coming articles, and perhaps both church and pastor can be helped by a careful study of this problem.

THE BELIEVERS' CHURCH

Attention has been called to the important study conference on the Believers' Church to be held in Chicago, August 23-25. A series of articles will appear in The Mennonite dealing more specifically with the purpose and hopes of this conference. An introductory article is found in this issue. A second article is to deal with the concept of the Believers' Church, another on the perplexing problem of church discipline, and still another on the unique problems of the General Conference with respect to the doctrine of the Believers' Church. We trust readers will follow this series of articles with real interest, and that the coming conference may be a true blessing.

Such a conference should throw light on the real concept of the church and how our Conference might move ahead toward a more vital and spiritual church life and program. Insights gained at this conference should then be shared with groups of a more local nature that all our churches might benefit from the efforts put forth.

The Believers' Church Study Conference

ELMER EDIGER*

What Is a Study Conference?

In recent years the General Conference has discovered a helpful technique in the "study conference." Careful presentations are prepared by selected individuals on different aspects of one carefully outlined problem. The full light of Scripture and past experience is sought. In small groups these answers are prayerfully discussed.

This "study conference" method has proved particularly valuable in that it enables the church to face some of its problems in a calm, deliberate, and soul-searching manner. The Eden and Winnipeg Peace Study Conferences, the Seminary Conference on the Ministry have been examples of this approach to problems in the General Conference. The Old Mennonites in a similar way have studied prophecy, evangelism, and most recently, race relations.

The Basic Question

This summer on August 23, 24, and 25, eighty to a hundred General Conference representatives from the United States and Canada will gather in Chicago at Mennonite Biblical Seminary for a discussion of the "Believers' Church" concept. For generations we have been speaking of ourselves as a "believers' church." We have professed belief in adult baptism on confession of faith, in a brotherhood of true believers, and in a discipline which helps to build a church of true disciples. The basic question of the study conference is whether the "believers' church" is our actual goal and intention at the present and for the future. We want to look at ourselves in an honest manner, admit our weaknesses and recognize our difficulties. We want to go to the Scriptures to learn what the Christian Church should be. In how far did the Anabaptists have the right goal and realize the biblical church? How do we evaluate the General Conference beginning and development in the light of the above? If we become confirmed in our vision of the believers' church and face squarely our present situation then we have a helpful framework to work on our problems.

Admitting Members

If we want to be a believers' church we must carefully examine our standards and practices in admitting members. To what extent shall we rely on catechetical instruction to develop members who are true disciples? To what extent shall we focus on a conscious experience of salvation? Are we admitting "disciples," "true believers," or just about anyone of the right age or anyone who uses the right words?

Discipline

Can we be a true Christian church without discipline? What has happened to our practice of discipline during the last twenty-five years? In reacting against the older methods of discipline have we actually substituted a higher, more loving, more redemptive discipline or have we simply lowered our standards? This conference cannot wrestle with all specific questions. It is important, however, that we endeavor to become clear on our general direction with regard to discipline.

Changing Ministry

Do our congregations have a vital, stable church life? In years past there was a strong and almost complete reliance upon the long term minister for the spiritual health and direction of the congregation. Today who really leads the congregation when there is no minister? To what extent have we turned over the "leading" and the "responsibility" to the changing ministers? As we have accepted a changing ministry have we made sufficient provision in our church organization for the spiritual well-being of the congregation? Should the deaconship include this? Do church councils assume this? Have such doctrines as nonresistance, for example, been neglected or lost in this shuffle and diffusion of spiritual leadership?

Our Canadian congregations are rightly concerned with changes confronting them as they move toward more of an educated ministry. Must it become a single rather than plural ministry? Must they be paid? Must it be changing? Changes in method may be desirable to communicate with the people in our changing times. The concern is how we can make desirable changes in method without changing our direction inasmuch as it is biblical.

Other questions

If we continue a strong emphasis upon congregationalism can we continue to find more ways of helping each other to strengthen the inner life of the congregation? Can we find more ways of co-ordinating the various aspects of our Conference, district and congregational work? What form of church government and congregational-conference relationship are we encouraging on our mission fields? As we find more opportunities to co-operate with other Mennonite and non-Mennonite groups what principles should guide us? When should we be willing to lose our identity in working with other groups? Such problems will be considered in the light of biblical principles, our concept of church and our church organization.

Who attends?

It has been suggested that all ministers, deacons of the United States and Canada might well attend such a study conference. Because this would become not only expensive but also too large a group for maximum effectiveness the following arrangement has been planned:

1. Delegates to the August conference will include the General Conference and district officers plus

Which Way Do You Like It?

W. F. UNRUH*

Do you like it when someone comes to your church to tell you how to do things? Do you like it when he tells you how to teach, or how to keep records, or how to witness? Most of us prefer to work out the solutions to our problems ourselves. To be sure, we welcome suggestions, but we feel that an "outsider" cannot really enter into our problems as we see them. For instance, many of our church libraries have excellent books on visitation evangelism and personal evangelism, yet how little is actually being done as a result of what is outlined in these books.

They say that G. Campbell Morgan once said, "If you have a little book that tells how to lead persons to Christ, go home and burn it." The point he tried to make, evidently, was that there is no stereotyped way of leading people to Christ. We must work at it in our own best way, with heartfelt concern and love, according to our own abilities and according to the needs of those whom we want to touch for Christ. But it is important that we work at finding our own best way. Not much will be done unless we meet together to pray about it and to discuss ways to meet our responsibilities and opportunities in the community.

The Sunday school superintendent of one of our churches recently invited all his Sunday school officers, teachers, and class presidents to a Sunday evening potluck supper. The members of the local church evangelism committee were also invited. After the meal, while they sat around the tables, these responsible people faced the question of whether their Sunday school was actually reaching all the people of their community.

They realized that there were some people who needed to be brought into the Sunday school and discussed ways of doing this. They realized that this would involve long range planning. It would be necessary to discover who the people are that need to be brought into the Sunday school. They would need to find effective ways of bringing them in. They would need to make their teaching so vital that people would really find the Sunday school a place of happy Christian fellowship in which people make all their decisions in the Christian life true to Christ. They saw that one of the first things that would need to be done was to investigate how many people in the community who should be in their Sunday school were not enrolled in the classes and were not attending.

They met again later and together went through the family records of the church membership list to check whether there were any people listed in the family records whose names were not on the Sunday school class rolls and were not actually attending. They were a bit surprised to find how many people in the church community were not in Sunday school. They also listed the names of people who had moved into the community and who had not been brought into the Sunday school as yet.

They realized full well that to discover the people who should be invited to Sunday school and to invite them is only the first step in the task. The most important work would need to be done in the classes where Christian truth must be taught in a way that will help folk to make their decisions for Christ. The atmosphere in the class will need to be such that people will feel that the group as a whole is openly true and loyal to Christ. There was a realization that they were just at the beginning of a concerted venture to make their Sunday school contribute vitally toward winning people to Christ and that they would need further meetings to work at this task together. The feeling prevailed among these church workers that they were working out their own problems in a fresh, new and workable way. The meeting carried the spirit of a fellowship in the gospel. Their concern grew as they worked together. This work drew them closer together, and they liked this. They felt that this procedure promised to be their own best way of working for the cause. Has your church found a way which you believe is your own best way of winning people to Christ?

2. The various Mennonite groups, the Brethren in Christ, and the Church of the Brethren are each invited to send a visiting representative.

4. A district followup conference is being urged for each district to be arranged through the district officers. Each congregation should be represented at such district study conferences.

The Northern District Conference

D. G. REGIER*

The sixty-second session of the Northern District of the General Conference Mennonite Church was held June 10-14 at the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Neb. On Friday evening, June 10, President L. R. Amstutz officially opened the conference and then Howard H. Charles, the special speaker, brought the first of a series of four messages. Brother Charles, associate professor of New Testament at Goshen Biblical Seminary, Goshen, Indiana, had chosen to speak on the theme, "Life in His Name," using the Gospel of John as the basis of his meditation.

The business sessions were held Saturday morning and afternoon and Monday forenoon. Those chosen as members of the executive committee for the coming year were: Arnold Nickel, Henderson, Neb., president; Edward Duerksen, Butterfield, Minn., vice-president; H. M. Harder, Butterfield, Minn., secretary; Adolph Preheim, Hurley, S. D., treasurer.

The service on Sunday morning was observed as a special missionary service, with Missionary J. R Duerksen, of India, bringing the message. Andrew Shelly, recently returned from a world missionary tour, also spoke Sunday morning and at various times during the conference, bringing the challenge for each individual believer to assume responsibility to the Lord's commission that the gospel be given to the world.

On Monday afternoon, the laymen's organization and the Ladies' Mission Society had their respective business sessions, and on Tuesday, the young people's organization had charge of the services. Of special interest and planning for the young people this year, was the organization of committees to carry on the work of the camp grounds which were purchased during the past conference year at Swan Lake, in South Dakota.

The delegates and visitors appreciated the kind hospitality extended to them by people of the Bethesda Church. We trust our fellowship together has exalted the Lord and strengthened our desire to serve Him to the best of our ability.

MISSIONARY CANDIDATES ORDAINED AND COMMISSIONED

Dr. and Mrs. John Zook were ordained as missionaries in the Alberta Community Mennonite Church, Portland, Oregon, on May 29, and received their commissioning during the Pacific District Conference session at Monroe, Washington, Sunday afternoon, June 5.

The Ordination Service

The service was opened by the singing of two congregational hymns. Paul Roth read from Acts 1:1-9 and Herbert King lead in prayer. Miss Betty Unruh sang a solo, "I Trust in God."

S. F. Pannabecker brought a fitting message from the Scriptures using as his text, "Ye shall be witnesses," Acts 1:8. The main points of the message were: 1. All who are "followers" have this message, "Ye shall be witnesses." 2. Witnesses have a communication problem. Words do not always mean what we think they mean. 3. To be a witness one must identify himself or herself with the people to whom he or she witnesses. A friendly handshake, a warm smile, a pleasing personality—these reveal God better than words.

Following the message, Al Witt, a member of the Christian Medical Society of which Dr. Zook is also a member, sang a solo entitled, "When Jesus Comes."

The ordination ceremony was in charge of Rev. Pannabecker. A number of the Oregon pastors assisted in the laying on of hands. Dr. and Mrs. Zook gave brief testimonies after which J. M. Franz offered a prayer of dedication and consecration.

At the close of the service there was a time of fellowship and refreshment in the church basement.

Flashes of Thought

Let Us Join Hands

Walter Gering

What a book could be written by almost any pastor on the subject of Embarrassing Moments in terms of wedding ceremonies. There is no use in depending upon the best man to take care of the details. He often is the most nervous of the entire group. There are the little flower girls; how sweet they look as they march down the aisles dressed in their beautiful little dresses. Yet how often they become the center of attraction; either because of their innocent beauty or their evident restlessness. They are the "unpredictable factor" in any wedding.

Then there is the matter of rings. How well I remember the ceremony some years ago in which the best man produced the ring box at the right moment only to discover that he could not open it. Finally in desperation he passed it on to others, including the pastor. It was no use; it would not yield. The ceremony must proceed without the rings.

But on this occasion it had to do with the joining of hands. There comes the moment when the pastor declares: "Will you join your right hands." How often it had happened before; so it was now—it was the left hand which reached out to join the right. It was a mistake. But why make an embarrassing moment out of it? The ceremony proceeded and the blessing was pronounced.

You see—the important thing was not the use of the right or left hand. The important thing was that there in the presence of God and witnesses of their many friends these two young people had joined hands and hearts in all sincerity. Together they were to go out into life as one. This was the important thing. It was the spirit, not the mere joining of hands.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" Amos 3:3. These are the words of the prophet which speak a significant truth. God grant that with the joining of hands there may also be a union of heart and mind in one beautiful unity.

It was a part of the ritual of the Sioux Indians that when a brave was to leave for a strange territory, he would sit with his tribal chieftains around the campfire. Just as the blaze turned into ashes he would stand up and pray: "Great Spirit, help me never to judge another until I have walked two weeks in his moccasins."

How wise and understanding that prayer was! When we feel inclined to criticize another harshly—a minister for his sermon or a neighbor for her housekeeping—let us pray silently for that person instead. Not all moccasins are the same, you know.

Our Voyage to India

MELVA R. LEHMAN

Pier 32, Brooklyn, New York, the freighter "Silvermoon" was the scene of action. Men were scurrying here and there, guiding derricks, hoisting freight, closing hatches, tying cables and ropes, attending to the hundred other details that go in preparation for embarkation.

Anne Penner and I were returning to India for the second term. All formalities of meeting the ship's officers with proper papers and bills of lading were over and we were shown our tidy, roomy cabin which was to be our abode for the next four weeks. The clatter of bottles, boisterous laughter and merrymaking next door gave us a clue that our neighbors were not fellow missionaries. Upon returning to the deck, we did however, find our first-term missionaries aboard with a party of some thirty relatives and friends gathered for a short farewell service. The warm Christian fellowship which we experienced after joining the group is something impossible to put into words. Mr. Watson, a former missionary to Korea, who had spoken at Jack Wyrtzen's "Youth for Christ" program which Anne and I attended while in New York, was there to see their missionary, Lavon Ethridge, aboard. Mr. and Mrs. Don Dehart and Mary Nelsen with the TEAM group were leaving for Pakistan. Anne and I concluded that it is easier to say farewells at home than aboard a ship.

In spite of ten days of stormy sailing we missionaries decided to have an hour of Bible study from ten to eleven each morning. None of us were especially prepared to teach fellow-missionaries, but we decided to meet and share our observations as we conversed, exchanged ideas, and prayed through the Book of Acts together. At the end of our study we were sorry that we had failed to record all the unanswered questions which came to our minds as we shared thoughts.

What a tremendous difference there must have been in the ships of Paul's day and ours. According to my diary I read, "The Captain took us to the control room. The ship is set at 89 degrees due east. The automatic pilot guides the ship. According to radar we can see it raining twenty miles from here. By radar we also see the shore of an island." Can you imagine how different it would have been when the Apostle Paul was sailing on the same Mediterranian if he would have had a modern freighter? We re-read the events of the storm. "Navigation being now unsafe . . . loss not only of cargo and the ship but our lives . . . a furious north wind burst upon us . . . we gave up and let her drive . . . used wrappings to undergird the ship. . . ." Our conversations with the Captain and the reading of the navigator's terms provided some points of contact and some lessons were learned which would otherwise have been missed.

"Today we saw the Pantelleria Islands. Saw Malta this evening," read my diary of Feb. 23rd. As we followed Paul's missionary journey we wondered how he could have missed Alexandria. Yet we find no record of him having been in this large city where we saw excavation of a large library. We walked into some of the catacombs in which the guide told us about the thousands of rolls which used to be in the niches of the walls. We walked through the streets of Alexandria and saw shops filled with works of art done in ivory, beautiful hand-embroidered pieces, in fact, everything which the Orient can produce to attract the tourist. While at the Post Office we met a couple from the state of California who were in the banking business and making a world tour. They were able to converse about almost every place or subject; however, when we talked about the joy of witnessing, Mr. ——— walked away at once as though he had been sent on an errand.

The following day two questions came to our attention in our Bible study. "Do you suppose the Apostle Paul would have spent his day in port seeing the curios of the city or visiting Farouk's garden?" (2) "How can we witness on the streets or in the shops when the people can't understand a word we say? Would this be the opportune time to witness?"

Observations made on our final review day are rather evident to anyone who studies the Book of Acts. We were impressed with the number of times the phrases, "with one accord," "with one mind" appear. What if our present day church members and leaders, whether in India or elsewhere were of one mind? It was also evident that the gospel spread in those days because the Christians were missionaries wherever they went. Can we realize the force of the gospel if that would be the case today?

Another observation made was that unlearned and ignorant men, such as Peter and John caused people to marvel, for the observer took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. We took knowledge of the fact that our present day missionaries are usually well equipped in educational requirements and experienced upon entering the mission field. We looked around at our cameras. Some had radios and recorders. Someone said, "Our stove is in box No. 3 and our frig. in box No. 10." One heard remarks like, "The typical American tourist," "He's a clever fellow," "He's well equipped" concerning certain missionaries. The question came to our attention, "Are we, who herald the gospel of Jesus Christ, known as men of power? Ones filled with the Holy Spirit? One who has been with Jesus in such a way that people take knowledge of it?

Our last joint study day highlighted observations and lessons from chapter 29 of the Acts of the

A Statement of Concern

ROBERT KREIDER

A statement of concern to the Committee on Armed Services of the United States Senate on H.R. 3005 and H.R. 6057 amending the Universal Military Service and Training Act. Presented to this committee at the public hearing, June 9, 1955, at Washington, D.C., on behalf of the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pa.

I am Robert Kreider, Dean of Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio, and a member of the Mennonite Central Committee, a relief and service agency representing the Mennonite and affiliated churches of the United States who number over 140,000 baptized members. I speak in behalf of these churches, who through four centuries have declined to participate in military service and who in discipleship to Christ have labored for the peaceful resolvement of personal and inter-group conflicts. Since 1683, when the first Mennonites settled in Pennsylvania, our people have sought and found in America opportunity to serve God and man free of the inhibiting chains of conscription, militarism, and political absolutism.

I appear before you to record our opposition to the extension of the draft act. We would not minimize the dangers our nation faces in a tense world community. We are sensitive to the perplexing problems which confront you who share responsibility for the safety and security of our land. Out of our varied experiences as a people we are led to question, however, whether mass conscript forces give us that security for which we long. The peril of conscription in this age of atomic warfare may be that it gives a fictitious sense of national security. We believe that conscription itself contributes to the tensions which disrupt the peace of the world.

In our time universal military conscription appears to have become an integral feature in every major military program and essential to the successful prosecution of any broad military operation. Military conscription diverts men from peaceful and productive callings—from raising crops, manufacturing clothing, building houses, teaching children, healing the sick . . . . To us it seems a tragedy that these years of creative energy for millions of young men in this and other lands are dissipated in the anti-social arts of war.

At this moment in world history when there is promise of a relaxation of international fears and animosities, it would seem that our nation is called to assume a decisive role in moral leadership. We have witnessed with satisfaction the efforts of the President and the Congress to halt the drift toward war and to seek reconciliation between the world's antagonists. We have been grateful for the President's farsighted proposals for the international control and inspection of nuclear production and the sharing of atomic energy among nations for peacetime purposes. As a sequel to this type of testimony, we urge that before this draft be extended for another four year period this Congress together with the President appeal to the nations to renounce the method of military conscription—knowing that without mass conscript armies major wars would not likely be fought and knowing that with the abandonment of conscription millions of young men here and abroad would find their way into more creative and productive pursuits. We place upon your hearts the concern that in this moment of decision concerning the extension of the draft our nation seize the opportunity for a bold, clear call to peace to all nations caught in this sterile dialogue of answering military might with military might, conscription with conscription.

We wish to conclude our statement by expressing our gratitude that the principle of Christian conscience is respected in this legislation. We are confident that in the future in all legislative enactments the Congress will continue in this great tradition of recognizing the convictions of those, who because of the dictates of their conscience, are of the minority.

Apostles. You may not have read this chapter for it is not found recorded in our Testaments, but all who follow our Lord are nevertheless writing this chapter.

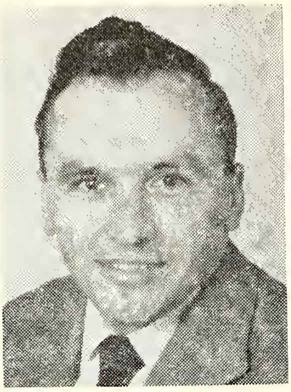
How am I writing? This question has come to my mind in the past month again and again. To wait a week in harbor for twenty-two ships to dock ahead of you: to settle twenty-five miles from a railroad station, to be the only two non-nationals getting acquainted with new faces, new names, where one used a wood stove, oil lamps, and no refrigeration, having just come from a zipper, esculator, automatic, T.V. America has been a real experience in adjustment and rethinking of the lessons gleaned from the study aboard "Silvermoon."

The Lord has proven faithful in all His promises. His grace has been sufficient in every need. All that we have needed His hand has provided. Today my heart joins anew in the song, "The Call of Jesus" by Oswald J. Smith sung so beautifully by our Men's Chorus in my home church in Berne, Indiana. The chorus reads,

"Oh, the joy of serving Jesus
Telling out the wondrous news,
Making known the One who came from heav'n above.
This our mission and our message
God's ambassadors are we,
Sent to herald forth the tidings of His love."

One thing I know: the only ones among you who will be really happy are those who will have sought and found how to serve. —Albert Schweitzer

Conference Youth Worker



William Gering came to the General Conference central offices, Newton, Kansas, June 1, to begin his full time service as youth worker.

Coming from Marion, South Dakota, Bill is a Bethel College and Mennonite Biblical Seminary graduate. While attending the seminary, he was employed by the General Conference Young People's Union as a part time youth worker for one and one-half years.

The General Conference YPU is related to the General Conference through the Board of Education and Publication which has long been interested in youth work of this type. Erland Waltner, a board member, is the YPU youth advisor; and the Board also subsidizes Bill's employment.

Bill is presently planning an extensive visitation program to the Canadian district, Washington, and Oregon.

From July 3 to 6 he will be attending the Canadian Mennonite Conference at which he is scheduled to speak at a youth meeting on July 5. Leaving Alberta he will go to the Rosthern youth retreat, July 11-13; the Swift Current youth retreat, July 13-17; and the Alberta retreat at Didsbury, July 28-31.

Before going to the Washington retreat during the latter part of August, Bill will visit churches in Washington and Oregon.

During his year's employment as youth worker, Bill plans to spend about a month visiting churches in each of the districts.

Construct Bible Institute Building

Tshikapa, Congo Belge—On May 15, ground was broken and appropriate services conducted officially beginning construction of a new brick building for the Institut Biblique, of the Congo Inland Mission. The first class will soon graduate from the Institute which has been conducted the past three years in temporary buildings.

The building which will house classrooms, library, and office was made possible by a consecrated gift of Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Peters and daughter of the E.M.B. church of Langham, Saskatchewan, Canada. The Institute is the advanced training school of the Congo Inland Mission for pastors, evangelists and church leaders. Missionaries on the faculty are A. D. Film Review

THE WAY OF PEACE, 16 mm., sound, color, 18 minutes, rental $8.00, Visual Education Service, 22 South State Street, Elgin, Illinois.

With the help of Lew Ayres as commentator this film presents the story of the world from creation to the possibility of its complete destruction by the atomic bomb. It makes use of miniature figures and models. Man has built a wall of separation between God and himself. In the shade of this wall without the light of God man becomes fearful and begins to suspect his fellow men. From this develops conflict, war. Christ is pictured as bringing the way of peace but His teachings have been rejected and mankind has continued in hatred and wars until the atomic bomb now presents the possibility of complete destruction. Useful for discussion of the Christian attitude toward atomic and other war. Because of the gruesome scenes of atomic war it should not be used with children. Some of the scenes seem rather artificial. The film is more successful in portraying the horror of atomic war than in depicting the "Way of Peace." EME

Prayer for a Troubled Pharisee

I said to Christ:

I am a Christian and a good one, too.
I read my Bible and believe. It's true
That tithing is a burden, but I try—
I know I'll be rewarded when I die.
I go to church on Sunday, sometimes twice,
Obey all the commandments, shun all vice.

But I am troubled, overwhelmed by doubt.
How have I missed it? What have I left out?

And Jesus might have said:

In such a frigid life, I cannot live.
Why try to buy what I would gladly give?
You offer tithes when love is what I ask;
You give your time, but do a joyless task.
Can you be moved by loneliness and need?
Can you love those who say a different creed
Or preach an ism based on hate and fear?
Do you make your voice loud for all to hear
To make injustice right?
I am the light.
My lamp burns clear and strong to show the way.
You've seen my plan.
But you must feel its warmth: the love of God,
The love of man.

Program Helps for July

Consider Christian Writing

Theme: The Ministry of the Printed Page

Purpose: To encourage young people to give serious thought to Christian Writing. To stimulate the desire for developing the writing talent.

Scripture: Psalm 45:1; 1 John 2:1, 12-14; Hab. 2:2, 3

I. Is There a Need for Christian Writing?

People will read something, particularly children and young people. The comic books are having a tremendous influence on children. Can we match this with good Christian reading that will leave lasting impressions for the right? Much religious writing often lacks human interest, and is unnecessarily dull because we have not the trained and skilled writers to make it attractive. But everywhere there is renewed interest in religious writing. The popular magazines give more attention to religious themes. Religious books are among the best sellers. Since the door is wide open, we need more Christian writers who feel the call and are willing to pay the price. The power of the printed page must be a constant challenge. "The spoken word is carved in air; the written word is cut in granite."

II. How Can the Printed Page Minister to People?

1. It can bring INFORMATION; presenting the world conditions and needs; the concerns and needs of the church, and ways of meeting those needs.

2. It should kindle INSPIRATION AND VISIONS of duty; it should challenge and stir up the latent possibilities. It should create a divine discontent with what we are and set a goal for higher and better things.

3. Christian writing should give GUIDANCE in finding the will of God. God can speak through the printed page as well as through a speaker. It should strive for decisions in making the right choices. It should make us feel the needs and possibilities, as well as the obligations of Christian living.

4. Writing can be a ministry of COMFORT and consolation for sorrow and discouragement. Words fitted to the moods of people in their hour of deepest need can help them find their comfort in God. and be a source of help and courage.

5. There is much demand for good DEVOTIONAL MATERIAL, to help in our daily devotions and the family altar. While much is already published, we need material suited to our particular beliefs and needs.

III. How Can We Prepare for Christian Writing?

Some need to be specially trained and become writers as a major form of service. Others should learn what they can about the art of writing and contribute from their spare time. Still others can make occasional contributions as special subjects inspire them.

1. The basic rules and techniques of writing should be mastered and understood.
2. There must be strong conviction concerning the subject attempted, and an inner urge to express this conviction.
3. The writer must prepare himself so that he may be a clean vessel to carry the truths of God in a convincing manner. He must be in tune with God.
4. The writer should cultivate a thirst for the best reading, absorbing the finest that has been written and expressed.
5. Attend writers' conferences, especially our own, where much help can be gained from others and from practical writing experiences.

IV. Some Projects

1. Write a short article, story or poem; you may discover where your best writing abilities lie.
2. Make a study and display of the General Conference publications. You may be surprised at the size of the list.
3. Write to the Publication Office at 720 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, inquiring about their special work and needs in the writing field.
4. If possible, make a group trip through some printing establishment, perhaps your local paper, to learn all that is involved in printing.
5. Perhaps there is a member of the Board of Education and Publication, or one of the editors or associate editors, near enough that he may be invited as speaker to explain first hand needs and opportunities of Christian writing.

V. Source Material

Perhaps from the public library you can get the book, The Art of Readable Writing, by Rudolf Flesch published by Harper; a secular book that gives many stimulating points on general writing. A resource book for writers is Christian Journalism for Today, combined and edited by Benjamin P. Browne, published by the Judson Press. This is a timely and practical manual for both inexperienced and occasional writers.

Report of Northern District Young People's Meeting

Observing its 15th anniversary, the Youth Fellowship of the Northern District met at Henderson Nebraska, Tuesday, June 14, 1955, in connection with the sessions of Northern District Conference.

The special speaker for the morning and evening sessions was Jacob T. Friesen, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska. He pointed out that "as young people we are not the church of tomorrow, but a vital part of the church today. Together with adult members of the church and the help of God we are building the church of which Christ is Head."

Rev. Friesen further stated that "a balanced youth program should include emphasis on faith and life, fellowship, and service."

Palmer Graber, Marion, South Dakota, presided over the afternoon business session. Edna Thieszen, secretary-treasurer from Henderson, read the minutes, the recommendations, and the financial report.

Included in the business was the choosing of a project. It was voted to make continued payments on the recently purchased retreat grounds at Swan Lake, South Dakota, for the 1955-56 project.

Other recommendations urged the participation in Voluntary Service, work toward organizing a youth fellowship based on the three-area emphasis plan, keeping in touch with youth activities of the Conference through The Mennonite and the Northern Light and participation in practical projects such as writing to congressmen or producing peace plays.

A more enthusiastic response to our district retreat program was also urged. The Northern District young people's retreat was held immediately following the conference sessions at the new retreat grounds.

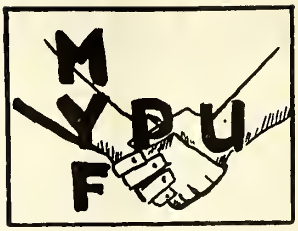
Replacing Marion Deckert and Harold Thieszen of Marion, South Dakota, on the retreat committee are Stanley Pankratz, Mt. Lake, Minnesota, freshman at Bethel College; and Shirley Schrag, Marion, S. Dakota, sophomore at Freeman Junior College.

Ardys Preheim, sophomore at Freeman Junior College, was elected to retreat promotion; and Walter Gering, pastor of Bethel Mennonite Church, Mt. Lake, Minnesota, continues his term as youth advisor.

In carrying out the emphases and recommendations of our youth fellowships let us keep in mind 1 Peter 2:5, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house . . . ."

D. Jane Epp

Ed. Note: Jane Epp is the new editor of Northern Light, the Northern District Youth Fellowship publication.



The Mennonite Youth Fellowship of the (Old) Mennonite Conference extended a cordial invitation to the Young People's Union for official representation at their Eighth Annual Meeting held in Goshen, Indiana, on June 10 and 11, 1955. It was my privilege to represent the YPU at this annual MYF meeting.

The theme of the conference was "CHRIST CALLS YOUTH." Each of the five sessions centered on the theme in terms of call, commitment, devotion, service, and loyalty. I became aware of how much the YPU and MYF have in common with their respective Christ-centered "A United Mennonite Youth in Christ" and "All of Life for Christ" mottos. Both groups use the "three-area emphasis" for a balanced youth fellowship program. Each group has specific projects which help unite the local fellowships for a common cause.

I feel we can learn much from each other as we seek to be drawn closer together in service for our Lord and Savior. They have a separate youth publication. Youth's Christian Companion, and each summer a Youth Team goes to local churches for a week at a time to help build and inspire local youth fellowships. We, too, need such a team but don't have one. On the other hand, we have a full time Youth Worker, a project which MYF desires but has not yet undertaken.

Willingness to learn from each other and to work together whenever possible strengthens us as we seek to grow in Christian Faith and make Christ real to a sin-sick world. Christ needs "all of our life" and a "united Mennonite youth" to meet the urgency of our time.

Kasahara

Kasahara was a Japanese student to whom the message of the Christmas story had become real and he had learned to love the One who came as a Savior for the whole world. As a student in the Bible school he worked hard to get the needed preparation that would make him a worthy messenger of the gospel of light.

Students were often amused at his picturesque English and his strange habits. But when they heard that he spent a whole night in prayer when he knew a Japanese boat was to dock in the harbor, in order that he might know the power of God as He witnessed to his people, they marvelled at his devotion.

One day the subject in the class of missions was Japan. The teacher presented the unvarnished truth about the sin and degradation in that island country. Kasahara was in the class.

In order to partially earn his way through school he swept offices at night. One of those offices was that of the teacher of missions. The next morning the teacher found a small piece of paper pushed under the glass on his desk with these penciled words, "Why you say such bad things about my country? Who told you such things?" The teacher of missions looked at the slip of paper and his eyes filled with tears as he realized the hurt that had been in Kasahara's heart. He called him and told him he had presented those "bad things" to help the students realize the great need of the gospel and that he had them from authentic sources.

Kasahara was only partly satisfied. But that night while pushing the broom he saw things in a better light. Again he pushed a penciled slip of paper under the glass. "It is good that you tell about my country. Maybe some people go to bring gospel there."

Some weeks later a large group of students went away from noisy city streets to have a picnic in the open country. They had a happy time and Kasahara was among the group. His jolly laugh rang out with the others. Just at dusk they climbed a huge dome-like rock from which they could see the great valley stretching below them. Lustily they sang as they watched the lights flash on in the great city at their feet and the smaller suburbs to right and left. Finally dark settled like black velvet and the lights shown like tiny twinkling jewels. There was a pause in the singing for testimony. Kasahara rose to his feet.

Pointing to the lights in the valley he called out, "So lies my country, Japan. Darkness, darkness, only here and there a little light. Will no one come to help bring the Light? My country so dark. My country needs the Light. Who will come to bring light?"

And there were those there that night who searched their hearts and asked, "Lord, is it in Japan you want me?"

Mrs. J. R. Duerksen

A cobbler, a smith, a farmer, each has the work and the office of his trade, and yet they are all alike consecrated priests and bishops, and everyone by means of his own work or office must benefit and serve every other, that in this way many kinds of work may be done for the bodily and spiritual welfare of the community, even as all members of the body serve one another. —Martin Luther

"Seeing the multitudes of unfortunate, desperate people has made an indelible impression upon me. A person is usually relatively unmoved when hearing of conditions in the world until he actually sees a boy dressed in rags and shabbily-clinging shoes desperately trying to sell pieces of gum to support himself or until he sees groups of dirty, barefooted, raggedly clothed children while he himself comfortably walks along with a nice overcoat and money in his pocket; when he sees hordes of refugees crowded together in camps of mud huts with practically nothing to live on and nothing for hope; when he sees an uncurbed disease of blindness enter into the lives of young and old. One has pity when he sees the tragedy of the people who have rejected Christ and have tried to substitute Mohammed or Moses. Pity rises as one sees the children who are born and raised in this environment with an almost extinct chance of becoming acquainted with the true loving Christ. One is reminded more sharply of the stewardship of his possessions when there is an open door to its being spent so someone may hear the gospel or so someone may be fed and clothed in some part of the world.

1,400 LINEN KITS FOR UDALL

More than 1,400 linen kits were prepared by Kansas Mennonites for tornado victims of Udall, Kan. In addition, quite a few blankets were contributed.

BUILDING MEN'S HALL AT AKRON

A two-story, frame building to provide living quarters for 14 single men workers is being constructed at MCC headquarters, Akron, Pa.

The building will include a full basement which can be used for orientation classes and which also can be arranged for sleeping quarters. It is to be completed this fall.

Construction is being done by Henry J. Goering of North Newton, Kan., who is assisted by Voluntary Service personnel. The Goerings have offered a year of work to the Church and are serving in this way at Akron. Mrs. Goering works at the Ephrata clothing center and performs other needed services at Akron headquarters.

VS PERSONNEL ARRIVE IN OKLAHOMA TORNADO AREA

Plans are materializing for Voluntary Service personnel to begin rebuilding fences and repairing farm buildings in the tornado-struck area around Cheyenne and Leedey in Western Oklahoma. The first volunteers were scheduled to arrive around July 6.

They will spend several days in orientation and organizations in Cheyenne before beginning work in an area hit by the same tornado that brought tragedy to Udall, Kan., and Blackwell, Okla. Cheyenne is an area office of the Red Cross which is providing maintenance, housing, tools, and materials for the project.

As of July 1 the following men had volunteered for this project under MCC Voluntary Service: John Fry of Manheim, Pa.; William Gingerich of Plain City, Ohio; Verne Goering of Moundridge, Kan.; Nelson Kreider of West Willow, Pa.; and Wilmer Wedel of Burns, Kan. Plans were for a similar group of volunteers supplied by the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee also to arrive in Cheyenne the second week in July.

Glenn Esh of the MCC Voluntary Service office, Akron, Pa., and Boyd Nelson of the Mennonite Relief and Service Committee Voluntary Service office, Elkhart, Ind., plan to spend a brief period with the men in getting the projects started.

It is hoped there will be two Voluntary Service teams of eight to ten men by July 15—one out of Cheyenne, the other, out of Leedy. Several men are still needed for this work which should indicate their availability immediately to their conference headquarters or MCC. This work is approved 1-W service. It will last for a minimum of two months.

About 100 farmsteads were badly damaged or destroyed by the tornado which cut a 77-mile-long swath in the area in which the VS teams will be working. Added to the plight of these farmers are crop failures during the past three years.

Recently, however, there have been good rains—the first heavy ones in more than three years—which make it imperative that farmers work in the fields to get their crops in. Since cotton is one of the important crops planted recently, there will continue to be much field work. Were it not for the urgency of the field work, the families would supply their own labor. The population is also so sparse it cannot depend on local volunteer help from the community.

The Red Cross is looking to the VS teams to do the rough construction so families and livestock can be under roof before winter. Finish work will be done by farmers during the winter months.

PAX MATRON SAILS FOR GERMANY

Susan Krahn of Winnipeg, Man., sailed from New York on July 1 for Germany where she will serve as matron to the PAX men working at Backnang. She replaces Susanne Willms of Coaldale, Alta., who is scheduled to arrive in New York late in July after approximately two and one-half years of service abroad.

HIGHEST CENSUS AT PRAIRIE VIEW

During June Prairie View Hospital at Newton, Kan., had the highest number of admissions in any one month since its opening. Twice during the month the patient census was 30.

Jottings

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kan.: Sunday, June 19, we had our church picnic at Camp Mennoscah. We first had our Sunday school and service and after that we had our basket dinner. Eating together seems to give us the spirit of closer fellowship. (Our parents used to do it always on Sundays when we had company even if they had only zweiback and coffee. They would enjoy visiting with each other without a special invitation.) In the afternoon games were played, old and young taking part. Everyone seemed to enjoy it. The scenery really was beautiful with the green trees and the river just before us. On Mother's Day four children were consecrated. May 29, ten young people were taken into the church by baptism and one by letter. May we be a blessing to them and they to us. June 5 we had communion which was very impressive. A collection was sent to Udall. The Bible school was well attended and closed with a fine program on the last evening. We have our Christmas bundles ready. They were dedicated in church Sunday morning, June 26.—Mrs. J. H. Epp, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kan.: Quite a number of the men of our church have been helping to clean up tornado-stricken Udall, under the auspices of the Mennonite Disaster Service. The Junior C. E. and the three sewing circles of our church have made up a total of 59 Christmas bundles this year. There was an enrollment of 97 children in our daily vacation Bible school, which held its closing program the evening of May 18. Lawrence Voth returned May 24, after having spent six months in Australia as an International Farm Youth Exchange delegate. Four members, added to our church by baptism on May 29, were Imogene Ediger, Evalena Thiessen, Betty Schmidt and Ardith Schmidt. Lu Verna Duerksen left June 12 for Gulfport, Miss., to enter the Voluntary Service unit there.—Mrs. Roland Schmidt, Corr.

—Herold Church, Bessie, Okla.: The wedding of Eddie Schmidt and Eldeen Sawatzky was held on March 31. On that day we had the severest dust storm of the season in this area. Since then, beginning May 8, we have received much greatly needed rain. Combines were busy when it was dry enough to cut. The following brought us programs: The C. E. of the Bergtal Church, March 27; the Bethel College Vocal Ensemble, April 8; a concert by Corn Bible Academy, April 6; O.B.A. gave a concert May 8. After the C. E. May 22, our relief committee showed 82 slides on Christmas bundles and a special offering was taken for this cause. June 12, forty-two bundles were brought and dedicated. April 24, one hundred and thirty-two pounds of garments for relief were brought. Two missionaries from Africa were with us; Rev. and Mrs. Ray G. de la Haye on April 3, and Florene Dirks on May 6. On May 29 in the evening, the Mission Society brought a program for the benefit of Miss Viola Reimer, who is serving under Child Evangel Fellowship as city director in Portsmouth, Va. In May the men laid tile on the basement floor. Brother and sister Penner are back now; Brother Penner's health is slowly improving.—Mrs. Margaret Horn, Corr.

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kan.: The D.V.B. school gave a closing program at the high school. Sisters' Mission Society met for their last meeting June 9. Started projects were finished. Forty-seven Christmas bundles and thirty linen kits for Udall were taken to the Relief Center. Our pastor has had a series of sermons; "Courageous Living Under Christ," "God Believes in You," and "Getting the Most Out of Life," were the concluding ones. The Youth Fellowship had a picnic at Harvey County Park. Officers installed for the coming year are: pres., Marilyn Goebel; vice-pres., Kay Wedel; sec., Janice Reusser; treas., Harry Voth. Sunday school picnic and program were held indoors because of cool damp weather. Our pastor and family are spending a week in Scottdale, Pa., where they are attending Editorial and Publication Committee meetings. Their vacation will be spent at Fairport, N. Y. We will have guest speakers for July.—Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kan.: The week of April 17-22 was a week of special meetings, when our church, in conjunction with Brudertal, First Mennonite, and Lehigh sponsored Russell Mast as our pastor. The following are the topics which he used: "The Fruits of Revival," "The Christian Faith and Communism," "The Mission of the Mennonites," "The Crossroads of History," "The Weapons of Our Warfare," "No Place to Hide." The Sunday of April 24, we had with us Miss Rebecca Nickel, who is serving among the migrants of Eloy, Ariz. On the same Sunday many of the men of our congregation attended the Mennonite Men's Retreat at Camp Mennoscah. On May 1 we had a brief service for the children in connection with the Christmas bundles. Seventy bundles were given. The Y.M.M. entertained their mothers as guests at their May meeting. A large group of men from our church gave their aid in clean-up work following the destruction of a nearby farm by a recent tornado. Sunday school class No. 4 has taken up a project of supplying good reading material for our young people and all who are interested. For our pulpit exchange Sunday, May 15, we had with us brother Elbert Koontz of the First Church of Hillsboro.—Mrs. Walter Bartel, Corr.

—Buhler Church, Buhler, Kan.: Our church, together with the Mennonite Brethren Church, sponsored two weeks of vacation Bible school. Seven young people were baptized and accepted into church membership on Sunday, May 29. A girls' choir has been organized for the summer months. The men of our church have participated in disaster relief work in Udall, Kan. Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Gaeddert celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on Friday, June 10. Sunday June 19, the new educational wing of our church was dedicated. E. J. Miller of Moundridge as speaker of the afternoon, spoke on "The Mission and Challenge of Christian Education." Our pastor, Irvin Richert, led the dedicatory service. A musical program was rendered in the evening. Seven neighboring churches participated in this program.—Corr.

—Willow Creek Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: Communion service was held in our congregation May 29. On June 5, Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Suckau were in our midst with Rev. Suckau bringing the morning message, as our pastor was attending the Pacific District Conference. Daily vacation Bible school was held from June 20 to July 1. An accident happened to Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Wiebe which very definitely proved the Lord's protection over them. While they were traveling a curving mountainous road they were hit head-on by an army truck. The engine of the Wiebe car was completely demolished. The ambulance took both Mr. and Mrs. Wiebe to the hospital. Both suffered fractured noses and bruises and Mr. Wiebe several fractured ribs. They were hospitalized several days. A little girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. D. Tompkins.—Mrs. Frank Hamm, Corr.

—Pulaski Church, Pulaski, Iowa: On Mother's Day we observed children's consecration with four children presented for consecration. Our pastor, Kenneth Shelly, spoke at the high school Baccalaureate Service on May 15. Young people from the church being graduated from high school are J. Augspurger, Fred Bachman, and Jim Augspurger. Our summer Bible school was held from May 23 to June 3 and had an enrollment of forty-five with an average attendance of forty-two, which was ten more than last year's school. The Bible school closing program was held on June 5, with a good turnout of parents and friends. Missionaries Vernon and Lilly Sprunger visited the community June 13-15 and were entertained at the fellowship supper in the church basement on June 14. Vernon Sprunger spoke at that time and Lilly Sprunger spoke to a meeting of the missionary societies on June 15. They will be sailing for the Congo this July. Our young people entertained the young people of the three other Iowa Mennonite churches at a swimming party on June 19. Refreshments and a devotional followed the afternoon of swimming. The young people are also planning an outdoor meeting June 30 at which time officers for the next year will be elected.—Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Wash.: Daniel J. Regier will become the pastor of our church beginning the first of July. Rev. and Mrs. Regier and their daughter have been serving the Swiss Mennonite Church near Alsen, N. D. Installation and welcome services are being planned for Sunday, July 3, with morning and afternoon services and a fellowship meal at noon. We ask the Lord's blessing upon the work of our church as the pastor and the people begin working together for Him. Many from our church were privileged to attend the Pacific District Conference at Monroe especially on Saturday and Sunday, June 4 and 5. Reports were given by the delegates at the Sunday evening service, June 12.—Mrs. Ralph Boese, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, Calif.: E. G. Kaufman was with us the week of May 1, bringing us nightly Bible lectures and pictures of Egypt and the 1954 World Council of Churches. A fellowship dinner was held May 29. The Canby union Bible school was held June 6 to 17. —Mrs. F. J. Kauffman, Corr.

Lamps do not talk, but they do shine. A lighthouse sounds no drum, it beats no gong; and yet far over the waters its friendly spark is seen by the mariner. So let your actions shine out your religion. Let the main sermon of your life be illustrated by your conduct.

Charles H. Spurgeon

From Bobby Wildgoose to Cleveland

Over thirty million attend Sunday school in the United States and Canada today and many more millions in other countries around the world, but it was not always so.

It required newspaper publicity in 1783 in Gloucester, England, for Robert Raikes, "proprietor of the only printing press in several counties," to make the Sunday school movement, then new, known and accepted. Three years earlier he had quietly founded a Sunday school to teach reading, writing, and good moral habits.

The reformation started by Robert Raikes inspired the first national Sunday School Convention in New York in 1832. Continuing the work to "Teach Christ Now," the 23rd International Sunday School Convention will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31, marking the 175th anniversary of the founding of the Sunday school movement.

Opposition to Raikes' Sunday school was fierce for many years and even in 1797 the Sunday school was attacked in the British press as "subversive of that order, that industry, that peace and tranquility which constitutes a happy society and that . . it ought to be exploded as the vain chimerical institution of a visionary projector."

As an editor, Robert Raikes' attention was first drawn to the deplorable conditions in prisons. From this he advanced to the study of the lower classes from which there was a continual procession "ripening for the gallows." Ignorance and neglect of childhood prevailed in England even in the late eighteenth century. Children worked long hours six days a week and were deprived of both religious and secular teaching. On Sunday they roamed through the countryside upsetting and damaging farm products and properties, and in the cities they ran riot in the streets.

In 1780 Raikes began an experiment which he pursued without publicity for three years to see whether salvation might be accomplished through the children. From his own pocket he paid a poor woman a shilling a day to teach the boys he gathered in "Sooty Alley." He and his young charges were dubbed "Bobby Wildgoose and his ragged regiment."

It was John Wesley in 1786, who promoted the idea of volunteer teachers, thus insuring the more rapid growth of Sunday schools. By this time the number of scholars in Sunday schools in England had risen to 250,000.

Development in the United States

The Sunday school movement had a hard struggle getting under way in America. In Charleston, South Carolina, in 1787, a Methodist preacher, George Doughaday, was drenched with water, pumped from a public cistern, "for the crime of conducting a Sunday school for the benefit of the African children of that vicinity."

In 1817 there were 100 Sunday schools in the whole country. Local Sunday School Societies or Unions were formed in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and by 1824 the American Sunday School Union.

By 1832, a common need arose around such matters as the duties of officers, Sunday school organization and management, and the best method of instruction. To meet these needs, 200 superintendents and teachers representing 14 states and four territories convened in New York City.

This was the First National Sunday School Convention. This convention recommended that the whole congregation, young and old, take part in Bible study.

In the early Sunday school opening exercises were the same as used for the ordinary church services. First there was a song from the leatherbound hymnbook. It was picked out by the leader—he could hardly be called superintendent — and then some brother "raised a tune." Such a tune! They had no notes, knew nothing of music.

Next, a chapter was read from the Bible. This was a complete chapter, for it was regarded a sin to begin a chapter and not finish it; and to omit verses which contained long or hard names was regarded as a shirking of duty.

Next followed the prayer, long and earnest, covering the whole field of invocation and not forgetting the most remote heathen lands.

Following the opening exercises, the work of the lessons began. Classes read the Bible through, without questions, comment, or explanation, often without meaning!

Missionary Ordained as Elder

Special ordination services were held July 3 at the First Mennonite Church of Wadsworth, Ohio, when missionary Vernon Sprunger was ordained to the office of elder in preparation for further administrative and supervisory duties in the Belgian Congo. The charge was given by A. J. Neuenschwander, assisted by John P. Suderman, vice-president of the Mission Board, who also brought the message of the morning. Rev. Suderman and Rev. Sprunger then assisted with the communion service which followed.

Informal farewell services were held in the home church in the evening, when a large number of friends and relatives gathered to recall interesting experiences of the past and to wish them well as the Sprungers leave for their fourth term on the field. All the children were present for this occasion. Vernon and Lilly gave a touching testimonial of their zeal for the work and of their submission to the Lord's will when her two serious operations of last year made their return to Africa uncertain. The congregation and their many other friends rejoice with them that her health has been restored to make their sailing possible by July 16.

An area farewell service was held July 10 at the Ebenezer Church, near Bluffton, Ohio, where Brother Sprunger had been serving as interim pastor.

Their family will be widely scattered during the next year. Charles and his wife, the former Geraldine Reiff, will be enrolled at the Seminary in Chicago, Wilmer at Bethel College in Kansas, and the daughters in boarding schools in the Congo—Jeannette, 15, at Lubondai and Shirley, 9, at Kajiji. The address for Vernon and Lilly will be Congo Inland Mission, Kandale, via Gungu Kikwit, Congo Belge. They will be stationed sixty-five miles from their former home in an area recently taken over from another mission.

UNSELFISH COMFORT

Can the desire for comfort develop into an unwholesome self-pity, and thus become weakening instead of strengthening? Is the state of comfort one in which to stay and nestle down, or merely a present help and support to lead one to greater heights? In other words, is comfort to be an end in itself or the means to something finer?

In Paul's letter to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 1:4) we have the matter put clearly. God comforts us that we may comfort others. He brings us His peace that we share that peace with His other children. He strengthens us, not merely for the sake of being strong, but that we may have the strength to walk through the vale of gloom into widening fields of service.

How much we need comfort—both from friends and from God—at times of special trial. But we desire this "com-fort" (with-strength) not only to have the power to meet life properly for the moment, but also to go forth into a serviceable life because of this extra power. It may be possible to allow the comfort people give to lull us into morbid self-pity; but it is also possible to accept such comfort and have it help us go forth "with strength," better equipped to comfort and help others, and to be more faithful witnesses for the Great Comforter.

WHEN VACATION IS RE-CREATION

Apparently each year sees more people going on vacations. There is much to be said for such periods of change and rest—if they really re-create the physical and spiritual being.

In deciding what to take along on a vacation, it is of utmost importance that God himself be included. It will help us to go to the right places and to do the proper things. A vacation dare not be merely a "moral holiday" in which we lay aside our finest principles, but a time when we take more time to listen to God through His world and through the quiet times when He can speak to us more clearly. The Sunday worship should not be neglected. God's protection and guidance should always be sought on any such trip.

That is a good vacation which sends one back rested in body, relaxed in mind, and refreshed in spirit. "Come ye apart and rest awhile," was the Master's advice to a group of weary disciples. A vacation can be a time to re-create the body and soul.

A WORLD-WIDE CALL TO PRAYER

Because of the extreme importance of the meeting of the four heads of governments in Geneva, Switzerland, beginning July 18, a special call to prayer has been issued by the presidents of the World Council of Churches. This is the first meeting in ten years of the heads of the governments of France, England, United States, and Russia. This meeting could be of decisive importance in world history and world peace, and certainly should have the sincere prayers of Christians everywhere.

Special services of intercessions are being held throughout the world during the sessions of this Conference. It is suggested that "all Christian people, in their homes and places of work, continue to pray each day for the Geneva Conference as long as it remains in session."

There are some things that God doesn't do for people until they pray. Perhaps in this case the sincere prayers of His followers is needed that He may guide the nations into the ways of peace. Or perhaps the nations cannot hear His voice or are unwilling to follow Him until enough Christians break down that unwillingness through prayer.

As a people, we believe in prayer; here is an opportunity to put that belief into practical use, that God may direct this meeting of the leading nations, and that they may be willing to work according to His will and plan. At this important moment in world history, the sincere pray-er may be one of God's peacemakers; and, "Blessed are the peacemakers."

TWO WORLDS AT A TIME

"One world at a time" is the advice sometimes given. But for the Christian this is not good teaching. One of our major difficulties is that we live too much in one world—the physical world. Some few swing to the other extreme and try to ignore this world entirely by isolation or complete withdrawal. We believe both extremes are wrong; we must live in two worlds at a time.

We cannot escape this world as long as we are in the physical body. We are influenced greatly by our environment. We must make adjustments to this physical world. The great mistake comes when we adjust so completely that this world dominates us.

We need also to live in the spiritual world here and now. To wait to start living in the spiritual realm until we are stepping out of this world is to wait too long. The great qualities of faith and hope and love are spiritual and must be experienced here if they are to be brought to full fruition in the world to come. Compared with eternity, the life we live in this world is only a tiny fraction of time. Why, then, give so much effort and attention to this small fraction and lose or miss the greater?

The two worlds should supplement each other; this one preparing for the world to come. We should be ready at any time to step across the border into the eternal world. No one knows when he may be called to make that step. It need not be a step into the abyss but a firm step into the solid foundations of eternity.

So we need to live in two worlds at the same time; this one blending into the next. To accomplish this may require more time and thought and work than we are giving it at present. While this world is important, it is as nothing in importance as compared with the world beyond. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Why a Believers' Church?

HENRY POETTCKER*

In the July 12th issue of The Mennonite there was drawn to our attention the coming conference on the Believers' Church with special attention given to the need for and the purpose of this conference. Undoubtedly various questions came to our minds as we tried to anticipate the direction or the areas into which the discussions might lead us. Or possibly some of us wondered just how pertinent such a discussion could be.

The way in which one views the Church will have far-reaching implications, and it is just at the point of the nature of the Church that so much disagreement is evident. This fact, brought out so forcefully in recent times, has brought many groups to re-study their own position and try to determine anew just what God's Word has to say and teaches on the nature and the function of the Church. This is a crucial issue, for as James D. Smart has said, it is the Church ". . . confused in its faith, vague concerning its own nature and destiny, and no longer clear in its own mind about what it owes either God or man,"[1] that proves a ready prey for the enemy. As Mennonites we pride ourselves on our heritage, yet too often we are not able to say what that heritage is nor how, in our time, it may come to its fullest fruition. Speaking specifically of our concept of the Church, therefore, let us ask what difference it makes as to what understanding we have of it.

To begin with, we might seek for a dictionary definition. But here we receive little help for Webster gives no fewer than seven different uses of the term. It may denote a building or a service or a profession or a denomination or a religious society or the collective body of Christians. Hence we must go a step further to try to get the concept into sharper focus. J. R. Coates speaks of Church as indicating ". . . the concrete phenomenon in which are seen those acts of the Creator which give meaning to history, the immediate objective for which Christ gave His life, and the organ of the Holy Spirit for the furthering of the Kingdom of God on earth."[2] Here we have a definition that speaks both of the origin of the Church as well as indicating something of its purpose and function. With R. Newton Flew we can say that the Church is a new religious community, with a new way of life, a fresh startling message, and an unparalleled consciousness of inheriting the divine promises made to Israel of old.[3]

But why speak of a Believers' Church? Is that not self-evident? Surely if we think of this community with Jesus as its head there is no question about the members being believers. If we are to be realistic we have to acknowledge that there often are questions about the type and caliber of the members. It was because the Church had ceased to be the Church that we had the Reformation in the 16th century. It was because our own forefathers thought that in some respects even the Reformers were not going far enough that Anabaptists emerged. Membership in the body of Christ for them was not due to a baptismal rite administered to an infant, but was the result of a personal confession of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord.

Having mentioned baptism, we are brought face to face with the sacraments or ordinances—baptism and the Lord's Supper (with several more for the Catholics)—and the role which they play within the Church. Our understanding of them will in certain respects determine our concepts of the Church. The practical implications as we have noted in the above paragraph are immediately evident. Nor must we forget the significance of the ministry. Just what place do the elders and ministers occupy in the Church? The Roman Catholics and some bishops within the Anglican Church hold a much more rigid view than do most Protestants. The former speak of 'apostolic succession,' a term used to designate an uninterrupted line of ordination reaching all the way back to the Apostles, and hence to Christ himself. Anyone outside this line of succession is not really endowed with apostolic authority. Yet what happens if those who are 'legitimately' ordained are obviously unfit for their office? The answers which we give to these questions again determine our concept of the Church.

Let us beware lest in an attitude of complacency and self-satisfaction we be found a church which is not being the Church.

From the above it will have become evident that it does make a difference how we understand the concept, Church. Our brief consideration has not aimed at exhaustiveness, but rather at giving us an awareness of some of the problems which confront us as followers of Jesus Christ. As those who hold to a Believers' Church we need to re-evaluate both our theological principles as well as the practical implications. It is evident that in some respects, e.g. church discipline, we have deviated from the practices of our forefathers. Is this deplorable, tolerable, or commendable? Let us beware, lest in an attitude of complacency and self-satisfaction we be found a church which is not being the Church; lest we forget what we owe to God and to man. May ours be the humble spirit that is willing to be led and to learn, and may the coming conference serve to challenge us anew to give forth and live forth the message of redemption!

The Short Term Pastorate

ARTHUR S. ROSENBERGER*

It is the purpose of this article to present some of the advantages of a short term pastorate. A definition of short term is in order at the outset. For the purpose of this article we will define it as from five to ten years. This will stand in comparison to a ministry of twenty years to a lifetime. The writer of this article is of the conviction that there are many things to be said in favor of a pastorate of eight to ten years. A pastorate of less than five years would seem to him ordinarily to be too short. However there are always circumstances that may modify the length of a pastorate in one way or another. Some of those on the side of a longer pastorate are being presented by J. E. Amstutz as he writes from that angle.

One reason for a short term pastorate lies in the very fact of change. We live in a changing world and people come to desire some changes. This can be true of the pastor of the congregation and a "new" man has some drawing power for a while simply because he is "new." Even more important than the mere fact of having a change of pastors is that it is a good experience for a congregation to have to look for a new minister occasionally. In searching for a minister there is a lot to be learned, such as whether ministers are scarce or plentiful, what type of men are available, and how to proceed, properly to call a pastor. All this is an education, and may be a real spiritual experience for a congregation, particularly those who have the immediate responsibility.

A short term pastorate may have its advantages for the minister himself. There is always the problem of getting into a rut. This can be the bane of many a ministry. It is possible to get so accustomed to a situation and its problems that one feels he has done all that he can and then allows things to just drift along. In this rut the minister loses freshness, vitality and initiative. A fresh start in a new situation may give him just the impetus that he needs. Challenged in another field he may find new courage and resourcefulness to go forward and with it come into a more vital relation with God as he draws upon divine power. It is not the point of this paragraph that one must change a pastorate to keep fresh but rather that in actual practice it is one way of so doing.

Every pastor is a human being, and like all humans, he will have his strong points and his weaker points. Certainly no one has every quality it takes for a ministry that is full and complete. Only our Lord was perfect and those of us who seek to serve Him all fall short somewhere. One man may have his strongest ministerial qualification in the pulpit, another in pastoral work, another in work with young people, and so on. All of the phases of the ministry are important and should receive proper emphasis over the years. A change of pastor gives the opportunity for a new man to lead a congregation who may have some gifts that his predecessor did not have. Thus the congregation gets the benefit of a fuller ministry through the years than any one man would be able to give.

In the Seminary we were told that Barnum used to say that the animal was half the show. This was a striking way of emphasizing the importance of the minister as a personality. The gospel must be preached by human beings, and preaching has been defined as truth through personality. We have already emphasized the fact that no one person has all the qualities for a perfect ministry. It also happens that ministers may have certain ways of doing things, which may or may not be mistakes, which may offend people in one way or another; or some of the congregation may honestly come to feel that a change would be for the better. There is always this problem of human relationships. A short term pastorate will give the opportunity for someone else to serve who will have the advantage of a new start. This is not to condone running away from a difficult situation. It is easy to say that if trouble comes one can look for another church. With the present scarcity of ministers, it is not too hard to find another field of service. Sometimes a minister has to face a difficult situation and see it through. On the other hand there are times when a change is advisable.

A short term pastorate may be brought about because a church fails to give the pastor the material support he needs to be free to carry on his work. This would however not be as much a matter of the advantage of a short term pastorate (the field of this paper), as it would be a matter of necessity for the one facing that situation. Fortunately our churches are more and more realizing their responsibility in giving the pastor adequate support.

Finally a short term pastorate, as we have defined it in this article, is long enough to get much accomplished. None of us will accomplish all we would like to do and have the vision to see done, but in five, eight or ten years, a real contribution can be made to a church program. In the first year or two of a ministry, one gets to know the congregation he serves and the community. From there on he can work constructively to bring the gospel of Jesus Christ to bear upon his given situation. He will plan for the work of evangelism, the program of Christian education, the promotion of all the activities of the church, building a greater zeal for missions, standing back of our Conference, and all that goes with a present

There is always the problem of getting into a rut. This can be the bane of many a ministry.

Helping Isaac Dig Wells

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

In the six months since we first arrived in Uruguay, as we visited from farm to farm, our attention was always soon called to either the lack or the abundance of the water supply.

Purposely, but also providentially, many of the farmsteads lie low enough to allow for a creek and pasture land. This usually assures the pioneer of getting a shallow well. Others were not as fortunate. Though in some ways this is harder, it also has its compensations.

Elder Ernst Regehr of El Ombu, for instance, tells of how he and his family dug two wells with pick and spade—and that without success. The third (68 feet deep) now has an ample reserve, but the water is almost too deep to be drawn by hand. The advantage this pastor has is that living on "higher ground," as every real pastor should, he can watch most of his parishioners in their daily round of duty. He is also the first to see the sun rise in the morning and the last to see it set in the evening.

But whether the wells are deep or shallow, we have often been privileged to watch (and at times assist) in drawing the water supply for the day. Here is where the family meets—also the passing neighbor —for that refreshing pause that is so much appreciated in the summer time. We predict that in years to come these wells will never be forgotten. David once yearned in later years, "Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem," 2 Sam. 23:15.

It was at a well in Samaria that Jesus once met a woman who claimed Jacob as her forefather, but who did not know how to draw water with joy out of the wells of salvation (Isa. 12:3). Jesus had aroused her curiosity by offering her living water. This well, too, was deep. How could He draw living water which would quench her thirst for ever?

But there it happened, as it has happened to countless thousands since, by a simple truthful faith, Jesus became in her "a well of water springing up into everlasting life," John 4:14.

Christians in general, and Mennonites in particular, have a real lesson to learn from a special concern which Isaac had. He wanted to preserve the wells from which his father had drunk. Not only is he remembered by the wells he dug, but by an even more significant thing.

"Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them," Gen. 26: 18.

Too quickly, and all too easily, the sacrifices and insights of our fathers are enjoyed but soon merely taken for granted. Through indifference and neglect they fall unused into the hands of the enemy and get covered up. Isaac evidently knew where these places of refreshing had been. So he did what he could to open them up again and keep them open.

The wells from which our Anabaptist forefathers, hundreds of years ago, drew their inspiration and guidance were dug deeply into the Foundation, "the only trustworthy guide for faith and life," Jesus Christ our Savior and Lord. They believed that the whole gospel was for the whole man; that only a wholehearted discipleship was a reasonable service before God.

Those in Switzerland and Holland who held to this living faith, (and later in eastern Germany and Russia) dared to say, "We ought to obey God rather than men." But as the years went on, their children's children tended in practice to permit the ideals and ways of the world to cover over those deeper fountains at which our fathers had been refreshed. In Europe, as well as in America, nationalism and secularism had taken its toll.

During these months in Uruguay we have been repeatedly encouraged to find a deepening appreciation for the faith of our fathers. Mennonites, both in North and South America, need to think through the implications of true discipleship. Christ isn't Lord at all if He isn't Lord of all!

We all need a revival in conviction that salvation is by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ—more than a traditional Mennonitism; that baptism is scriptural baptism only when it is administered upon confession of a personal faith in Christ as Savior and Lord; that the Christian's character—not his oath—reveals his real worth; that positive expressions of love—and not of violence—are his God-willed means of testimony; that he should be transformed into Christlikeness rather than into world likeness; and that Christ wants His followers to be an obedient disciplined and progressively purer fellowship.

We are happy to know that three Danzig Mennonite congregations in Uruguay have made application for membership in the General Conference of the Mennonite Church. They feel that they need us. We feel that we need them in a larger united witness for Christ. We have extended a welcome to them to work with us in our school and mission enterprises. We have encouraged some of their young people to prepare themselves as missionaries, ministers, teachers, nurses, doctors, farmers, and housewives.

The closing days of our stay in Uruguay witnessed many expressions of mutual love and appreciation. Many sincere handclasps conveyed feelings of oneness in Christ. We were especially touched when the youth of Montevideo presented us with a beautiful hand painted and framed motto, which incidentally, was one of the favorite texts of the late Brother C. F. Klassen.

High Cost of Wrong Doing

H. H. SMITH, SR.

It is hardly necessary to point out the high price we have to pay for doing wrong; we see it before our eyes every day. And on almost every page of the Bible there are warnings against the violation of God's law, and pleadings that we do not yield to sin and have to pay the costly penalty.

In a commencement address at Vanderbilt University, in 1908, Dr. Charles Forster Smith, an eminent educator, gave an account of an impressive incident that occurred at the institution in connection with the "honor system," during his student days.

"I went to Vanderbilt in 1882 rather skeptical as to the 'honor system,'" said Dr. Smith, "but that year or the next I saw the member of a fraternity appear before the faculty with the charge and the proof of dishonesty in examination against one of their own number, and asking that he be expelled. Then I knew the 'honor system' would work; and the longer I stayed there and the more I observed, the more I was sure of it. The most impressive scene I ever witnessed there was when the venerable Chancellor Garland one Wednesday morning announced from the platform that a certain graduate, whose name he withheld, had sent back his diploma. It had been returned with the confession that in a single examination the student had used forbidden help, and though he had never been suspected and years had passed, he had never had any peace of mind. He, therefore, returned his diploma and asked that his name be stricken from the roll of alumni and announcement made of his confession, preferring public disgrace rather than to bear longer the intolerable memory of a single secret sinful act. The Chancellor said that he had after much consideration decided that the young man's repentance and suffering had been a sufficient atonement for his error, and insisted on his retaining his diploma. But the young man would not consent. 'And here is the diploma,' said Dr. Garland, holding out the mutilated parchment, 'but I have cut out the name, and the secret shall die with me.' The hall was as still as death."

Why do we have to pay such a high price for violating the law of God? Because God, in His infinite love and wisdom, has so ordered it. Professor Noah K. Davis, author of a volume on "Elements of Ethics," said: "There is probably no feeling more pure, more delicate and delightful than self-approbation. Self-condemnation, on the contrary, is always painful, and when it deepens to remorse, becomes intolerable. Thus these sentiments are a natural reward and punishment for right and wrong doing."

The best cure for worry, depression, melancholy, brooding, is to go deliberately forth and try to lift with one's sympathy the gloom of somebody else.

—Arnold Bennett

Flashes of Thought

Waiting--in Vain

Walter Gering

I could hardly wait to hear what they would say. You see—it was Father's Day and I wanted them to share with me some of their thoughts and concerns. While still in the strength of their manhood they had been busily engaged in providing for the needs of their families. Now that they were old and gray they could look back over the years and quietly contemplate upon their past ways.

My question was: What shall I tell the boys and girls on Father's Day? It was customary that a short message should be devoted to the children of the church each Sunday. Naturally, on Father's Day it ought to pertain to some phase of home life; the relationship between children and parents. Who would be more qualified to make suggestions than these aged fathers who had lived their lives and now could speak from the experience of their many years?

A few moments spent with several of these saints of God gave more than enough material for the message. They were hesitant to speak much, feeling themselves unworthy to suggest ideas. Strange, is it not, that the older a man gets the less he feels he has the answer to life's problems. Yet words of wisdom came from their lips which I conveyed to the children. One word came from the lips of a father whose eyes were filled with tears as he spoke: "Tell the boys and girls to be good to their father." Strangely enough, those words were spoken by two of the fathers interviewed.

It was the next day that I realized the weight of those words. All day long he had been sitting at the window waiting, hoping against hope as the evening shadows lengthened that he would still come. Surely on Father's Day he would take a few moments to visit his aged dad. With the close of day, with an aching heart, dad went to rest. Father's Day was over; he had not come. Now I understood the significance of those words.

So too it must be with our Heavenly Father when His children, busily engaged in the rush of life, fail to come to spend a few moments in the presence of their Father. How He must suffer as the world of thoughtless children go heedlessly on in their ways.

FATHER FORGIVE—
WE DID NOT REALIZE HOW YOU WAITED.

The end of learning is to repair the ruins of our first parents by regaining to know God aright, and out of that knowledge to love Him, to imitate Him, to be like Him, as we may the nearest, by possessing our souls of true virtue, which, being united to the heavenly grace of faith, makes up the highest perfection.

—John Milton

A Trans-Chaco Roadway in Prospect for Paraguay

Mr. Gustav F. A. Storm, special ambassador from Paraguay to the United States, visited Mennonite Central Committee headquarters on May 23, to discuss the possible construction of a trans-Chaco roadway to Bolivia.

Mr. Storm, who is mayor of Asuncion, came to Akron to share the concern which his government has for the development of its country and report its interest in developing more extensive trade with neighboring Bolivia. The ambassador, who speaks Spanish and German, has been in the United States for four months on a special mission.

During his mission Ambassador Storm received a communication from the Paraguayan president urging him to explore possible sources of assistance in North America to build a road from Asuncion northwestward to Bolivia. President Stroessner also suggested he contact the Mennonite Central Committee to determine to what extent Mennonite personnel would be able to work as technicians in this road construction through the Chaco jungle.

In his conference at Akron, Mr. Storm reported he had found several people in the United States government interested in such a roadway. Among those he visited was Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower, president of Pennsylvania State University who has been in Paraguay and who told the ambassador the United States has great interest in the future of his country.

Evidence of this concern on the part of the U. S. government is shown by the recent appropriation of $100,000 by the Foreign Operations Administration. This appropriation from its Emergency Fund is to set up a project to train Paraguayans in the operation and maintenance of roadway equipment. While this appropriation coincides with Mr. Storm's mission to this country, this expression of U. S. government interest in Paraguay is not as recent as circumstances would seem to indicate.

This $100,000 appropriation represents a contract between the Paraguayan government and the United States FOA. Under the agreement FOA will purchase machinery and at the same time train Paraguayans in the use and operation of this road-building equipment.

A part of the agreement calls for the assistance of the Mennonite Central Committee. MCC has been asked to provide a team of from five to seven technicians represented in 1-W men to demonstrate the operation and maintenance of the equipment to the trainees whom the government of Paraguay will provide. MCC would be responsible for the travel and maintenance of its men. This proposal affecting MCC will be acted upon at the July meeting of its executive committee.

The contract calls for this training project to begin the construction of a roadway toward Bolivia commencing at Villa Hayes, just north of Asuncion. Thus this training project represents the first step toward the construction of a trans-Chaco roadway.

During his conference at Akron Mr. Storm reported his government would like to see the entire roadway completed within two or three years. This will take more machinery, finances, and personnel than available through the $100,000 FOA contract. The ambassador said he will do all he can to bring it to completion. He pointed out that the Chaco grade is very gradual and should not present particularly difficult construction problems.

Mr. Storm stated he was encouraged by the fact that so many people who should be interested in a trans-Chaco roadway are ready to move ahead—the ranchers whose land would be traversed, the President and his administration in Paraguay, the U. S. government through which more financial help may be available, and the Mennonites in Paraguay from whom they hope to get assistance in manning the machinery.

Upon his return to Asuncion shortly, he will seek to set up a workable plan for the complete construction of the roadway upon which the American government can honor Paraguay's application for a loan for this purpose. Mr. Storm feels he can get a needed loan of $750,000 to $1,000,000 if he is assured Mennonites would help with personnel and management in co-operation with FOA. The ambassador feels his country does not have the technical personnel for this project. Having learned to know the ability and persistence of Mennonites during his term as Minister of Public Works, Mr. Storm as well as President Stroessner seem set on using Mennonite personnel.

All of these developments have a vital bearing upon the economic status of the Mennonites in Paraguay. A roadway traversing the Chaco could well mark the beginning of a new day for the Paraguayan brotherhood. This roadway could provide the transportation facilities needed for the establishment of a strong and flourishing Mennonite economy.

Such an economy is essential for good schools, hospitals, churches, and other community institutions. It is the establishment of this Christian community which motivates the Mennonite Central Committee to assist the Paraguayan Mennonites in this project. And it is for that reason that the prayers of the constituency are solicited that this trans-Chaco roadway may become a reality.

We destroyed an enemy the other day. Ordinarily you'd think one shouldn't gloat over such a thing, but we made this enemy our friend.

A Book Review

Christianity and History

ESKO LOEWEN*

(A review of the book, CHRISTIANITY AND HISTORY, by Herbert Butterfield. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, $2.75)

In another generation, there was a great stir over the implications of what science had to say about the origin of the world and of man as this had to bear upon Christian faith. Defenders of the faith brought out their armor to destroy this new threat to Christian truth and overconfident and skeptical scientists made statements which subtly or obviously had the effect of undermining Christian belief. Today this battle is one that has cooled. Certain of its effects still mar the landscape with skepticism, uncertainty, and confusion, but at the same moment scientists and theologians have both humbled themselves sufficiently to see the truths each so stubbornly once defended. In Germany, for instance, the best scientists and theologians meet together once a year to grapple with the questions of truth which bear on Christian faith.

In our day, a new conflict has developed, this time in the realm of history and the interpretation of history. Every man who writes about events that have happened or tells a story does so with certain assumptions. Thus, when you read the story of the Civil War as told by a Southern writer, you get quite a different interpretation from that told by a Northern writer. Or the attitude toward King George III as seen through American eyes is quite different from that seen through English eyes.

When given a little thought, this fact is quite obvious. Any historic period presents a great welter of facts, many more than can be sorted and organized and written in a book. Thus, the historian must choose significant materials to talk about. The choices he makes and what he talks about is decisive.

In our present world, the Marxian creed presents its particular view of history. That is, there are certain assumptions the Marxian makes concerning human life and its course and meaning in time. The Marxian interprets history in the light of these assumptions.

We, who live in a democracy, also make certain assumptions concerning human life and its course and meaning in time. We interpret history in the light of these assumptions. For instance, we assume that certain revolutions were good while others were bad. The French Revolution, being an overthrow of corrupt monarchy resulted in the eventual blossoming of democracy, therefore it was a good revolution. The fall of Rome finally made way for the development of European civilization, therefore the fall of Rome was not a reversion to barbarism (our ancestors having been the feared barbarians). The Protestant Reformation resulted in the development of today's Christianity, thus the reformation was good.

On the other side of the ledger are bad revolutions such as the Russian revolution of 1917, the coming of Hitler in 1933, the counter-reformation of the 17th century, and all other revolutions which in one way or another obstruct or destroy the values we hold to be essential.

Dr. Herbert Butterfield, in a little book of seven essays and 146 pages deals with the question of Christianity and History with remarkable clarity and insight. He is of the opinion that current assumptions concerning the whole course of human life in time is a more serious threat to Christianity than the natural sciences. He exposes some of the shallow assumptions we make and the great need for a basically Christian view of the human story. He faces the challenges of the cold scientific historian, the Marxian, and the sceptic as he sets forth the fact that the Christian view of man is based on an historical faith. The whole biblical story reveals that God is looked upon as the God of history. The insistence of the New Testament writers on the manhood of Christ makes this God of history one who has entered the life of men and has thus broken the barrier between himself and mankind. The implications of this are no less than breathtaking.

For anyone who at times has wondered where God is amidst all the cataclysm and tragedy of these past decades, how one can relate one's faith to the current stream of events and find any meaning, and how to see the human story in the light of God's judgment and providence, these essays will be worth much pondering. Further, if one is seeking an understanding of the fear and uncertainty, which has gripped mankind in these days in the light of the Lordship of Christ, and the implications of communism's spread in the last fifty years, what Butterfield has to say can do much to provide a Christian perspective.

Professor Butterfield is professor of modern history at the University of Cambridge. He is frankly Christian in his approach to his subject and as such has made other significant contributions, for instance, his The Origins of Modern Science is recognized as standard in the field.

Dr. Butterfield closes his little book with a Christian commitment which could well be a motto for repeated reference. He says: "I have nothing to say at the finish except that if one wants a permanent rock in life and goes deep enough for it, it is difficult for historical events to shake it. There are times when we can never meet the future with sufficient elasticity of mind, especially if we are locked in the contemporary systems of thought. We can do worse than remember a principle which both gives a firm rock and leaves us the maximum elasticity for our minds: the principle: Hold to Christ, and for the rest be totally uncommitted."

Dear Comrade of the Human Heart

Dear Comrade of the human heart,
Blest Savior known of old—
Help us Thy mercy to impart
Till others with us find the chart
Thy kingdom to unfold.

Our labor—and unceasing prayer:—
That men learn war no more—
As close touch with Thee to fare
Till others learn Thy tender care,
And with us Thee adore—

Communion sweet with Thee the goal—
All race and creed above—
One great triumphant tide of soul
Which shall through all the ages roll
By Thy immortal love!

Crusaders of the common place,
With victory undenied!—
Till by the splendor of Thy grace—
Though none can see Thy form or face—
All feel Thee by their side!

THE SHORT-TERM PASTORATE

day ministry. Yes, with God's help a lot can be accomplished in a short term pastorate.

On the basis of eight to ten years, the average minister can look forward to about four or five pastorates in a lifetime. Thus he can enrich that many congregations with whatever his particular and strongest contribution may be, and the churches may have the benefit of the ministry of a number of good men (and their wives) who come to serve them as God's consecrated servants.

May God guide each pastor to a pastorate of the right length in his particular congregation!

This motto, Psalm 84:6-7a, is especially clear in the German language. Freely translated from the German, the thoughts are these: "Blessed are those who have Thee as their Strength and who follow Thee with all their heart, who pass through the valley of misery and make wells therein."

We are grateful to the Lord, if we have been able to have a small part in helping Isaac to open up some of the wells of Abraham—neglected scriptural truths and areas of witness in the world today. We thank those of you who have prayed for us in this ministry.

To our Mennonites in Uruguay, we say, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again"—if not in Uruguay, then before the throne of Christ, when He calls us into His Presence.

As a Man Thinketh

Dan West, Brethren leader, is fond of saying, "What gets your attention gets you."

Frank Laubach, whose challenging articles on literacy you have perhaps read, says, "Every thought tends to become true in proportion as it is intense and as it is long dwelt upon. Thoughts result in deeds and deeds make history."

We could all find plenty of evil to think about if we wanted to—community gossip, crime and war news, degrading articles, books, pictures, movies, radio and television programs. But if we give our attention and thoughts to these things, we make it impossible for God's Spirit to work through us for good, and we voluntarily put ourselves on the side of evil. And we become eventually what we give our attention to.

Laubach thinks of our thoughts as being like radio waves that are sent out all the time. He believes there is power in thinking good thoughts. This columnist agrees.

No better counsel has been given to us concerning our thoughts than that of our beloved Apostle Paul, who urged us long ago to think about what is true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report.

Film Review

NO OTHER GODS, 16 mm., sound, black and white, 20 min., available from Association Films. Rental $6.00. Available in Canada from General Films Limited, Winnipeg.

Judy, a teen-ager, entertains Uncle Bill, a minister and former guardian of her mother.

While waiting for her mother Judy raises the issue with Uncle Bill of when a person is old enough to date. Uncle Bill uses this opportunity to discuss the three boy friends her mother had and the difficult time she had in choosing the one who became her husband. Each of them had a different philosophy of life involving money, sports, and business. The story shows how her mother chose wisely and also how through the counsel of Uncle Bill each of the men arrived at a Christian philosophy of life.

The producer, family films, suggests that this film could be used for discussion groups with young people as well as for a Sunday evening service with or without discussion.

There was considerable difference of opinion in the reviewing group regarding the merits of this film. One member felt that the acting was poor and that the plot too was very weak. This person would not recommend that this film be used. Another member concurred in the opinion that the film would not be suitable for a Sunday evening church service. One or two members did see merit in the film for use with young people with a discussion period following.

For our audiences one item in the film would probably be objectionable in most places. At the beginning of the film the three young men are introduced at a dance.

Some Thoughts

I like the statement of Albert Schweitzer, intimating both a sigh of resignation and a feeling of understanding and patience, as he says, "Anyone who proposes to do good must not expect people to roll stones out of his way, but must accept his lot calmly if they even roll a few more upon it." An analytical look at human reactions and human nature should have, perhaps, made this an observation known generally; underneath we feel that this is the way it will be. Yet we always expect something—a thank-you at the bare minimum—insisting on recognition. Feelings shall not be irreparably damaged when certain people fail to see the good of a genuinely good act, if there is this realization with us.

Because love is central, we elect to do good without discrimination, not determining beforehand comparative compensations. The reward is not in receiving, but in the doing, and therefore if good is done sincerely it can withstand adverse reactions.

All of this is said from the point of one who does propose to do good, but what if I am rolling the stones? Schweitzer had written this bit after friends cautioned him about throwing his life away. He had announced his resolution to become a medical doctor in Africa. And who were his friends? Fellow theologians, seeing so much scholarship wasted in this man.

Jesus said "Sell of your goods and give to the poor" knowing full well that possessions are obstacles to clear thinking about the ultimate values of life. Life in these times is incredibly complicated, with a shower of gadgets to make it more so; overly many possessions can be seen as further entanglements. This is not to say that we are all overburdened with wealth, but we all do have the choice to make as to whether possessions shall be our obsession or whether we shall be determined to see past "things." But even aside from the question of ultimate values, we often get lost in the trivia that pass for significance. Do we need a Thoreau standing on every street corner saying again "Simplicity, simplicity, simplicity!" Listen to him: "Our life is frittered away by detail . . . let your affairs be as two or three, and not a hundred or a thousand; instead of a million count half a dozen, and keep your accounts on your thumbnail."

Isn't it one of the virtues of this capitalistic society that we are not obligated to join the scramble for money but can on the other hand choose to ignore it? Or is it only the artist (or madman) who, because of his nature and his nonacceptance by others, must of necessity be happy with nothing? "I am absolutely convinced that no wealth in the world can help humanity forward, even in the hands of the most devoted worker in this cause. The example of great and pure individuals is the only thing that can lead us to noble thoughts and deeds. Money only appeals to selfishness and irrestibility invites abuse. Can anyone imagine Moses, Jesus, or Gandhi armed with the moneybags of Carnegie?"

We are hoping that Mennonite youth become increasingly aware of Mennonite education ("Mennonite education" is one way of putting it. "Christian" ought to be best descriptive of it, yet there can even be vagueness there too. At its best it is education that puts everything—all learning, all experience—in the perspective of God's nature and God's will.)

There are some things that ought to demand our attention in the learning process, which are not always specific studies by themselves. One thinks of learning itself, as it is examined together with development of emotions and behavior. Psychological studies will hit on it, sure enough, but this actually is a matter big enough for even more attention. Why say this? Daily we forget that emotions are at least partly learned; that people may decide for themselves what their children will learn—whether they will later on know love as well as hate (love which seeks to understand). It is a startling realization to know that so much of what we are is learned, if not by conscious direction then by misdirection, conscious or otherwise. We learn the nature of love from the acutely sensitive minds that have perceived its nature, and who, with adequate means of expression in their hands, teach others.

The one who wrote the Book of Ruth surely was one of those. In it love emerges as a triumphant, attainable thing of beauty, emphasized as such by the parts of Scripture which stand on either side.

In all of this we assume that nowhere is love taught more fully than in the gospel; here is love which educates all love, which teaches all those who teach love as a way.

So is hate learned. It wouldn't be far wrong to say that most literature and writing, most poetry, in fact, most expression of any sort, are variations on the theme of love (on all levels). With some the essence of love is refined, with others hate and other perversions are explored, some clarify, some obscure. But we learn from it all. It does not follow that we always learn the right thing; guidance from those who through experience know something of it is necessary.

If love is a redeeming factor, we must learn it, and make it possible that others will see it as that.

"I'm just a parent," a mother said apologetically in introducing herself in a group of Sunday school teachers.

"I only teach at a teachers' college," a professor sitting next to me at a luncheon said, also apologetically.

Just a parent! Just an instructor of teachers! You hold the future in your hands. That's all.

Blanca says "Thank You"

Usually March 17 is noted for the "wearing of the green," but this year, it was a "red-letter day" for those who attended the 28th Central Area Annual Meeting of the American Leprosy Missions. On that day, Blanca with her shy, sweet, South American charm, came to us to tell her own story and completely won our hearts. She wrote out her message and delivered it in English. Naturally, her mother tongue is Spanish and she had been in the United States just about three months before, so she is to be commended for she did admirably.

Here is her message as Blanca wrote it.

No Home

"I was born on February 14, 1938, in Girarodot, Colombia. Girarodot is a hot, tropical town near the town of Agua de Dios, one of the two leprosy colonies in Colombia. My mother's name was Paulina and my father's Marco, but, unfortunately, I never had a home.

Very Poor—Then

"My parents, were not married and my father already had a family. This happens to many children in Colombia, and there is much suffering because of it. Both my father and mother were sick with leprosy, so part of my childhood was spent in a leprosy colony, and part of it with some relatives of my mother's who lived north of Bogota. I don't remember much about those early years, but life was hard because we were poor. We had some friends who were Evangelicals. They talked to my mother frequently about the gospel, and even before I was a year old, they took me to the Evangelical Church.

Very Happy Now

"When the school in Cachipay was started one of the friends who had taken me as a baby to the Evangelical Church went to Cachipay to help. She was happy there and encouraged my mother to send me too.

"After waiting several months, the letter finally came saying I had been received. I was very, very happy. Until this time I had never had a real home. I had lived here and there. I had gone to government schools three different years but I had not had a chance to finish the work. I probably never would have had much of an education. My future was very uncertain.

Life Completely Changed

"But because you and other friends of people with leprosy planned the home in Cachipay, my life was completely changed. I have now been in the home for five years. Most important of all, I have learned to know Christ as my Savior.

"Because I have dedicated my life to Him I want to serve Him and to help others know Him too. We have studied the Bible through the years. I know now what is the truth. I have enjoyed the Christian atmosphere and since my mother died three years ago I feel my home is really in Cachipay with my friends.

New Life—New Hope

"Through the generosity of a friend I have been privileged to come to the States. I am glad to be here today to express my gratitude for all you have done for me and for many other children whose parents have leprosy. It is impossible to tell you in words how much we appreciate the chance you have given us but we hope that by our lives we may prove its worth. Because you prayed and gave, we have new life and new hope."

The Washed-up Sunday School

"Fifteen years ago, many people said, 'The Sunday school is all washed up.' And they weren't referring to cleanliness!" Thus spoke Ralph N. Mould, program chairman for the 23rd International Sunday School Convention in a recent speech. He continued:

"The Sunday school, so it seemed, had fallen on evil days and couldn't deliver the Christian goods it was supposed to. Somehow the bloodstream had gone pretty anemic or the channels were clogged. Many people were for shoving the Sunday school right into the grave.

"They said: 'Let's get paid teachers; let's get our religion taught through the public schools; let's do this or that, many a panacea—get rid of the Sunday school; its day is past.'

"What idiocies can affect us mortals at times. The Sunday school today is about the liveliest part of many a congregation. It literally leads in a kind of resurgence teeming through churches across the land. In numbers, yes, but much more: in quality of life devotedly communicating life to other lives."

MCC news & notes

PRESENTS STATEMENT OF CONCERN OVER RESERVE BILL

A statement expressing concern over the passage of a bill providing for the strengthening of military reserve forces was submitted to the U. S. Senate Armed Services Committee on July 8 by the MCC Peace Section.

This was the bill passed by the House of Representatives on July 1 with provisions for setting up an Armed Forces Ready Reserve of up to 2,900,000 men. Power is given the President to call up one million of these men to active duty without any further Congressional action. Senate action on the bill was anticipated during the week of July 11.

"We submit that the adoption of this bill would make a substantial addition to the control of the military over American life" was part of the written statement submitted by the Peace Section in its representation of the Christian peace position of Mennonite and Brethren in Christ church groups in the United States. "The adoption of this bill would actually be another step toward the establishment of a universal military training system such as some have desired but the American public and Congress have heretofore rejected," the statement continued.

By increasing the size of the reserves 90 per cent, by providing the President with power to call reservists, and by providing a six-month training plan, this bill is the first ever passed by the House of Representatives with such obvious provisions for future strengthening of the UMT concept. Most observers feel the Senate will pass the bill and may attempt to make the UMT features stronger.

Under this bill, regular inductees who serve two years of active duty in the armed forces have a total obligation of six years. Men volunteering at an early age are allowed to choose eight years of obligation in the Ready Reserve, only six months of which will be in training.

Every year reservists will be required to attend a minimum of 48 assemblies for drill or some other equivalent period of training. Persons refusing to participate in this training plan will be subject to recall to active duty. Those having two years previous training may be recalled for 45 days; those having less than two years previous training will be recalled for two years.

This bill contains no provisions affecting the present status of conscientious objectors.

MUTUAL AID SOCIETIES MEET JULY 14 AND 15

A meeting of representatives of the Mennonite Mutual Aid societies in the United States and Canada was held July 14 and 15 in Chicago to share information about activities and to discuss ways of increasing effectiveness. This meeting was called by MCC at the request of one of the Mennonite church groups which felt that such a conference would be helpful in indicating how such work can be improved and made more efficient, pointing up unnecessary overlapping or areas of need still unmet.

Representatives of 46 aid organizations operating in the five areas of (1) property loss, (2) health and disability, (3) credits and loans, (4) automobile aid, and (5) colonization were invited to attend. Papers were presented by Dr. H. C. Amstutz, Goshen, Ind.; Howard Raid, Bluffton, Ohio; G. F Hershberger, Goshen, Ind.; John D. Burkholder, Jr., Harrisonburg, Va.; and J. Winfield Fretz, North Newton, Kan., on these five areas, with a period of discussion following each. Melvin Gingerich, Goshen, Ind., gave an opening survey of the existing organizations and their scope, and Orie O. Miller, Akron, Pa., presented a closing summary of possibilities for better witness and service through pooling resources.

BIBLES SENT TO KOREA

In June 225 Bibles and 50 New Testaments were sent to Korea for distribution by MCC workers. One-hundred and seventy-five of these Bibles in the latest translation of the Korean language will be distributed at the Kyong-San School, the Christian home and vocational training school for orphan boys operated by MCC near Taegu. Fifty English Bibles were sent for use in teaching English classes.

In addition, thirty New Testaments were shipped. Robert Lee of Portland, Ore., will use these in Bible work camps or Bible discussion groups which he leads for the Korean youth.

Money for these Bibles comes from a special fund for Bibles and religious literature which MCC maintains. Any contributions designated for this fund will be used by MCC workers in various countries to distribute Bibles and religious literature as the need arises. Such contributions should be clearly designated for this purpose and sent to conference headquarters or MCC.

Donna Kaufman and Ronnie Barber, and Jaqueline Kaufman and Jack Barth were married, May 22 and June 5, respectively. Willard Claassen served us Sunday morning, May 29, in the absence of Rev. Wiebe, who at that time was visiting his mother, who passed away a few days later.—Corr.

—Inman Church, Inman, Kan.: Children's Day was observed by the children giving a fitting program during worship service. The speaker, Marie Duerksen, gave a word picture of the children in India where she serves. That evening the two C. E.'s centered their programs around home and family. Fifty-four disaster kits were packed. Five young people, LaVerne Ratzlaff, John Herbert Schierling, Larry Pauls, Dennis Wiens, and Eldon Wiens, were baptized June 26, and welcomed into our church fold. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Plett, a daughter; to Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Warkentin, a daughter. A goodly number of Christmas bundles were packed. Harvest has proved to be more bountiful than expected; wheat had really been tried by frost, drouth, and wind. We are thankful. —Corr.

June 19, Father's Day, we had child consecration for Samuel, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Frank Enns, who could not be with us on the previous consecration service on Mother's Day. Quite a number of our men helped at Udall, Kan., in the tornado stricken area. Thirty-seven relief bundles have also been sent there, while 48 Christmas bundles have been prepared and sent to needy children.—Mrs. A. F. Enns, Corr.

Relatives and friends joined in the praise service and reception. On May 6 we had a reception as a "welcome back" to the A. M. Gaedderts, and a "farewell" to the Harold Duerksens. After the fellowship meal, C. H. Voth expressed gratitude and appreciation for the fine work of the Duerksens, and our pastor, Albert Gaeddert, gave a short report of his work as director of 1-W service, thanking the congregation for his leave of absence. During the worship service of June 26 our pastor brought his fourth sermon in a series entitled, "Marks of a Believer." Respectively, his four sermons have been, "Doing Righteousness," "Quitting Sinning," "Showing Love," and "Believing Jesus." These messages have been very helpful. That evening, Emma Linscheid gave a stimulating message and report of her secretarial work with the "Back to the Bible" broadcast at Lincoln, Neb. A Diary of the Bible

January—A busy time for me. Most of the family decided to read me through this year. They kept me busy for the first two weeks. They have forgotten me now.

February— Clean-up time. I was dusted yesterday and put in my place. My owner did use me a few minutes last week. He had been in an argument and was looking up some references.

March—I had a busy day the first of the month. My owner was appointed leader of something and used me. I got to go to church for the first time this year—Easter Sunday.

April—Grandpa visited us. He kept me on his lap reading 1 Corinthians 13 for an hour. He seems to think more of me than he did when he was younger.

May—I have a few green stains on my pages. Had some early spring flowers pressed in me.

June—I look like a scrapbook. They have stuffed me full of clippings from the newspapers. One of the girls got married

July—They put me in a suitcase today. I guess we are off for a vacation. I wish I could stay at home because I will have to stay in this thing for a month.

August—Still in the suitcase.

September—Back home again and in my old place. Have a lot of company. Two "True Stories" and four "Comic Books" are on top of me. My! I wish I could be read as much as they are.

October—They used me a little today. One of them is very sick. Right now I am all shined up and am in the center of the table; I think the preacher is coming.

November—Back in my old place. I was looked through for some old papers today. One of the children picked me up today and asked, "Is this a scrapbook?"

December—They are getting ready for Christmas, so I'll be covered with wrapping paper and packages.

HE RESTORETH MY SOUL

Elaine Sommers Rich

"He restoreth my soul." When teeth of doubt have gnawed upon it, He restores my soul. When winds of despair have stripped it of its foliage, He restores my soul. When my tongue has been heavy and my lips sullen, He restores the joy of salvation. When pride has separated me from my fellows and from my God (has made a graven image, Self, to worship) He restores humility and poverty of spirit. To Him I come this Lord's Day. Oh restore my soul!

GOLDEN BOWLS OF INCENSE

There is a beautiful figure in Revelation 5:8, in which reference is made to the prayers of the saints as "Golden bowls of incense." Such prayers seem to be highly regarded in heaven. But they also do wonders for people here on earth. The oft-repeated phrase, "We are remembering you in prayer," can be so much more than a kindly remark by a friend. Where there are sincere prayers to God for particular individuals, and if those persons are open to God, what strength and comfort and power can be brought through the prayers of friends.

In times of special need, when, as someone has put it, prayer-beams are directed toward that person, he can feel the spiritual uplift that such prayers, through God, do bring. He may experience a spiritual power and comfort which catches him up out of despair and brings a quiet and comforting peace. So that even from the depths of sorrow there may be corresponding depths of hope and courage.

If Christians can so help each other in times of special need, then they can indeed perform a great service to their fellow Christians. Perhaps we have not developed this important phase of Christian helpfulness as we should. We could all do more for others by lifting them "on holy hands of prayer."

"TEACH CHRIST NOW"

In Cleveland, Ohio, during July 27-31, an estimated 10,000 Sunday school teachers will meet for the twenty-third International Sunday School Convention. This is expected to be the largest church gathering held this year, and will bring together men and women church school teachers, directors and leaders of weekday religious education from all of the forty-eight states and Alaska as well as from Canadian provinces.

The chief concern of the convention will be the task of preparing the youth of our Protestant churches—more than 30,000,000 of them—for responsible living as adult Christians in the next generation. The theme will be "Home and Church—Teach Christ Now."

The Sunday school continues to be a strong arm of the church. It still holds high the lofty purposes of "leading souls to Christ and building up souls in Christ." The teacher is still the key person in the organization as he stands between two things that will never die—the human soul and the Word of God. It is his purpose to bring these two together.

All with responsibilities in the Sunday school should be ready to give a worthy account of their stewardship, for theirs is a task of mighty implications.

OUR OPPORTUNITY IN MENTAL HEALTH

As is frequently pointed out, one of the significant outgrowths of the Civilian Public Service program during World War II is the interest developed by our people in Mental Health. Since many of our young men did their alternate service in mental hospitals they developed a real interest in the study and care of the patients of such institutions. They found that proper treatment of kindliness and love worked wonders with the inmates.

We now have three mental hospitals in the United States. From all reports they are doing very good work. As noted in this issue, the Brook Lane plant is to be enlarged. There is also some discussion of centering another hospital somewhere in the Midwest area.

Some of our young people are preparing themselves as counselors and psychiatric aides which should be of great value in such institutions. Here lies a practically new field for our people. It may well be that God had been using the CPS experience to prepare us to carry on pioneering work among those unfortunates who need special mental care. We should dedicate ourselves to this task with the same high purpose as we do in going into missionary work. Anyone sick of body or soul or mind should be of concern to us because they are of concern to God.

RELIGIOUS TURNCOATS

At this writing the papers have much to say about the American prisoners of war who had chosen to stay with the Communists, but later regretted their decision and returned to America, the country they had renounced. The term "turncoats" is freely applied to them.

No doubt they had failed to appreciate what blessings were theirs as Americans until they had experienced something of living conditions in a Communistic country. They have changed their minds and want to be Americans again.

"Turncoats" are not limited to those few who had turned against their country. Unfortunately, there are many religious turncoats who, having pledged full allegiance to the Christian God and His service, afterwards rather lightly turn their loyalty away from God. Whatever term we use — backsliders, apostates, turncoats—the meaning is the same. Such have renounced their "first love" and fail to appreciate the wondrous blessings of being true to God. Their number is rather large. Yet again and again something happens that awakens them to their real senses. They, as the Prodigal Son, realize they have turned their backs upon their best Friend, who is still waiting to receive them back and have them start over.

To all spiritual turncoats there is waiting, not a prison term or severe punishment, but the kindly and forgiving love of God if they will but return to Him. Why should we ever be so careless as to leave our Father's house for the "far country"? "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

The Scarcest Thing in the World

Several days ago a Christian friend told the writer about his father's conversion.

"My father was a young man at the time, struggling to make his own way. One day an older man invited Dad to come to church, to attend his Bible class for young men.

" 'But I have no coat,' my father said.

"The older man bought my father a coat. Then Dad offered his lack of a Bible as an excuse for not attending the class. The older man provided the Bible too.

"I think that more than anything else," my friend concluded, "what that man did for my father led him to become a Christian. . . ."

Yesterday I met a grad student who recently moved out of a comfortable residence near the university to another section of the city to room with a young man who is a drug addict. His purpose: To bring the Truth who frees to his new roommate.

Grades in graduate school are hardly enhanced by the frenetic life which is—unfortunately—a concomitant of rooming with a drug addict. Nor is giving away coats likely to build up a bank account.

Some of today's Christians might even question using "the Lord's" money to purchase an overcoat as a gift (unless it was for a professional Christian worker) on two counts: (1) The money might be better given toward a Christian worker's support or some other "distinctively Christian purpose"; and (2) if spent on an overcoat, the money would not be tax-deductible.

In some instances it almost seems as if the criterion of Christian giving is the gift's acceptability to the Internal Revenue Department, rather than its acceptability to the Lord. Today it is standard procedure for Christian organizations to carry the statement "Contributions are income tax-deductible" on their appeals, rather than "Inasmuch . . ." or "Where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt," or even "Give. and it shall be given unto you."

Our Lord had a very simple rule about giving: Keep it quiet. Don't even let your left hand know what your right hand is doing.

He also had a lot to say about giving coats and food and drink; caring for sick people; visiting prisoners; footing the hotel (or hospital) bill of a man who had been beaten up in a brawl. And he indicated that we shouldn't worry about being "imposed on"—the Christian's attitude should be characterized by willingness to go the second mile in walking, lending, giving.

But He warned us through His servant Paul that even though we give away all that we possess, it is not Christian giving apart from love.

Christian love is the scarcest thing in the world today. And we don't mean love for Christ, either, except indirectly. We mean love for other human beings, love that causes us to do something for them.

Perhaps we have gone to an extreme in warning against love for people as a motive in Christian service. In recent years missionary speakers have often said, in one way or another, "If you go out to the field because you want to do something for people who have a need, you'll fail. 'The love of Christ'—objective genitive, your love for Christ rather than for the people—must 'constrain' you."

Yet our Lord said that it was useless to talk about loving God unless we loved our brother. And He also said that some day Christians who have done things for other human beings will be surprised to learn that they have actually done something for Him. They will object that what they did was for sick people, for prisoners, that the things they gave were given to the hungry and the poor—not to the Lord. But He will then explain that gifts and service not consciously rendered to Him were accepted by Him when they were done out of a motive of love for the needy.

Today for reasons both external and internal it is more difficult for the Church to find occasions for Christian love than it was in previous generations.

In contemporary soicety, general philanthropy and governmental provision for the needy care for many areas of human need which in a former day were the Church's responsibility. The government's social security program takes care of widows and orphans, Red Feather (and kindred) drives supply money for hospitals and various other social agencies, the state makes provision for the insane and handicapped.

Although there are large gaps in the "cradle to the grave" program, they are not obvious to the person who is not involved either through profession or personal need. But one does not observe that the Church is particularly concerned with exposing and caring for these unmet needs.

Nor is the state's care always adequate. Suppose that you had a mentally retarded child or a senile parent who required institutionalization. Would you be satisfied with care which excludes the love of the Lord Jesus?

Of course Christian hospitals and orphanages, mental institutions (a few) and rescue missions continue to exist. But the trend is definitely in the direction—especially among distinctly biblical churches—of abdicating social responsibilities and concentrating upon a spoken message.

Every so often we become uneasy. Then we hold a conference to try to discover why the man who fell among thieves (or dope peddlers) is making no recovery as we preach to him.

The other reason for the difficulty the Church today faces in showing love is internal.

A student from Holland, temporarily at an American university, went to see the minister of the church he was attending after a Communion service.

"Why is it," he asked, "that you had no offering for the poor today after the Communion?"

The minister replied, "We decided to discontinue the offering for the poor since we have no poor people in the church."

Some Advantages of a Long-Term Pastorate

JOHN E. AMSTUTZ*

It is with considerable reluctance that I have become persuaded to write on this subject for publication. I am not sure that what I have to say will be of much benefit either to my fellow-ministers or to our many churches. I feel that this matter is of concern both to the ministry as well as the congregations and should be considered from both angles.

My long-term pastorate is not particularly due to any definite planning. It may have been caused more by a certain inertia on my part and a patient and longsuffering forbearance on the part of the local congregation. It may also be in the air in this particular locality. It so happens that in a nearby village a church of another denomination had the same pastor for 55 years. He came there as a student and stayed on for the rest of his active ministry. Also in a neighboring city a large congregation of still another denomination kept its pastor for 50 years until recently.

So what I have to say may be more in the nature of afterthoughts and rationalizing hindsight than a real and truly constructive contribution. Still I hope that there may be something of merit and value to be derived from some of the conclusions of my experience. There was a time as most of you know when a long-term, yes a life time ministry, was taken for granted in most of our churches. This, of course, has largely changed in our branch of the Mennonite church since the advent of a specially trained and salaried ministry. The Methodist church used to be known for its short-term pastorates but this is no longer so characteristic of it. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, who appeared recently on a TV panel discussion program was asked by the chairman how he managed to stay close to 40 years in the same church. His reply was that he did not have to move because his congregation itself changed very largely every few years. This is not quite so much the case here although partly so.

Whether a pastorate should be long or short depends somewhat on the personality and inclination of the minister as well as on the nature of the work that he is best fitted to do and the type of people and congregation to whom he ministers. Certain circumstances may also arise from time to time which would determine the advisability of a longer or shorter stay.

And now more specifically a few of the advantages under the three headings of the ministry, the community, and the church.

The first thing that comes to mind is that he is free from the anxious trouble and disturbance of frequent moving and the uprooting experience which is all too prevalent these days. In a longer pastorate he can make more far-reaching and fundamental plans. He does not feel compelled to make an immediate but sometimes superficial impact in order to succeed. He has time to feel his way and grow into more personal knowledge of and intimate relationship with his people. In many ways he thus becomes to be more one of them and to feel at home. He is also schooled more to have patience so as not to look for another place as soon as things do not seem to go quite right. In his work of preaching he has to put forth more effort to keep up in his studies and to pursue wider reading. He can not by going into a new field often depend, in part at least, to use what he has from the previous place. So this should help to keep him fresh, alert, and vital.

By living in the same community for a longer time he becomes better acquainted and better known. Thus he becomes more a real part of his community and its interests. He will in this way exert a greater influence and will more likely be called upon to serve in a larger way either in an official capacity or in other more general ways.

Perhaps it is not for the minister to say whether a long pastorate is an advantage to the church or not. But he should, at least, ask himself whether it is or can be and whether he is doing his part to make it so. Their spiritual welfare must always be his prayerful concern. There should be some compensations for any disadvantages that a long pastorate might have for them. One of them might be that they do not have to pay for so many movings nor for the renovation of the parsonage which sometimes accompanies each change. This, however, may be only a minor consideration. It should be of some satisfaction to have one's pastor more definitely a part of the community and more intimately and lastingly familiar with the experiences and needs of his own people. It should surely promote a better understanding and a more helpful service to all groups and ages. It also seems that it should serve the purpose of making the members more responsible and stable and of keeping them from expecting a change of ministry as soon as some dissatisfaction, disagreement, or misunderstanding arises.

The final advantage that I wish to cite may to some seem to go more with a short-term pastorate. To say the least it should always be desired and found. I believe it should be cultivated by both pastor and people and a long pastorate may and can be helpful. This is what I mean. It is not the pastor or the preacher for whom one belongs to the church and attends its services but it is to worship and serve God. The minister is not the head of the church but it is Christ, our Lord and Redeemer, who is the real head.

These are a few advantages that have come to my mind as I have thought the matter over. Some of them may not appeal at all to some of the readers. Some, undoubtedly, could and would mention others that have been overlooked. It is hoped that the cause of Christ and His Church will in some way be helped by these few thoughts and reflections from a long-term ministry and pastorate.

Postscript by Mrs. J. E. Amstutz:

As to a long-term pastorate, I might say that like many other things, it has two sides. Some pastors

Toward Greater Service at Brook Lane

The Christian ministry is one of teaching, preaching, and healing. This was the task which Christ left with His disciples.

Included in this ministry is the care and treatment of the mentally ill. For Mennonites this field of service seems to hold a unique responsibility. Out of the experiences of their young people in state mental hospital service came the definite conviction that Christian love is an effective ingredient in a psychiatric program.

This led to the opening of Brook Lane Farm near Hagerstown, Md., in 1949. The beginnings of this first Mennonite effort in the United States to provide institutional services for the mentally ill were small. A 23-bed, one-story hospital building was erected. An old stone house and temporary barracks used by Civilian Public Service men were renovated for office, dormitory, dining room-kitchen, and chapel facilities.

During these first six years many persons have found restored health, peace of mind, and a new outlook on life through hospitalization. Approximately 1,300 patients have been admitted. Others have been aided through the hospital's outpatient services.

Its services have not been limited to Mennonites. In fact, more than 80 per cent of those who have benefited from the highly-personalized services of Brook Lane's Christian, homelike facilities have been non-Mennonites.

This ministry of restoring health and helping ill people return to useful living has been effected in limited facilities. Now, however, Brook Lane Farm has come to the place where its buildings and equipment are no longer adequate to meet the demands for its services. Buildings not originally created for hospital use have been developed beyond reasonable limits. Six years of experience have pointed up the type of permanent facilities needed for an ongoing program. As Brook Lane seeks to fulfill its role as an effective servant of the Church, these needs must be met:

1. More dining room-kitchen space—The original dining room-kitchen in the farm house no longer accommodates the demands of the patient roll which has grown from an original 23 to a present 38 as well as those of a correspondingly-enlarged staff. Continued close patient-staff fellowship in the dining hall, as elsewhere at Brook Lane, is essential to the success of the program.
2. Housing for staff members—Present dormitory-type living quarters (some of them temporary CPS structures) are not satisfactory for permanent staff members—a requirement for the long-term success of the hospital program. The present staff is crowded into space inadequate for even short-term personnel.
3. Better treatment facilities—Another wing to the present 38-guest hospital will provide needed facilities to segregate patients on the basis of illness and thus make better treatment possible. While this wing will increase the hospital capacity by 15 beds, its main purpose is to meet the demand for a broader-type treatment program.

The plan to meet these needs calls for $75,000 by April, 1956, and for $125,000 for longer-term construction and development. Mennonite, Brethren in Christ, and Amish groups east of the Ohio-Pennsylvania border including our own General Conference Eastern District have accepted responsibility for this

During its first six years of service, Brook Lane Farm has provided Christian, home like facilities for the treatment of our own mentally ill as well as for a large number of persons from other church groups. At the right is the hospital building. The tall stone house to the left contains the dining room-kitchen urgently requiring larger facilities. Other buildings at the left are Civilian Public Service barracks used as dormitory, laundry, chapel, and offices.

Flashes of Thought

Unqualified Faithfulness

Guest Writer: P. K. Regier

The mother hen sat faithfully upon her brood of eggs. That is what you would expect her to do. But this was different. It was the morning after the night in which the tornado had destroyed the entire city of Udall, Kansas. The mortuary of a neighboring town was filled to capacity so that the undertaker refused to accept any more of the fatalities which had resulted during that fateful night.

We stopped on the edge of town where the storm had also done its damage. Most of the roof had been torn from the house. What was left appeared like a huge mouth gaping hungrily toward the empty sky. The farmer told us that he and his wife had survived the catastrophy of the night in that very house, and had they attempted to seek refuge in the nearby storm cave, they would no longer be among the living. And a glance to the entrance of the cave convinced us of the truthfulness of his words, for the heavy gales had seen fit to dash splinters and heavy timbers right into the doorway.

"But look there," said the farmer as he pointed to a setting turkey hen only a few yards from the destroyed home. Debris was all around her. Every square foot of the yard bore silent evidence of the destructive fury of the storm. But there she sat with her large wings draped protectingly over the eggs out of which should in due time come the newness of life. And her only protection was the slender trunk of a small tree from which every limb had been torn by nature's demolishing power.

The faithfulness of a mother hen to her entrusted charge spoke in eloquent, though silent tones. Surely this message without words had a sobering effect on us who so often are filled with fear and anxiety over the charge which has been put into our keeping.

Here is the Church of Jesus Christ to whose service we are committed. She too is exposed to the storms which through the ages have swept over her. Outward foes have attacked her and have again and again sought to destroy her. And within "by schisms rent asunder, by heresies distressed."

If a mother hen can stick to her job even though ruin and destruction descend upon her, how much more should we who stand in the service of the Church, regarding which Jesus gave the unfailing promise "Even the gates of hell shall not prevail against her."

expansion and development of Brook Lane Farm. Uniting our efforts, we are looking to our Mennonite Central Committee to operate a mental hospital program which none of us could carry on alone. Our prayers and gifts are needed to continue and to increase the effectiveness of this Christian ministry to the mentally ill.

We Walked Where They Walked

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

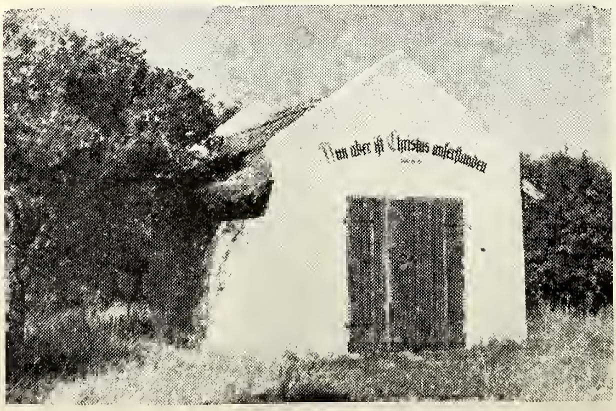
We two poor North Americans had almost lost a love for walking. For our own good, we have worn out too many tires and too few shoes. True, we had tried, in dry weather, to walk the less than one-half mile between the parsonage and church on Sunday mornings and Wednesday evenings. But evidently we had not been convincing enough to members of Emmaus Mennonite Church. Well-meaning churchgoers continued during our five year stay to offer us rides to church.

Sitting and riding we had all but lost feeling with those of other lands who need to walk.

During the past several months, in which incidentally we have neglected to make further contributions to the columns of The Mennonite, we have walked more miles per day than ever before. We have been visiting from home to home in our pioneering settlements toward the interior of Uruguay. Because of these almost daily exhilarating walks, we have felt more relaxed, we have eaten and slept better, for we walked where they walked. And now that winter has come, with morning temperatures near the freezing point, we walk for very practical reasons.

On Sunday mornings before the services we have watched people, singly or in groups, slowly converging on the central place of meeting, some on improvised horse-drawn carts, a few on tractors, but most of them walking. Before the evening services we have watched the centripetal and centrifugal motions pinpointed by many lanterns.

One morning as we walked out to make several calls we found a widow with her young son busy shelling corn which they laboriously picked and sacked in the field. As we helped them turn the sheller and again sack the corn and cobs we saw in her glistening eyes responsive expressions of understanding and appreciation. Each of us, in the providence of God, had also been asked to walk our respective ways alone. The difference remained that this widow could not walk to a grave side. The terrible war had left him merely missing. Many, still, let us remember, are the Mennonite widows who continue walking and working alone with their children.



The "Totenhalle" at El Ombu.

Our most natural contacts have often been made along the roads or on the fields, listening to their tales of weal and woe. Such persons often proved to be the most attentive listeners at the services. Confidence is built by sharing everyday experiences.

Among the many never-to-be-forgotten experiences are those of a certain Mrs. Anna Regehr who lived with her son and family near Trinidad. On our first visit to this home we were told that grandmother had walked to bring lunch to her two grandsons who were plowing for wheat on the vast Estancia Tideman. She loved to work in the garden, to peel potatoes, to clean the lamps and stoves. On the following Sunday noon, after a service with Mennonite families living on this ranch, she enjoyed a rabbit and prairie chicken dinner with us. Only a week later she spent two days at the highway waiting for another son and family who were moving from the El Ombu to the new Delta colony. She wanted to see them as they came by with their belongings on the large semi-trailer. But rains had delayed the transport so that it did not go till the following day. Two days later she came in from the garden, reclined on her bed, and in a few moments had left her loved ones to be at home with her Lord. We had been impressed with her calm confident faith.

In Uruguay burials must be made within twenty-four hours. A truck had been hired to bring the earthly remains of dear grandmother, together with relatives and friends, the 100 kilometers to El Ombu. It was near sundown on a Saturday evening that the near relatives were standing around the casket in the thatch covered "Totenhalle" as the minister, Gustav Reimer, spoke Scriptural words of comfort and hope. Above the door of the small building, nestled in a large orange and tangerine orchard, are the words. "Nun aber ist Christus Auferstanden," (1 Cor. 15:20).

What a treasury of memorized hymns these people have! As one of these was sung we walked through the orchard to the burial place. Loving hands lowered the casket into the cool ground. After another brief service of song, Scripture, and prayer, the near relatives each dropped a handful of earth on the casket, men of the colony helped to cover the grave, and each of the women who had attended this family to the grave side (and there were many of them) laid beautifully made wreaths and sprays of garden flowers on the grave.

Our thoughts dwelt on Him Who once walked among men, Jesus our Savior and Lord, with Whom saints now walk in the light of His Eternal Presence.

Word From China

H. J. BROWN*

Below follows a letter from our missionary friend Dr. K. at Peking. He is eighty-two years old and hopes to live and work for the Lord another ten years. His wife is a Chinese woman. Two of their children are in America, but the younger son stays with his parents. Mrs. K. is much younger than he, and by profession is a nurse. Every few months we receive a letter, so that for three or four years we thus have kept contact with them and the Christian work in that locality of China. The Christian students of the Yen T'sing University meet in the Peking Union Church, which is close to Dr. K.'s residence. They meet every Saturday night for prayer and Sunday up to twelve noon for worship. They so crowd the church building that even with chairs in the aisles not all can find seats. Twice a year on summer vacation and on New Year vacation the students arrange for a two-week Bible study conference. Around two hundred and forty register and attend regularly, then too, others drop in as they find time. These young Christian people believe in prayer. For hours they will besiege the throne of God for the salvation of their friends. But here is the last letter written on May 28, 1955:

"Dear Friends: I gather that you do not receive all of my notes. I am sorry, but this can not be avoided. Your letter of a fortnight ago has just been read. We are very pleased to hear from you again. You are often on my thoughts—with a wish that you could be with us in the several oases. (Districts of work and influence). It would be a great joy to you to join us, and you would be of untold help to the CHRISTIANS. As you cannot 'come over and help us,' I am sure that you often remember His work out here in prayer. I cannot go into details. While it is well in the oases, that cannot be said of all places (in the land). We are going through a time of transition. Very difficult experiences for some of the Christians. (The Christians in your field cannot meet in church buildings, but they meet in the homes of believers.) Of course this city is very different from others. It is unlikely that I would be tolerated in any other. But here I am among friends. If you do not receive my notes, I hardly know where to start or stop. But I will repeat one thought. The gist of it will be of help to you. You will be pleased to know, that the friends in the large city on the Island to the south of here continue to keep the account. They purchase and forward to me the desired Scriptures. First monthly, afterwards fortnightly, then weekly. Now oftener. We hope that they shall continue to arrive as in the past.

I think I mentioned that the Bible with the SHEN character was sold out more than a year ago. "Liberation" found the Bible society with not a large stock in reserve. The day may come, when I shall ask the friends over there to send me the Chinese Scriptures. I hope not soon; but the trend of events is such, that the Bible Society in this land will not be able to print the desired WORD in the near future. Their sales do not meet expenses. Too, there are not any funds to purchase the materials and pay the expenses of printing. As you know, for at least several decades the Bible Society has worked with a subsidy from your side. That has not been available in recent years. Too, I will repeat, that, so far as I know, there is not another foreign (or R.C.) Protestant worker in the broad land. All have either been chased out or are where they cannot function as spiritual leaders. That is the more important, that we make the best of our present opportunities. You help to make it possible for us to do so. He will reward you for your co-operation. (We sent some funds to the Treasurer, Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City 10.)

In our several oases, all of our co-workers are voluntary helpers. Voluntary assumptions of some of the burdens of this suffering world is the touchstone of a person's religious sincerity. A true Christian always cares, cares enough to make his faith result in facts. We are again sending Scriptures to 'oases five and six.' They are strongly bound, on good paper, with clear type. They will endure daily usage for years. It is well to remember a thought from William Tindale: 'It is impossible to establish the lay people in any truth, except the Scripture is plainly laid before their eyes in their mother tongue.' With the help of you friends, that is what we are trying to do, both with Chinese and Mongolian Scriptures, plainly laid before their eyes.

Christianity has never had such an opponent before: but we have the antidote-remedy. It will be slow in taking effect. But, if we are faithful to our day and generation, the effort will be satisfactory to Him. I repeat: Our Bibles contain truths indispensible to the perpetuation of Christian civilization. But these truths have not yet been made fully available for the use for which they were intended.

If you friends could borrow my ocular and auditory nerves, you too would be grieved for the afflictions of 'Joseph.' I cannot go into details. The 'roaring lion' never rests. His efforts follow the hands of the clock.

It would be a great joy to you to visit the oases, and see for yourself, what the Lord is doing there. We sow the seeds, that is preach the Word, and trust the Holy Spirit to add His blessings. It is marvelous, what the dear Lord does through His redeemed here in the land. Now, you may share these stray thoughts with any of your friends, as you think best. We need your prayers before the throne of Grace.

His best to each of you."

Pax Pilgrimage to Palestine

CHARLES YODER

On February 1, 1955, 49 PAX men and fellow MCC workers embarked on the AGEMEMMON in Venice. We were starting our PAX Pilgrimage to Palestine. In Athens, after meeting the PAX men from Greece, we were soon in our buses and heading for the Acropolis. Here at the base of the Acropolis stands the well-preserved temple of Hephaistos, 2,405 years old. We visited the Parthenon, the Temple of Erechtheum, with its Porch of the Maidens, plus other temples erected here when Greece was in her glory. Near the Acropolis is Mar's Hill where Paul gave his message to the Athenians. We all tried to imagine where he stood for this occasion. At the base of the hill is a plaque of his sermon, in Greek.

Beirut, Lebanon, was the next stop. There strange oriental music pours from the open cafes, women in embroidered veils with high heeled shoes, Arabs in fezzes, Bedouins in flowing headdress, stand out in sharp contrast to honking Chryslers and modern business suits.

The sights through Syria to Damascus well illustrated what we were to see throughout the Near East. Hills barren of vegetation, stones in ample supply, oxen yoked together pulling the wooden plow, mud brick villages and extremely poor people in love with the land which has been in the family for generations. In Damascus we try to envision the apostle Paul walking down the Street called Strait, or visiting in the House of Ananias. We saw the window in the wall through which Paul escaped in a basket, but it could have been one of the many windows elsewhere along the wall.

We are now in Jericho. Sitting here on the Mount of Temptation we remember Christ being tempted by Satan after the long fast in the wilderness. From here we look across the entire Jordan Valley and see practically the same things Christ saw 2,000 years ago. Below us lies ancient Jericho where excavations are still being carried on to find the original wall which fell after Joshua and Israel marched around the city seven times and blew the trumpets. Beside this mound of dirt called ancient Jericho is Elisha's Fountain which waters all the oasis of modern Jericho. According to 1 Kings, Elisha sweetened this fountain with a handful of salt. Women by the hundreds come here with pitchers on their heads to get the daily supply of water, just as they have done for the past 3,000 years. In the middle of this valley the muddy Jordan River winds its way toward the Dead Sea, which is off to our right. There along the Jordan about a mile from the sea is the supposed spot where John the Baptist baptized Jesus. This afternoon 49 PAX'ers held a short service there. The biblical account was read and music was provided by the PAX octet, after which every head was bowed in prayer. Christ, born in a stable and baptized in this muddy stream, seemed very real at this moment.

Below us are two large refugee camps, poorly housing 35,000 Arab refugees. These people lost all they possessed when fleeing the newly-created state of Israel in the war of 1948. The creating of this state caused a tremendous upheaval in the plight of the Arab and at a great cost to him in loss of his home and land. Thousands were forced to leave their land which had been in the family for countless generations with the hope of returning in a few days. Today, seven years after the armistice, they still remain in tent refugee camps. Here they sit merely existing on meager UNRWA rations, and waiting . . . waiting in complete idleness to return to their homes across the border.

In Jerusalem we walked in antiquity when visiting the famous holy places. The temples of Solomon and Herod are built on the spot over Mount Moriah, where Abraham offered Isaac. Going via Dolorosa, the road by which Christ is said to have traveled on His way to Golgotha, our minds were directed anew to that incident in His life.

From Jerusalem we flew over the land of the Edomites with their city of Petra buried in the mountains. As we flew over the Sinai desert we discovered that we were taking the exact route the children of Israel took centuries before. How nice it was to fly over this wilderness in a few hours, instead of taking 40 years.

Our 40-hour stay in Cairo proved to be much too short. The pyramids, more mosques, museums, and the sphinx were as we see in many pictures, good monuments to past civilizations.

Once more out on the Mediterranean waves, homeward bound, the 49 "Pilgrims" gathered on the sunny deck to review and evaluate their visit to the Holy Land. In an informal discussion, tour members shared their thoughts, many remarking that biblical expressions, names and places had now become real to them. Everyone seemed to agree that the PAX Pilgrimage to Palestine was more than a vacation—it was a spiritual experience.

MINISTER'S EQUIPMENT

After commenting on educational requirements for ministers, the current Encyclopedia Britannica notes that: "Principal qualifications are good health, intellectual ability, moral integrity, a desire to serve, breadth of knowledge and understanding, spiritual conviction, love of humanity, and poise. These personal attributes are necessary inasmuch as the clergyman serves variously as preacher, leader of worship, teacher of education, pastor, social worker, and executive."

Quoting these sentences, the organ of the Toledo Council of Churches asks wonderingly: "Does anyone want to apply for this job?"

Go Happy Vacationing

"Whither shall I flee from thy presence?" Psalm 139:7.

This is the time for vacations. People are talking of "getting away from it all." With good cars and beautiful highways it is something to look forward to; and it is good to "get away"; "All work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy." Vacations are necessary today because of the tempo of living: there is, after all, quite a difference between the ox team and the self-propelled combine; between having one horse in the shafts or 185 under the hood. Although Christians take life seriously, they are nevertheless to be happy. The Israelites rested after a certain period of labor; Jesus went into the mountains alone with His disciples. Christians are encouraged to be physically fit through periods of labor and of rest. So vacations are quite in order for Christians.

There are many different ways of taking a vacation. One is to take a cot and an aeteskauste (lunch box) along; another is to go motelling; another is to go Mennoniting. Then there are those who find joy in driving further in one day than they have ever driven before, and if the car used less gas than usual it is a good subject for conversation when they return. And then there are those who take their vacation at home, or in a park on a Sunday afternoon with the family.

Whatever way of vacationing a man may prefer, one thing holds true for every one: we cannot "get away from it all," for wherever we go "it all" comes right along with us. The man who can invest something whereby people can take a vacation from living with themselves will get rich over night. Our problems are ever with us, though we may forget them for awhile on a holiday trip. They wait for us at home; the anxiety, the daily grind, the little tensions. What is to be done?

David tried to run away from God and in despair said Whither can I flee from thy presence? He was running the wrong way. When we run away from God our problems multiply. A vacation helps to restore our energy and enthusiasm, but no amount of vacationing will reconcile us to God if we are not right with Him. We cannot run to a place where He is not. We might as well face Him at home. And when we have peace with Him we will enjoy our vacation much more because He will go along. Then too, homecoming will be fun. And in the daily routine of a whole year before another vacation is due He will help solve those tensions which come to all who sincerely try to follow Him in a friendly yet hostile world.

So—happy vacationing. When you pack the road map don't forget the Bible. And a checkbook may be helpful too!

Ruestzeit at Dusseldorf

The recent Easter youth retreat in Dusseldorf, Germany, proved eventful for each of the 80 youths who participated in the long week end of talk and fellowship. Cornelius Wall and Paul Pulver showed themselves adequate in the tasks of not only keeping interest high, but also in imparting understanding of a way of life—the Way of life found in and through Christ. (Paul Pulver is a Mennonite teacher from the Jura Mountains in Switzerland). There were smiles, yet for many of the youth, along with this gaiety was felt a surprising depth which probed for meaning of the topics being discussed. Communication was good as was the fellowship, especially when one of the topics burst open upon all present, entitled: "Why are we still Mennonites?"

"Are we still Mennonites?" "Should we still be Mennonites?" and other related questions were brought into focus. Soon so many pieces were being tossed about that there could be no common agreement. Some were not entirely sure that the present church has a right to exist. Some thought that the Mennonite Church of Germany has a right to exist because it is a "church," one of many, each as good as the other. One individual boldly stated that the Mennonite Fellowship has a special right to exist through a special commission of love and goodwill among men. And so the time to close had arrived.

Will these youths continue to ponder life until a basis of agreement is reached bordering on the Anabaptist interpretation of Scripture? Or is there not enough stimulus and leadership of the right consistency to compel the youth through to a completed agape-love defined in the words and actions of Christ?

Mennonite youth in Germany have ideas. The youth groups which are being organized by the Mennonitische Jugendkommission are going forward in intensity and positiveness. With world conditions unsettled, with Germany in the midst of decision, and with the German mind never indifferent or unconcerned, conclusions will be met, whether right or wrong. Therefore at this time a great challenge weighs upon those who assume the task of leadership, one which is far from light. What do those as Americans have which is positive for Germany? What do the Germans need to strengthen one another? It is this which one should hope to give, this and no more. Again that which had been taken for granted needs to be re-thought and re-talked, so that along with the future Duesseldorf retreats can also come the possible realization of a more closely united Mennonitism with a Christian flavor.

Closed Doors Open in Austria

A historical event of great and world-wide importance occurred May 15, 1955, when the four powers occupying Austria signed the document giving Austria her independence. For 17 years this little country so rich in music, folk lore, and historical events has been dominated by other countries—first by Germany when Hitler invaded it in 1938, and then after World War II by the four great powers—United States, Great Britain, France, and Soviet Russia.

It is the first time in Communist history that Soviet-occupied territory was voluntarily relinquished.

The free peoples of peace-loving nations fairly gasp at the implication of such a move; new hope arises in the hearts of peoples of like circumstances as those of Austria, that the "Iron Curtain" might possibly roll back farther and relieve the oppression of thousands more; church organizations and relief agencies are ready and eager to rush spiritual and material aid to such peoples. A depressed, spiritually lean, hungry, and poorly-clothed people await such relief. 48,000 anti-Communist refugees will find refuge in the confines of Austria. One point of the 38 articles of the Austrian peace treaty forbids Communist repatriation of displaced persons.

What does this event mean to freedom-loving, peace-minded, Christian peoples of the world who have compassionately prayed that this might happen in Austria as well as elsewhere? Isn't this a real challenge for material and spiritual aid to be given to a people to whom for so many years it was denied? When closed doors open, MCC as a relief agency is standing ready to enter.

Within the fringe of the Hammer and Sickle-dominated sector of Vienna, MCC now has its relief center. Also in the same area a PAX—Brethren Service Commission project is in operation restoring a war-damaged Protestant school building. MCC is on the threshold ready to bring relief to the now free Austrian people as soon as withdrawal of occupation forces begins.

A STEWARDSHIP PRAYER

O Father, may it never be said of us who are Thy stewards that, having come to an open door we closed it, having come to a lighted candle, we quenched it, having heard the voice of the neighbor begging bread we made denial, speaking of our own ease and the children who are with us in the house. Rather may Thy great gifts to us, both of means and of opportunity, work in us Thy will, and may we become, for Jesus' sake, Thy perfectly faithful stewards.

—Jean Mackenzie

Are You Going to the Retreat?

This question could be answered quite simply with a 'yes' or 'no.' Suppose we ask ourselves this question. Most of us would answer in the affirmative, with varying answers, "Yes I want to go, but it costs too much." "Sure I'm going, but I don't like being supervised throughout the whole week end."

Now let's ask ourselves; "Why am I going to the retreat?" "Well, I want a holiday" or "My friends are all going so I'm going along to have a good time." On the surface these thoughts may have their justification if measured by the carnal mind. Then, too, there are many personal dislikes which are encountered. Experience has taught us that there are many things to be wished for at our retreats, nevertheless, these attitudes bypass the real purpose of the retreat and if persistently dwelt upon certainly minimize the positive aspects that our retreat presents today.

Personally, I enjoy my holidays and good times, but that does not excuse me from my responsibilities of discipleship. Is our Lord one "friend" for whom there is no room to go along? Do we feel ill at ease when He is in the crowd? In such instances it is hardly possible to enjoy a retreat. They are not geared that way. The retreat affords relaxation, recreation, and fellowship with God and His children, in His great out-of-doors. This is its prime purpose, that a retreater feels that he has been inwardly enriched by blessings from God. It is a vital part of a young person's life and his interest or attitude toward it could be compared with his attitude toward his church and its functions.

An Essay on Giving

Does the Bible mean "just gently requested," when it says, "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required?"

Should we give as we want from our pockets? No. That is not what the Bible says.

It shall be required, whether we like it or not. And if we don't give generously to build society, it shall be taken from us—and also the destruction of it.

We may not like it, but there it is. That's one of the things the Bible is. It's a lab manual. If you follow it, if you test it, you will find it true.

TWO FAMILIES COME TO AMERICA UNDER RRA

Two Mennonite-sponsored families, the Anis Haddad's of Jordan and Erwin Schmidt's of Germany, have been visaed to come to America under the special refugee program called RRA.

The Anis Haddad family docked in New York on July 13. They were the first MCC arranged persons admitted under the Refugee Relief Act and the first RRA Jordan issued visa family. The Mennonite Church of Scottdale, Pennsylvania, is sponsoring the Haddad's, and Mr. Haddad will work at the Mennonite Publishing House at Scottdale.

The Erwin Schmidt's received their visa in June and plan to come to America early this fall. The Schmidt's were formerly of Poland, but have been living in Germany as refugees for ten years. Milo F. Yoder of Millersburg, Indiana, is sponsoring this family. Mr. Schmidt will work as a welder at the Star Tank and Boat Co., in Goshen, Indiana.

If you can guarantee employment and housing for a refugee family, you also may sponsor someone under this new Refugee Act. Write to Mennonite Aid Section of the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania, to express your interest in this program.

REPORT OF MATERIAL AID SHIPPED

During the first six months of the MCC fiscal year (December through May), material aid shipped throughout the world totaled 1070 tons or $738,700. This included shipments of food and clothing to Austria, Formosa, France, Germany, Indochina, Java, Jordan and Korea.

$550,140 or 75 per cent of this total aid distributed still goes to feed the hungry. The refugees of Jordan received the largest shipment of food.

Included in these shipments were 837 tons of powdered milk, cheese, butter, butter oil, cottonseed oil and shortening which the American government is still granting free to MCC wherever they can be used in the foreign programs. The MCC constituency contributed 139 tons of food and 98 tons of clothing which was shipped during this period.

It is our prayer that this food and clothing given "in the name of Christ" may speak to the world of a Savior who came to teach men of the love of God.

A STORY OF GROWTH

Recently one of our PAX men in Germany requested the MCC treasurer's office to contribute $10 per month from his personal drawing account to the Elkhart, Indiana, office. This is his share in contributing to Elkhart's support of the PAX program—the channel for Mennonite contributions to MCC.

The decision of this young man to support the PAX program further is expressive of the vision which is growing in the PAX units. To see the gratitude and thanksgiving of the refugees for whom the houses have been built; to see the growing understanding between the German Mennonites and the American men; to see the new sense of direction which many of the PAX men have gained while in service—this challenges the Christian to support the PAX program. Thus, this young man who is receiving $10 per month while in PAX work turns around and asks to contribute $10 per month toward the growth of the PAX program.

A GIFT FOR KOREA

The Women's Auxiliary of the Monterey Church, Bird-in-Hand, Pennsylvania, recently contributed a new floor covering for the widow's sewing project in Korea.

Since there are many widows in South Korea who have no means of earning a living, MCC has sponsored a project to teach some of them to sew. The women are first taught how to make clothes. Then MCC helps them to buy sewing machines with the money they earn and helps them to go into business for themselves. Clara Eshleman, Harrisonburg, Virginia, MCC worker in Taegu, has recently been assigned to direct this work.

Film Review

THE TOYMAKER, 16*mm.,* 15 minutes, rental $7.50. Visual Education Service, 22 South State Street, Elgin, Illinois.

This film can definitely be recommended for use in a church family night if there is time for discussion.

The toymaker with the help of two puppets illustrates how surface differences lead to human conflict. The film will make sense on a very simple level for children and will enable them to make helpful deductions. Actually however it can also be interpreted on a more profound level. The story demonstrates not only the factors that lead to conflict but also the principles that lead to harmony and peace. Although there is no mention of biblical and Christian aspects yet in a symbolic way the toymaker represents God and the puppets mankind. Good discussion leading is essential because this comparison has its limitations. EME.

Into the Beyond

PETER C. FRANZ, of Goessel, Kansas, and member of the Alexanderwohl Church, was born in Russia, August 20, 1870, and died May 26, 1955.

JOHN BECKER, member of the First Mennonite Church, Aberdeen, Idaho, was born September 5, 1867, and died May 23, 1955.

ABEL J. KRABILL was born in Mont Billiard, France, July 21, 1874. Joined the Mennonite Church in Sterling, Ohio, later transferred to the First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio. He was a banker, and taught the Men's Bible Class for many years. Died, July 1, 1955.

MRS. MARY A. HAUCK, member of the First Mennonite Church of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and a guest in the Mennonite Home for the Aged, Frederick, Pennsylvania, passed away June 17, at the age of 99 years, 9 months, and 8 days.

Later, when he related the incident, the Dutch student commented that he had noticed in this country that the biblical churches usually seem to have few —if any—poor people in attendance at the services. To him American congregations seem to be largely made up of upper middle-class people.

Christ came, we read, to preach the gospel to the poor. It can only be a cause for grave concern when Christians lose their love for the poor. Christ came to heal the brokenhearted. What then of a "Christian" church in which a man can come to the end of his rope without any Christians being aware of his difficulty, or concerned if they are aware?

But regardless of internal and external factors which make it more difficult for the Church to show love in our day, love is the Christian's greatest need. And the absence of corporate occasions for showing love only emphasizes the need for personal love . . . love that will act, love that will give—even love that will occasionally be taken to the cleaners and yet come back for more.

Maybe the drug addict won't be converted.

This will still not diminish the two joys: the joy of obeying Christ when He said to love men if we claim to love Him; and the joy of knowing that "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." —Copyright 1955 by "HIS" magazine of IVCF. SOME ADVANTAGES OF A LONG-TERM PASTORATE work fast and like to go from place to place. Others work more slowly and find their way into people's hearts from year to year. To prove a man's character clean and honest may take a long time.

Mr. Amstutz has become well known to the community and to Middletown as well. Ministers here have come and gone by the dozen but he gets into the good graces of them all. Just recently a minister remarked, "The doors are all open to Rev. Amstutz in Middletown." No doubt a bit exaggerated but true in general, I feel free to say. A long-term pastor becomes one of his congregation, knows his people, and their children grow up under his leadership, and even their grandchildren.

The medal he received from Miami University may also prove what his long term here has meant.

(The medal referred to was granted Rev. Amstutz by Miami University "in recognition of long years of unselfish devotion to the interests of his fellow citizens, as a minister and as a leader in the religious and educational activities of the communities he has served." The University has over 2200 alumni and each year grants medals to three members. Ed.)

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kan.: Every Saturday a group of young people go to the Trusdale area in Newton to conduct a recreational story hour for the children of that area. The marriage of Dora Duerksen to Ronald Unruh took place June 1, and that of Edward Reimer to Barbara Wagner June 26. Funeral services were conducted for B. B. Wedel, June 12, for Mrs. Jacob J. Schmidt, June 5, and for Mrs. H. R. Schmidt on June 29. Our congregation sent 42 linen kits, 35 sheet blankets, and 14 cover blankets to Udall, Kan., the tornado-stricken area. Evangelistic meetings were held jointly with the surrounding churches June 5-12 with Irvin Wedel of Jackson, Miss., as speaker. Five young people from our church are in Voluntary Service this summer. The young people followed the invitation of the young people of Tabor Church for a joint C. E. program, June 19. The adult C. E. had a musical program for the month of June.—Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kan.: In April, "The Christian in Business" Conference was held in our church. A few of the questions discussed were: "What can our church do toward bringing Christian ethics to bear on all our vocations?" "What can a businessman do for his community and church?" "In what sense are we stewards as Christian employers?" Eleven children were brought for consecration on Mother's Day. May 22 we observed Holy Communion. The evening of May 29 the Women's Joint Mission Society showed the film "Workers Together with God." Sixty-two Christmas bundles and 33 linen kits were taken to MCC office in June. —Mrs. Walter Lindteigen, Corr.

—Hanston Church, Hanston, Kan.: The Menno Edigers have moved into the parsonage, and plan to serve our church for a year at least. Mr. Ediger also plans to teach a rural school in the country this winter. The E. E. Hirschlers are moving to Dodge City this winter where he will teach in the high school. Our Mission Society had a special program on Sunday evening, June 19, in connection with the presenting of prepared Christmas bundles. As a part of the program Mrs. Menno Ediger reviewed the book "But Not Forsaken," by Ruth Brenneman.—Mrs. Marvin Miller, Corr.

—Mennonite Community Church, Fresno, Calif.: On June 5, our pastor, P. J. Ediger, attended the Pacific District Conference at Monroe, Wash. Our Church became officially a member of the Conference. June 12 the Bethel College Ensemble was in charge of our worship service. Their singing was most inspirational; also the message by one of the students, James Waltner. June 19, our pastor was ordained as elder by Aaron Epp of Reedley. John Esau brought the morning message. John Entz, a member of the P. D. C. Mission Board, read the Scripture lesson. June 26 we observed Holy Communion with Pastor Ediger in charge. Our building plans are progressing and we are looking forward to the time when we will have our own building so we can expand. Where we are building, a new housing area is being started, so there is opportunity for missions and expansion.—Mrs. J. J. Janzen, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Missionaries who visited our church were Marie Regier, former missionary to China, but recently working among the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay; Rev. and Mrs. Gerald Stucky from Colombia, South America; Cornelia Unrau from the Belgian Congo, and the Lubin Janzens from India. They laid upon our hearts the urgent need of a deeper interest in our missionary endeavors. Daily vacation Bible school was held with an enrollment of 94. Rev. Toews and Edwin Friesen, delegates to the Pacific District Conference gave interesting reports about the conference work. Ten young people were received into the church by the rite of baptism, and two joined by the right hand of fellowship. Several of our members have been seriously ill, but we are glad to report that all are able to be around again. The Jan Alma family from Germany, whom our church sponsored, left for Detroit, Mich., where they will make their home.—F. L. Wenger, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Freeman, S. D.: The special Bible lectures given by Dr. Hartzler from April 10-17 were profitably and well attended. Several numbers of his own composition, played by Harold Moyer, was our organ music on the morning of April 17. Funeral services for Thomas Satter were held Saturday, April 16. He passed away after several years of heart ailment. Joel Hofer from the K.M.B. Church sang a tenor solo for us on the morning of May 1. In the evening the Men's Chorus from the M.B. Church of this community were our special guests at our last Saenger Fest of the season and sang several numbers. Our pastor recently gave a series of sermons on the pioneers of the Early Church—Peter, Stephen, Barnabas, Paul, and James. Daily vacation Bible school was held May 31-June 10. A program was rendered by the school on the morning of June 12. Five young people were baptized and received into the church, and Communion Service was held May 29. A Fiftieth Anniversary Celebration took place June 5. Walter Gering, a former pastor, gave the morning sermon. After a fellowship meal at noon a musical program and talks by several former pastors were given. Also several letters from former pastors and members were read. The "Holy City" directed by Walter Jost was sung in the evening. James Wipf and Joyce Brookmueller were married June 7. Seven little children were consecrated June 19. The Henry Kliewers from Moencopi, Arizona, were with us in the evening showing pictures and telling of their work among the Indians. The funeral service for Dr. J. H. Wipf, age 70, was held June 24, with Rev. Hostetler in charge.—Ben J. Waltner, Corr.

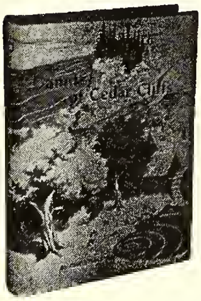
Here are three books with stories based on true experiences that you will enjoy.

By Christmas Carol Kauffman



Dannie of Cedar Cliffs

The story of Dannie was given voluntarily from his own lips, with the sole desire that his friends and his posterity might profit by his mistakes and successes. It was told with keen wit, drollery, pleasantry, and with seriousness, even genuine solemnity. The author's motive for writing this bibliographical narrative is threefold: to portray early Mennonite life, to show what part a layman can have in the progress and upbuilding of the church, and to preserve for others of this generation the story of heroic struggles of the fathers of the past generation in providing for us today the institutions which at present are so much a part of the life of the church. $2.75

Lucy Winchester

Christmas Carol Kauffman shares her keen understanding and appreciation of the Missouri life of which she writes in LUCY WINCHESTER. She has lived, worked, and prayed with the people who vividly live before us in this true story.

Through all the trials and defeats of life in a home with ungodly influences, through many personal difficulties of her own from her teens until at last she finds the God that satisfies her soul—Lucy will capture your sympathetic interest to the end.

This popular story has the right emphasis and has already been read and enjoyed by thousands. It will live in your memory as living testimony to the grace of God and His faithfulness in revealing himself to the earnest seeker.

Not Regina

Here is a story of doubt, reason, and faith worked out in a sixteenth-century setting. This is the stirring account of a teen-age girl whose family is shaken and torn by the religious conflict between the Swiss reformer, Ulrich Zwingli, and the Anabaptist leader, Conrad Grebel. This story of the faith and courage of the early Anabaptist followers with its tensions and conflict, its love and valor will carry you with avid interest to a moving, satisfying conclusion. $2.50

Montana Missions

Here is a short excerpt from a report about our mission work in Montana. This is from one local church only. We have reasons to be grateful for what our Lord has done and is doing through His servants. This is what Brother Missionary Habegger writes:

"The second quarter began with Palm Sunday and then Easter. On Palm Sunday two men were baptized, and on the 6th, a carry-in fellowship lunch was served, (Wednesday) and a very wholesome pre-communion prayer meeting was held, with many participating in prayer, and soul strengthening remarks. On the following evening we had the English Communion Service, and on Good Friday we had the Cheyenne Communion Service. At the English Communion Service 25 participated and at the Cheyenne Communion Service 30 took part. Others were present; children and a few grown folks who did not partake, mostly nonmembers."

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

There is no sorrow, Lord, too light
To bring in prayer to Thee;
There is no anxious care too slight
To wake Thy sympathy.

There is no secret sigh we breathe
But meets Thine ear divine;
And every cross grows light beneath
The shadow, Lord of Thine.

THE WRONG HYMN

"Once there was a Christian,
Who had a pious look;
His consecration was complete,
Except his pocketbook.

'He'd put a dollar in the plate,
And then with might and main
He'd sing, 'When we asunder part
It gives us inward pain.'"

—From a pamphlet by William M. Elliott, Jr.

PRAYER

"Be not afraid to pray: to pray is right:
Pray if thou canst with hope, but ever pray,
Though hope be weak and sick with long delay;
Pray in the darkness if there be no light;
And if for any wish thou dare not pray,
Then pray to God to take that wish away."

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

BUT IF NOT . . .

The three Hebrews who were threatened with the fiery furnace if they did not worship the idol of the king were confident that their God was able to deliver them. Furthermore, they felt confident that He would do so. Then came the significant statement—"But if not . . ."—they would still be true to Him and refuse to worship other gods.

Sometimes we are inclined to bargain with God. If He will deliver us, or meet our urgent request, then we will believe in Him and serve Him. But here were three loyal followers of God who would remain true to Him whether He would deliver them or not. We are reminded of the great words of the afflicted Job who, in his misery, cried out, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

This is heroic faith. To firmly believe in God and trust in Him regardless of what the outcome might be, is to have a loyalty that goes far beyond all idea of selfish bargaining.

Sometimes in sickness we promise God to do differently if He will heal us or our loved ones. Or if there is a great trial we will really serve God if He will remove the trial. But, by the grace of God, we may go beyond this sort of selfish faith. We may hope for deliverance, "but if not . . ." we will still be faithful and true to Him. Our faith does not depend on whether or not God does what we ask of Him, but regardless of what happens, we will not falter in our belief and loyalty. Here is a heroic trust in God that will not be shaken.

DO WE MEAN IT?

For some time our coins have carried the motto, "In God We Trust." Now a bill has passed to have these words placed also on all our paper currency, so that on all our money we use the phrase declaring our trust in God.

The same motto appears on our three-cent and eight-cent stamps. These are the ones most frequently used for home and foreign letters. A bill has also been introduced in Congress to require that this motto be placed on all stamps. Should this pass, every stamp and every piece of money would declare, "In God We Trust?"

But do we? Is there not something inconsistent in our huge war preparation and bomb development and paying for it with money declaring that our trust is in God? Other ways of money-spending may fail also to show that we really put our trust in God. Is there danger of trying to salve our conscience with a pious phrase, hoping thereby to cover over the obvious fact that we put our trust in material things without taking God into account?

We hope the motto does some good. We hope that as we handle our money and as we send and receive our mail we will take note of this inscription. If it will cause us to think, and return to God in greater trust, then it is well worth having this motto on all our money and stamps. But we can not help but wonder how God regards it.

GIVE THEM A FAITH TO LIVE BY

As a part of the "Religion in American Life" program, billboards are being erected along our highways picturing two eager children, with the slogan, "Give Them a Faith to Live by; Worship with Them This Week."

With all types of billboards along the road, it is a pleasant relief to see one that has a spiritual message. This one in particular touches a vital need in today's life.

Our children are often insecure and grow up without anything solid to build on. We owe it to them to give them a Faith to live by. Perhaps we lack such a faith ourselves. If so, then for the sake of the children, we need to nourish and cultivate a living faith in a living God.

Certainly our children should attend Sunday school and church every Sunday. But we should worship with them in the home as well as in the church, and show them the way to God. It is a matter of serious parental delinquency to neglect to provide our children with a living, working faith in God. Such failure on the part of the parents easily encourages juvenile delinquency. We should be even more concerned about our children's spiritual growth than we are with their physical and mental development. "Give Them a Faith to Live by."

WHAT SHALL WE READ?

Books of all kinds, good and bad, are pouring out of the publishing houses across the country. Evidently these books are bought and read, at least to some extent, or book publishers could not continue sending them out. Good books can be a great help and many an individual has been helped and blessed by the reading of some helpful volume.

But how can the good books be sorted out from the poor? And how may one know what good books are available? The average individual usually depends on someone else or on some reliable book review to learn about the right kind of books.

In this issue of "The Mennonite" we begin a column entitled, "BOOKMARKS." The purpose is to review some of the good books that are available. As in the feature, "Film Review," an honest effort is made to acquaint our readers with the better films, so in the book reviews we hope to present some of the worth-while books for the consideration of our readers.

Motive for Evangelism

"What Makes It Tick"

A. H. SCHULTZ*

Who of my masculine readers did not in his childhood days take a watch or clock apart to see what made it tick? It was quite easy to disjoint the intricate mechanism, but I wonder how many ever succeeded in making it work again?

The Committee on Evangelism met on June 28 and 29 at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, to consider ways and means of furthering Biblical Evangelism in our Conference Churches. A major concern of this Committee is the all-important matter of "Motivation or Incentive" for evangelism. It is relatively easy to propose methods, plans, suggestions and objectives. But these in themselves are not enough. We faced this question time after time: How can we get our constituency to literally take hold of this central God-ordained task in a larger way? How can we stimulate a more dynamic interest in Evangelism? Is there some spiritual tonic or prescription that can be prescribed which will put new vitality into this work? Is there some mystical formula that can be used to infuse new enthusiasm and zeal in our spiritual enterprises?

In the final analysis we concluded that unless our churches and their members today are motivated by the same spirit that motivated the Church after Pentecost, all methods and plans will fail of accomplishment and miss God's blessing!

The burden of this article is to lay the need of spiritual motivation in Evangelism on the heart of every pastor, church worker, and church member. How can we do this?

THE SPIRIT OF EVANGELISM IN THE EARLY CHURCH

A study of the early Church in the book of Acts reveals that it occupied itself with the fulfillment of Christ's Commission to spread the "Good News." Presenting the GOSPEL (DAS EVANGELIUM) had top priority in all its activities! Its leaders and members won others by presenting the claims of the risen Christ. Their spiritual pulse was the "spirit of Evangelism."

This writer is convinced that our Lord's plan for the Church hasn't changed. The spirit of Evangelism must be the spirit of the Church today. Do we have this outlook as we think of our church and its total work? Walter J. Main, of the Baptist Union of Scotland, writing a pamphlet entitled: "Evangelism—a Spirit" says: "The ministry of the Church is the proclamation of the Good Tidings which Christ now fulfills and can only fulfill through His Body which is the Church." "Evangelism must be the Church's outstanding characteristic. Only thus is she evangelistic. None can hold evangelical doctrines of our Faith and be disinterested in the specific work of bringing men to Christ."

We undertake now to set forth some Scriptural motives that should stimulate our evangelistic endeavors. May the Spirit of God use this effort to make them real in our experience and service.

FILLED WITH DIVINE LOVE

The early believers were filled with Divine Love. God's love which caused Christ to be sent into the world, had flooded their very beings. "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" said Paul in Rom. 5:5. No wonder he states in another place: "The love of Christ constraineth (overmasters) us." The same love that God revealed in Christ toward a lost world, was saturating those who had given themselves to Christ so that they too had the same attitude toward a sinful world that God had toward it. This is not human, but divine motivation. Do we as 20th century believers possess this?

CHRIST-CENTERED IN THEIR LIVES

These early Christians were Christ-centered. Having identified themselves with Him by receiving Him as Savior from sin, they sought to glorify Christ in their lives. Being so intimately identified with the Lord Jesus, they understood clearly His Redemptive mission on earth. "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." And now they were representing the ascended Savior and recommending Him to those yet in sin. They were controlled by the compassion and spirit of Christ. This is the spirit of evangelism!

I make bold to declare that the closer we as Christians are to Christ, the more we will demonstrate this same concern. Lack of love for souls is evidence of lack of love for Christ!

EMPOWERED BY THE HOLY SPIRIT

The disciples at Pentecost were empowered by the Holy Spirit. Jesus had promised that their witness for Him would be effective when the Holy Spirit came upon them. This had happened, and they went forth with spiritual power to win people to Christ. Wherever they went, the Gospel flame burst forth in transforming force. They used the Sword of the Spirit with such effectiveness that multitudes of religious Jews, civilized but pagan Gentiles, and superstitious heathen were turned to the Lord. This divine fire was the motivating force in the hearts of believers that sent them out.

What compulsion is there within our breasts as we think of the world yet in sin? Is not the lack of evangelistic fervor due largely to the fact that the Holy Spirit has not been permitted to kindle within us this holy fire? Has not carnality, materialism, unyieldedness, and worldliness crowded out the

General Conference and the Believers' Church

DON. E. SMUCKER*

The church as the church has not been our interest. Therefore, it will be difficult for many of us to develop enthusiasm for the Conference on the believers' church.

I would estimate that among the things we have really been excited about have been: inspiration of the Bible, peace, regeneration, the second coming, modernism-fundamentalism and missions. But, interest in the church as such is not common. Yet discovering the nature of the church has been almost forced upon us by interdenominational movements, by Anabaptist studies and the dogmatic claims of the Roman Catholic church.

Another difficulty for this conference is that we have had a radical congregational polity. We have chosen to weaken the power of the church from the top. Our big triennial conference (coming next summer in Winnipeg) cannot legislate. Therefore, the church has not loomed as large as in groups which have more power at the top. Yet, no one wants an insipid General Conference which does not take seriously the things which it does and says in district and national conferences.

Still another source of weakness is the breakdown of discipline in the local church. If we have weakened our district and national conferences, and then, in addition, take all power away from the local congregation then we have pure individualism. The church is now only a collection of individualists which comes together fairly regularly but which is not the Body of Christ.

Again, we have trouble holding to the believers' church idea because we have reacted against abuses of this concept in other branches and denominations. Therefore, we have drawn the faulty conclusion that a false use of the idea rules out all use of the idea.

Perhaps the major problem is that a false concept of avoiding controversy has crept into our circles making it hard to discuss controversial questions. This minister is boldly committed to severe church discipline on many things ranging from cigarettes to war. The next minister is fed up and wants only sincere conscience to be affirmed regardless of the answers. It assumed that these two brothers cannot discuss their differences. Thus the false answer to keep quiet and say nothing. As a result the issue is never discussed, never settled, permanently ignored. Both may be dissatisfied with aspects of their position.

The conference in August is made to order for just this kind of hunger for real soul searching among Christians who are one in Christ, one in the Word of God, one in love of the Anabaptist vision but who differ in their understanding of these basic truths.

The Chicago conference can do much on all these points to give us a more biblical and more vital understanding of the church.

*Faculty, Mennonite Biblical Seminary

Spirit's work within our hearts? There is but little doubt that the present-day Church of Christ needs a new experience of Pentecost: a purifying fire to burn out the dross of sin and worldliness; a new baptism of divine love; a new infilling of redemptive compassion for lost souls; and a spiritual empowering to fulfill the divinely ordained tasks.

OBEDIENCE TO THE COMMISSION OF CHRIST

The new-born Church obeyed Christ's Commission. Love and obedience are inseparable! Jesus had said: "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." After His resurrection Christ clearly stated what He expected the disciples to do when He returned to the Father. They were to go back to Jerusalem: tarry there until they were endued with power from on high; then go forth to proclaim the Gospel to every creature. "Repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations." This they did. Mark reports: "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the Word with signs following." No wonder that there was spiritual power and vitality! No wonder that multitudes were attracted to these warmhearted believers! Obedience always brings spiritual blessings.

Would we experience great joy, blessings and results in our church work? Let our service be motivated by a loving obedience to Christ's commands!

BELIEVED THAT HUMANITY WITHOUT CHRIST IS LOST

Finally, (various other motives could be suggested) the early New Testament Church believed that humanity is lost and condemned—apart from the Redemption in Christ. Everywhere they went they preached that men should repent, turn from their sin and receive the Lord Jesus Christ by faith. This clearly indicates that unless sin is dealt with (by having Christ's blood applied) it finally takes men away from God's grace and love and plunges them into an eternal condemnation and punishment in hell. This is terrible yet real! Dives in hell suddenly had a "missionary, evangelistic" spirit. He pleaded with father Abraham to send Lazarus to warn his five brothers of the terror of hell. But it was too late. Jesus gave us that passage in Luke 16 so that we might see the reality of God's solemn truth.

If we have any concern and love for unsaved loved ones, neighbors, friends, and the heathen, this ought to stir us up to realize our responsibility. Even as we would warn them about poison in food, or the peril of a washed-out bridge on the highway, even so we should warn them of the wrath to come. Failure

Report of Canadian Conference

FRANK H. EPP

Reorganization of Conference work to simplify, co-ordinate and centralize the activities of various committees of the Conference of Mennonites in Canada was proposed at the closing session of the annual meetings held at Didsbury, Alta., July 2-6.

The proposal, a final vote on which will be taken at next year's sessions to be held at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, brought to a climax three days of intense work covering a large number of areas of Conference outreach. Preceding the business sessions were the Ministers' Conference, July 2, and the Missions Sunday, July 3.

Home Missions report revealed continuing trend of Mennonites to the cities and new settlement areas. Assistance for church buildings has been given during the past year to new mission centers in Hamilton, Ontario; Edmonton and Taber, Alberta; Vancouver and Burns Lake, B. C. It is expected that congregations at Cecil Lake, B. C.; Regina, Sask.; and Brandon, Man., will ask for similar aid in the near future.

Foreign Missions report indicated growing interest in the foreign fields with at least six new missionaries going out this year and giving in the past year exceeding $75,000.00. The committee for foreign missions in Canada will seek closer co-operation with the Mennonite Pioneer Mission which sponsors a large work among the Indians in northern Manitoba.

Report on the Canadian Mennonite Bible College stated that the $152,000 building project on the new campus in Tuxedo, Winnipeg, was progressing favorably. Conference voted to raise a minimum of $30,000 during the coming year. The Board was instructed to present a building plan for men's and women's dormitories at the sessions next year.

Of considerable interest also was the report of the Board of Education and Publication. Conference evidenced growing interest in the new Sunday school materials being prepared at a cost of more than $200,000 under the joint efforts of the General Conference and (Old) Mennonite churches.

Other reports heard were those on Relief, Colonization, Care for the Poor, Bible Schools, High Schools, Youth Work, Peace and Service, Welfare Institutions. Speakers presented three papers on "I am the way, the truth, and the life," John 14:6.

The business meeting of the Canadian Mennonite Youth Organization and the Women's Auxiliary were held on the afternoon of July 5. The Lord's Supper was observed on Monday evening, July 4.

Re-elected as members of the conference executive committee were: Dr. J. J. Thiessen, Saskatoon, moderator; Rev. David Schulz, Altona, assistan moderator, and P. R. Harder, Arnaud, secretary.

The Canadian Conference will be host to the triennial sessions of the General Conference Mennonit Church to be held at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Augus 15-23, 1956. The executive of the Manitoba Conference and the Winnipeg churches will be in charg of detailed arrangements.

The Simple Worship

ELAINE SOMMERS RICH

In the sixteenth century the Anabaptists courageously broke with the existing church and its forms and ritual. They felt that they did not need statues, organ music, an established order of service, elaborate symbols, priestly robes, stained glass windows, etc., in order to worship God. They could worship Him as they sat together in an informal circle in some ordinary room. God is a Spirit. They who worship Him truly, worship Him in spirit and in truth.

Why is it that we find ourselves, nowadays, sometimes getting caught in the old ritualistic tradition? We are handed a program explaining the exact order of the worship service. Or we want stained glass windows. Or we require special garb. These things are not wrong in themselves. (Indeed I can worship God through a high Episcopalian service using the Book of Common Prayer.) But they tend toward a ritual that can become rigid and bind the spirit of God.

At least in our informal weekday meetings, when we meet in one another's homes or in our churches to pray and to share our deepest religious experiences, let us keep away from a set ritual, symbols, or a service centered around one person, the minister. Let us practice Paul's suggestion in 1 Cor. 14:26-33. One may have a hymn, another a lesson. Another may speak words of edification. Paul suggests also that we take time to weigh what is said. And "if a revelation is made to another sitting by, let the first be silent. For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and be encouraged."

If we lose such freedom of the spirit, it will be necessary for a new group of reformers to rise once more and destroy the old bags incapable of holding new wine.

Flashes of Thought

Wounds

Walter Gering

There it was, like a deep, ugly wound inflicted upon quivering, naked flesh. To be sure, it was only cold, lifeless steel. But it symbolized what so often happens in human relationships. It may have been entirely accidental. It could easily have happened in transit, while being handled. One would hardly want to believe that it was a deliberate act of vandalism on the part of a thoughtless boy. But no matter how it had come to be, it was a grim reminder of that which comes to pass only too often in life.

For some time we had been looking forward with anticipation for the coming of the new chairs for the Sunday school department. The announcements of their purchase had been made and the children had been informed of their coming. Now the day had arrived; with special observance of the occasion the chairs were dedicated to the Lord and His service. As the children arrived and took their places, the sight of the new, shiny chairs filling the auditorium gave them a sense of anticipation. Appropriate words were spoken by the superintendents and then the official act of dedication was made. The chairs now belonged to the Lord as a part of His program in the work of the Sunday school.

But that long, ugly gash—how quickly it appeared. Only a few days after the dedication act it was discovered. There across the entire back of the chair there appeared a deep, penetrating scratch clearly seen from a distance. How it ever came to be we probably shall never know. But it shall always remain as a symbol. To be sure, the usefulness of the chair may not have been hindered. It is as strong and reliable as ever. But it shall bear the mark of the deep wound inflicted upon its back.

How often it is so in life. Men and women, boys and girls yield themselves to humility unto the service of the Lord. They hear the inner call of the Spirit and respond; a solemn moment of dedication comes and they offer themselves for His service. How soon they appear with deep, ugly scars across their backs. Often thoughtlessly, carelessly, by some word or deed it is inflicted by a fellow traveler. At times it is even with deliberate stroke in the spirit of envy, jealously or bitterness. It matters little how it is done; it is the presence of those wounds which is the important thing.

Then there are those who walk in the spirit of the painter. As they engaged themselves busily in the task of redecoration of the church auditorium I asked them about the cracks in the wall. What were they going to do about those? Was there anything that could be done? "Oh yes" he replied "we will fill them and paint over them." So it was; when the job was finished the deep cracks had been repaired and covered over. That was a part of their business. I thought of the chair—while some were causing deep, ugly wounds, others were engaged in the task of binding up the wounds. I thought of Jesus who went about doing good; He had been sent "to heal the broken hearted—to set at liberty them that were bruised." That was a part of His business. It is yours and mine too as we walk together with Him.

THE ART OF EFFECTIVE TEACHING by C. B. Eavey, 298 pp. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan 1953, $3.75.

"In teaching we should talk less and teach more," says Dr. C. B. Eavey, former professor of education and psychology at Wheaton College and author of this comprehensive book on Christian teaching. He brings to this writing the conviction that teaching in the church needs to keep abreast of the best in techniques.

Many teachers must feel they have taught well because they have talked for thirty or more minutes. But teachers have taught only when pupils have learned. And pupils have not learned until their lives have been changed.

Good teaching demands that the teacher knows and respects the learner. This is his first teaching task. Then the teacher must understand that the only person who can learn for the pupil, is the pupil himself. Too much talking on the part of the teacher often stops the learning process.

A pupil only learns when he feels a need. He only studies when he believes that this hardest of all work will solve his problem.

In the functional teaching that Eavey describes, the teacher organizes and plans a unit of study centering on experiences and activities. But what a teacher plans is tentative. For teacher and pupils must develop plans together.

If the teacher allows freedom in planning because he trusts his co-learners, he will find himself in the midst of problem-solving situations. Here is where people do critical thinking and begin to act creatively. Teaching starts here, because people are beginning to learn.

This book commends itself to us because of its conservative theological background. But as the author says, "This has been no easy book to write," the reader will find himself saying, "This is no easy book to read."

The ordinary Sunday school teacher will find it difficult to plow through this book unaided. But the teacher who wants to be more than ordinary needs to take the meat of this book if he wants fruit in his teaching, and if he wants to be more than ordinary.

Christian Princi

(The name of the author of this article became separated from the manuscript. Will the writer please reply so proper credit may be given. Ed.)

Most people have SOME sort of religion. There are plenty of people who attend church regularly, go through the motions of a so-called church service, listen more or less indifferently to a sermon, send their children to Sunday school, and pay their subscription to current expenses, but whose devotion to religion is nothing to brag about. Yes, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, 2 Timothy 3:5. Such men have no practical Christianity, apply little of it to business, and often create an offence to the man of the world.

Men are asking everywhere this question; "Is it possible for a man to be engaged in the activities of our modern life and yet be a Christian?" Is it possible for a man to be a broker, shopkeeper, lawyer, banker, a mechanic—is it possible for a man to be in business today and yet love his God and his fellow men as himself? I do not know what transformations these dear businesses of yours must undergo before they shall be true and ideal homes for the child of God, but I do know that upon Christian merchants and Christian brokers and Christian lawyers and Christian men in business today rests an awful and a beautiful responsibility to prove, if you can prove it, that these things are capable of being made divine; to prove that a man can do the work which you have been doing this morning, and will do this afternoon, and still love his God and his fellow men as himself. If he cannot, what business have you to be doing them? If he can, what business have you to be doing them so poorly, carnally and unspiritually that men look on them and shake their heads with doubt? It belongs to Christian men, first, to prove that man may be a Christian and yet do business; and, in the second place to show how a man, as he becomes a greater Christian, shall purify and lift the business which he does and make it worthy as an occupation fit for a child of God. If a man cannot take religion into his business, he must have a very bad business or a very poor religion.

THE PROBLEM OF CAPITAL AND LABOR

A great many persons exercise their power to avoid doing their share of work in this world. It should be that everyone does cheerfully and with all his strength the kind of work for which his talents fit him, and fairly and honestly paid for.

How many hours a day should a man work? Almost everyone will say at once that the question is absurd, for there is no rule that can be applied generally either to men or to women. Nevertheless, it is easy to see that the trade unions think otherwise; for no matter what union it is, it fixes upon a certain number of hours as the maximum for those who belong to it. There is no elasticity; no liberty for those who are strong and capable to exceed the limit, which in many cases is fixed below the capacity of the weakest and the most inefficient.

At the present time there are many movements to shorten the hours of labor. An eight-hour day is beginning to look conservative. Even before this has been attained, some of the trades are demanding a thirty-six hour week. Men who are dissatisfied with their lot, and who yet suffer themselves to be bound by rules that forbid them to work more than a certain number of hours a day, might ask themselves if they know or ever heard of a man who limited himself by such a rule and yet rose out of his condition and gained wealth. The careers of many successful men show that the contrary is true. Would those men, or would any of the lesser men who have raised themselves out of poverty, have succeeded if they had intrusted to others the right to tell them to stop work when others stopped? Trade unions have undoubtedly improved the condition of the working men. They are to be commended for all the good they have done. But making it compulsory for every man to limit the time that he may work stifles proper ambition.

There is not an industrial problem that is not rooted in, that does not depend on servants who are serving not with eye service. You who are masters know that. You want clerks in your stores and maids in your kitchens, who do not seek simply to satisfy your eye, who require your watchful care, but have a conscience that directs and a sense of responsibility to themselves and to their God. If you are employed on a farm, take as much interest in anything that pertains to it as if it were your farm. Pick up stray boards, stop the leak, repair a lock, cover exposed machinery, and look after anything that falls to your notice, just as the farmer himself would do. If you are a clerk in a store, get the thought in your mind that it is your store, and be as anxious as the proprietor to keep things neat, to attract customers and to avoid losses. You have something better than wages to work for, always; it is yourself, for the future. You owe it to your best self to be loyal. You are in a way, a partner in the concern. Shoddy work is not only wrong to a man's own personal integrity, hurting his character, but it is also wrong to society. Truthfulness in work is as much demanded as truthfulness in speech.

False and sham work of every kind is a sin against brotherly love; for somebody suffers for it somehow. We never can tell who must suffer, as when a ship springs a leak through badly driven rivets, or when cheapness is got by adulterating food. Some men will steal their master's time who would never steal his money; but perfect honesty has a wider sweep than the narrow limits of our common ethics.

ON THE OTHER HAND

No servants, no employees, can ever secure their just and equal rights until employers come to recognize the other half of this prescription. Masters, give unto your servants—not that which is the least you can give, the least you can get the service rendered for, the least possible wage, but that which is equal and just. Ah, two opposing selfishnesses can never work together without clash. When unselfishness meets unselfishness, that is the ideal condition. We must have just and noble men, and God-fearing men, for employers and employed. Then the industrial problem is solved, and not before.

CONSIDER THE MUCH-NEGLECTED SERMON ON THE MOUNT—GOLDEN RULE

The golden rule is the sum total of all that is laid down in the sacred writings relative to men's conduct toward one another. A rich steel magnate in St. Louis had a banquet. There were present, the president, vice president, general manager, and other heads of a great corporation. For grace they all took hold of hands around the table and said: "We pledge ourselves to do this day and every day unto others as we would have them do to us." Their men did not strike.

A guest in a Los Angeles hotel during dangerous floods took the precaution of buying four large candles from a drug store in the lobby. They were tagged with a price of twenty-five cents but the druggist explained that since they belonged to an old stock carried over for several years and somewhat discolored he would charge only ten cents apiece. Later that same evening the lights did go out for 30 minutes, resulting in a run on the store for the remaining supply of candles. Curious to know if the druggist had made capital of the emergency, this hotel guest inquired about the price paid by those purchasers who followed him. He found that the whole lot had been sold out at ten cents. What a crown for that druggist.

There is absolute safety and profit of reckoning God in all our plans and purposes of life. Some years ago, seventeen men who were engaged in the packing business set sail from New York to Europe, purposing while on the way to organize what has since been known as the "beef trust," and which has been the subject of much investigation and prosecution by the government. They carefully wrought out the details of an agreement into which it was proposed to enter for the control of the meat supply. When it was all done the question was whether all would agree to enter upon the arrangement. One man, a packer from the Middle West, said that his wife was a partner with him in all his undertakings, and he could not answer until he had consulted her. Upon the arrival of the ship in England, he immediately took passage back to America to talk over the matter with her. He laid it all before her, and for several days they discussed it before coming to a conclusion, he doing most of the talking, she thinking. Finally, Sunday night arrived, and the answer had to go across the water the next day. Once more he went over the matter, and there was silence for a moment, when the wife said: "Tom, you can't do it." "Why?" he inquired. Solemnly she uttered one word, "God." That decided the matter. Back of that one word was all their conception of God and his requirements of those who profess to be His children.

The next day he wired his refusal, though he knew it would probably result in the ruin of his business, for the allied packers would wage a relentless war against him. It began very soon. Prices were cut, rebates demanded from railroads, and every means possible taken to destroy his business. Trade went down and down and down, until ruin stared him in the face. At last the time came when it seemed that he must put a twenty-five thousand dollar mortgage on his home. But while he was considering the mortgage, which he knew would hurt his credit, especially in his home community, a friend who was the general agent of a great insurance company in which he had a large policy which would mature soon, came to him and said that money was overabundant with the company, and if he would like, the company would be glad to pay him in advance a considerable portion of his accrued policy. He calmly accepted. It relieved the situation for the present; and then the tide of business turned. Men learned that the meats from that packing house were of the very finest. Business grew, and from one packing house there have come to be two. Men willingly pay a little higher price for that meat than they do for other meats, and prosperity has come to him, his home and his business.

Some time ago the government was prosecuting the beef trust, and this particular packer was summoned as a witness. The Attorney General asked him the pointed question; "How much rebate did you get from the Railroad Company last year?" "Not a dollar," he replied. The answer was so amazing that the attorney general thought the packer was joking, and warned him that the matter was not one to be joked on, repeated the question with strong emphasis. Straightening his shoulders, and throwing back his head, he looked the prosecutor straight in the face and replied, "Not a dollar. I have never received a dollar rebate in my life."

At once he was excused from the witness stand, and as he went out one of the other packers took him by the hand and said, "I would give a million dollars to be able to say what you did today." And it all came through the mighty power of the one word—"God."

It is possible by the grace of God to be a Christian in business. Our Master honored men who were diligent in business. These are challenging days to the Christian layman. But the opportunity to give a Christian testimony in business was never larger.

"How old should I be before I should think of making a will?"

To answer that question one would have to know how long you will live. If you want to be sure that your estate—small or large—is settled according to your wish then make your will now, don't wait. And insert a bequest for the work of the Conference.

When Disaster Strikes

Those of us who live in Kansas and Oklahoma will not soon forget what took place in Udall, Kansas, and Blackwell, Oklahoma. Those of us who live in Canada were also reminded of the fact that tornadoes can visit the north country when a tornado struck Vita, Manitoba.

Below is a paragraph sent in by one of our General Conference missionaries in Japan. The moral is well drawn by our missionary, viz., how many lives were snuffed out, yet no Christ. But for us, who were not thus visited by disaster, does it help us to pause and consider that nothing is as uncertain as our physical lives, and nothing as certain as the death of our bodies? Then what??

Here is the paragraph from our missionaries in Japan:

"Japan has been our home for almost 9 months now. The Japanese are friendly people and we have already learned to love them. One thing that has impressed us since coming here is that Japan is a land of many great tragedies. Last fall there were the many typhoon disasters, and the greatest among these the sinking of the Toya Maru which claimed over 1500 lives. In winter there was the terrible fire which claimed the lives of over 80 old ladies. Just recently we heard of the disastrous landslide in which about 70 people are believed to have been buried alive. This month another ferryboat disaster took the lives of about 155; most of these were children who were on an excursion. Then there are the many suicide tragedies which happen daily. Many of these are committed by young people who are in despair, often because they cannot find a job when they graduate from school. When we think of the many who have probably gone to a Christless eternity, we are reminded of the words in 2 Peter 3:9, "The Lord is . . . not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." The unconscious cry of these people is "Why have you not told us of the eternal hope there is in Christ?"

A Need in Mexico

Many of you are interested in Mexico and our people there. We have faithful workers in Mexico, one of the couples being Mr. and Mrs. Norman Bartel, from Waldheim, Saskatchewan. In one of their reports they write as follows:

"We wish to thank Him, who is the provider of all good and faithful gifts and who has not withheld them from us. However, would His presence not be with us, one hesitates to continue. So with joy we continue for we have the great privilege of being servants of the Most High, and the assurance of His presence.

Probably the most important item of interest since our last writing is that our school term has come to a close ending this phase of the work temporarily. We closed school on the 3rd of June, which marked the end of our 6-6 week periods. In all we had a total of 159 days. The number of Mennonite and Mexican holidays have kept this number down slightly. We started school last fall with an enrollment of 19 children and closed the term having 32 children. In all we had 38 students enrolled but our highest attendance at any time was 33 children. It has been a great trust that has been given us not only to get these children to read and write, but also to lead them into ways everlasting. All newcomers that we did receive during the year were of Old Colony Mennonite background and even though their ages varied from 5-12 years they all seemingly were not much more advanced than grade 1. Some were not in school too long as they moved on to Canada and elsewhere. Some progress was made with them, for which we are thankful.

On the night of the 3rd of June we had a school closing program. This was held in the church, and was well attended. In this venture we tried to give the parents an over-all picture of what their children had learned during the year."

One of the ways in which we can be helpful to our brethren in the south, is to teach their children. You will notice that even a 12-year-old is only at the first grade level.

In addition to our own people, we also owe the native Mexicans the Word of life.

Idols Today

How large is our God? All too many people in this world think of size as very important indeed. The non-Christian world so often thinks of their god, or gods, in terms of material size. Sometimes children in Christian homes think of our Heavenly Father in such terms. But the mature Christian thinks of the greatness of God in other terms than physical or material.

Below is a paragraph sent in by missionary Peter Derksen in our General Conference mission field in Japan. The Budhistic god he mentions has some size. Here is the paragraph:

"On Monday, May the 9th, our language school made an outing to Nara, a two-hour trip from here. One of Japan's famous parks is situated in Nara, and in one of its many temples stands Japan's largest image of Buddha, weighing about 5,000 tons. It is hard to believe that such educated people pray to idols made with their own hands, but we have seen them do so with our own eyes. We had a wonderful day of fellowship with our fellow missionaries and teachers, and felt refreshed and ready to go back to our studies."

The following talks are suggestive outlines. The speaker is encouraged to elaborate and bring numerous personal illustrations wherever he can.

Qualifications of a Christian Teacher

As we consider the vocation of teaching, we often think that a public schoolteacher must be a walking encyclopedia. Although it is important to have knowledge and a love for truth, this is not the first qualification of a successful teacher. One of the most necessary tools for a teacher is (a) LOVE; love for children and youth. This involves the ability to accept each child and student as he is and to see the greatest potentiality in each individual. To do this requires (b) PATIENCE. A haughty, spirited attitude will never win the pupil nor create a learning atmosphere. It is only through patience and kindness that you will experience a healthy teaching and learning environment.

Other qualifications that the speaker may develop are:

(c) INGENUITY: the ability to calmly make the best of each situation. Also the ability to create a pleasant physical environment in the classroom by use of bulletin board, blackboard, plants, etc.

(d) PERSONAL INTEREST in each student with his own personal problems.

(e) SENSE OF APPRECIATION and variety of interest.
(f) STRONG SENSE OF RACIAL JUSTICE and world citizenship.
(g) SENSE OF HUMOR and friendliness (don't be afraid to smile).
(h) WILLINGNESS to give added time and help to the exceptional child as well as working with the average and superior pupil.
(i) ABILITY to take criticism. (No one can please all parents at all times.)
(j) DESIRE TO DO more than just minimum requirements (go the second mile). Real joy in service, for a teacher is a servant.
(k) ABILITY TO MAINTAIN RESPECT and order. (Consistently maintain high standards of positive conduct with few "don't" rules.)
(l) CONSISTENCY in all things.
(m) A PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE of the source of Peace and Truth and a daily striving of walking in the footprints of the MASTER TEACHER.

Motives and Aims of Teaching

Why am I a teacher? What am I trying to do? As teachers we prepare youth to take their place in a world of frustration and confusion.

(a) Teach fundamental truths and knowledge.
(b) Inspire a hunger and thirst for truth.
(c) Build character with strong moral convictions.
(d) Train for good leadership and co-operative followers. (Don't forget that most people are followers.)
(e) Give counsel and guidance. Help youth understand their problems and face them. (Expand considerably on importance and opportunity for giving personal counsel.)
(f) Draw out the best in each individual (in the type of work they do as a student and in their character and personality).
(g) Widen interests and develop new interests and appreciation.

Rewards of a Teacher

As we listened to the preceding talks we may have come to the conclusion that certainly we expect a lot of the teacher, but what's in it for me? Working with youth in a teacher-student relationship has many compensations and rewards.

(a) Brings out your every potentiality.
    1. Develops leadership
    2. Reveals hidden talents.
    3. Helps to make you a more well-rounded personality.
    4. Widens your interests and appreciations
(b) Builds lasting friendships.
(c) Opportunity for studying and observing personalities.
(d) Joy in service (thrill of working with eager unspoiled youth).

It is a thrill to have helped someone understand his problems and see him face them with courage and determination. It is rewarding to see a timid pupil respond and gain self-confidence and assurance.

What is more thrilling than to watch your students grow up and see them take their place in life successfully? You think that perhaps as you come in contact with this life, you may have sown a seed that blossomed forth and helped him along life's road.

A Collect for Teachers

Teach us, Oh God, to know and understand the children entrusted to our guidance. Make us worthy of their trust and affection.

Keep us mindful of the worth of human personalities. Grant us the joy of service as we watch the miracle of growth.

Let us be the guardians of truth, goodness, and beauty; assured that all we send into the lives of others comes back into our own.

Make us grateful for the things we take for granted. Keep us humble in victory, brave in defeat, wise in the face of grave new problems.

Let there be no timid or indifferent one among us. Use us for the triumph of justice in every human relationship.

Increase, Oh God, the neighborly spirit among us. May we work together in mutual confidence, each rejoicing in the contributions others make to the common good.

Grant that we may know the transforming power of creative work in behalf of others and let us strive in all things to follow the example of The Great Teacher.

—Lida Williams

Lord speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of Thy tone;
As Thou hast sought, so let me seek
Thy erring children lost and lone.

O fill me with Thy fulness Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show.

O use me, Lord, use even me,
Just as Thou wilt, and when and where;
Until Thy blessed face I see,
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share.

—From the "Mennonite Hymnary"

HOW DO YOU LIKE THAT?

Well, we didn't like it. We opened last week's issue of MENNONITE YOUTH to discover a bit of misinformation. To make it straight we want to tell you that the desk for the YPU office was donated by the youth group of the Brudertal Church in Hillsboro, Kansas.

- V. The music teacher

There is considerable opportunity today to serve the church in this area.

After the speakers have presented their topics encourage group discussion. Bring out problems encountered in teaching Sunday school, Bible school, or any phase of the church teacher. Discuss these problems and try to solve some of them.

PROJECTS:

Sponsor a member of your Youth Fellowship in a Voluntary Service Summer Unit. Most youth groups have someone who would be happy to serve if he could somehow raise funds to pay his transportation to his unit and back home again.

Encourage your pastor to conduct a series of evening weekday meetings or teach Sunday school and Bible school.

If your youth group is in town or close to a city, plan a series of well-planned recreational meetings for the children.

Mrs. Glenn Gering, Freeman, S. D.

Shine Thou upon us, Lord,
True Light of men, today,
And through the written Word
Thy very Self display;
That so, from hearts which burn
With gazing on Thy face,
Thy little ones may learn
The wonders of Thy grace.

Live Thou within us, Lord;
Thy mind and will be ours;
Be Thou belov'd, adored,
And served with all our pow'rs,
That so our lives may teach
Thy children what Thou art,
And plead, by more than speech,
For Thee with ev'ry heart.

CHRISTIAN PACIFIST STUDY CONFERENCE

A small study conference of Western European theologians interested in the Christians pacifist position will be held in Puidoux, Switzerland, August 15-19.

This conference is being sponsored by the European Brethren, Mennonite and Friends Continuation Committee to stimulate discussion and consolidation of the Christian pacifist position among Western European theologians, many of whom are newly open to this way.

Harold S. Bender, chairman of the MCC Peace Section, and Harold Row, executive secretary of the Brethren Service Commission, will represent the historic peace groups of America. We are not certain of any Quaker representation at this time.

Andre Trocme, French leader of Christian pacifists who has visited Mennonite congregations in the U.S., will be among the leaders of the conference. Dr. Martin Niemoller, who just last summer declared that he has become a pacifist is planning to attend.

Although this is only a small conference for those who are Christian pacifists, it is being watched with interest by the World Council of Churches. The WCC is planning to call a later conference of theologians to hear both views of the Christian's attitude toward war, and the Puidoux Conference will be observed closely as an important influence on Western European Christian thinking.

PAX PASTOR SAILS

John and Ruth King Duerksen and children Johnny and Becky of Hesston, Kan., sailed for Germany on July 27. They will live at Enkenbach. From there Brother Duerksen will work for two years as PAX pastor to our PAX units at Backnang, Wedel, Bielefeld and Enkenbach. The Duerksens are members of the Mennonite Church at Hesston, Kan., where Brother Duerksen served as music instructor on the Hesston College faculty for 12 years.

KLASSENS TO BERLIN

Jacob and Helena Klassen of Gretna, Manitoba, sailed for Germany on July 27. They were accompanied by their three daughters. The Klassens are going to Menno-Heim, Berlin, for two years to replace the David P. Neufelds who returned in April. Menno-Heim is the community center in Berlin where many of the refugees from the East Zone come for material aid. Week-end conferences for fellowship among Mennonites of the East Zone are also sponsored by Menno-Heim. The Klassens are members of the General Conference Mennonite Church at Blumenorter, Manitoba.

DOCTOR JOINS JAVA UNIT

Dr. Glenn Hoffman, M.D., of Maytown, Pa., embarked July 27 for a three-year term of service in Java. He will replace David Epp in the outpatient clinic work among the natives in the mountains of Java.

What we need today is not adjusted personalities, but terribly unadjusted personalities, as Jesus was. The Cross is the eternal symbol of an unadjusted personality in an evil world. —Halford E. Luccock to warn them, Ezekiel tells us, means that they will be lost, but their blood will God require of our hands. Do we want this awful obligation? I don't!

In conclusion, let me quote a significant statement from a book: "Basic New Testament Evangelism" by F. D. Whitesell.

> "Out of divine compassion the heavenly Father sent His only begotten Son into the world at exactly the right time; the Son of God carried out the redeeming purposes of the Father in every detail, and objectively provided a Salvation sufficient to save the world; then God sent the Holy Spirit, then the Church, then the completed Bible. These, according to the New Testament—the SON, the SPIRIT, the CHURCH, and the WORD—represent the outreach of God to a world lost in sin."

Dear reader, do you see your place as a link in the great Redemptive chain? If you do, then you must also see that what motivated God to make Salvation possible, is to be the same as that which motivates us in evangelism. If we fail, the divine Redemptive chain is broken.

Film Review

THE FOURTH "R," 16 mm., black and white, 22 min., available from many rental agencies. Rental $6.00. Available from General Films Limited, Winnipeg, in Canada.

A number of parents in a wartime boom community suggest the need for a church-sponsored day school to their Episcopalian minister. After a thorough investigation of the need and of the possible support for such a school it is established.

The picture portrays the development of the project until provision is made for children from kindergarten through high school. The picture portrays the story in an interesting way showing how religion can be a fourth "R" through the parochial school.

This picture would have value primarily in communities that are contemplating starting a parochial school of some nature. The picture could also be used in a group that is discussing various means by which Christian truth can be taught to children.

One and Two Year Volunteers

As of July 1, 1955, the General Conference had the following 35 members serving in MCC VS for a one or two year term. These volunteers are supported by the Board of Christian Service at an average of $35 per volunteer month. Thus our congregations can make these volunteers reach into these fields of need. We are a part of society as a whole. We want to make a positive, Christian contribution. Voluntary Service is still young. Let's work locally to support financially and to enlist the right young people for this potential service so that it may grow. EME

A WARNING

The Mennonites of central Illinois have had some unhappy experiences recently. Since the same incident may be repeated in other Mennonite communities they would issue the following information:

A father, mother, two girls and a boy (teen-agers), driving a black Packard car with Pennsylvania license number 9445 C come into a community asking for money to enable them to get to their home in California, since the father was recently released from a veteran's hospital in Philadelphia. They give an Upland, California, address and claim to be members of the Upland Church. They are quite familiar with names of our ministers, missionaries, mission stations, etc. The father gives various names such as Courtland H. Roeber, C. H. Roeber, Henry R. Courtland.

Their case has been investigated. The pastor and city of Upland, California, prove claims false. Their car is registered in Pennsylvania under false address. The veteran pension they claim is not accurate.

Other Mennonite communities should be on guard against this family to avoid being "fleeced."

TALKING PEACE AND THINKING WAR

Nobody is willing to admit that they are working for war. Nations and individuals with one accord claim they want peace. The difference seems to be the method of trying to secure lasting peace.

There are those groups who are sure that the way to obtain peace is to be so heavily prepared for war that all other nations will be afraid to risk an open conflict. This ancient disproved theory still deceives multitudes. It has not prevented war in the past and there is no reason to expect it will do so in the future. In fact it stimulates war, for if each nation starts out on this theory, there is a mad rush to heap up armaments as each nation strains its utmost to outdo its rival. Instead of leading to peace, time and again this has led to war. We do not get peace by preparing for war any more than we reap wheat by sowing weeds. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" is good gospel truth. We are willing to admit the truth of that statement in almost every line except in the argument of preparation for war. Trying to preserve peace by scaring other nations is a method based on the psychology of fear—a psychology admittedly bad.

There is something singularly tragic in our attitude toward Japan. Peacemakers rejoiced when the new Japanese constitution, under American guidance, outlawed war completely. The Japanese people themselves were eager for the pursuit of peaceful means. They were tired of the rule of the war lords, who constantly got them into trouble. They hailed the Americans as liberators from the curse of militarism, and were happy not to be burdened with the great load of armaments and military preparations.

One can see how it is doubly difficult for the Japanese people to understand why, after having outlawed war in their constitution, Americans should now turn about and insist that Japan be again armed and prepare for war after all. We talked peace and thought war. We thought that if Japan were strongly armed again there might be less danger to ourselves.

Why must we be forever slipping back into this old rut? Why make elaborate plans for war if we claim we want peace? Why go on with the old scare theory when it has not worked in the past and is bound to lead to open clashes? Why keep on sowing dragon teeth and hope to raise palm branches of peace?

Christians, who believe in the peace of love and good will, have been slow in promoting their side of the eternal argument. For love is far stronger than fear; in fact "Perfect love casteth out fear." Our whole Christian religion is based on the firm foundation of love, for "God is love." Is it true of churches, too, that they talk peace but keep on thinking in the same military terms as the war-minded?

There are enough church members in our country to raise up and halt universal military training, war preparations, tremendous expenditures in destructive bomb tests. Isn't it odd that as so-called followers of the Prince of Peace we still are drawn toward Mars, the god of war? There needs to be much more preaching and teaching and talking and thinking and praying about the whole matter of the way of love and the way of peace. We have made various grand statements about our wish for peace, but we must also seriously THINK peace—TALK is not enough.

BUT CHECK YOUR CONVICTIONS

We are frequently urged from the pulpit to "Be true to your convictions." Daniel is pointed out as the classic example. He dared to stand true to what he believed, and we urge children to follow his example. However, just being true to our convictions is not enough. We need to be sure our convictions are true. Many an individual stubbornly holds to his opinions when they may not square with the will and purpose of God. The obvious first thing is to check our convictions.

In other words that which we hold to and believe in, needs to be right and true. Then, like Daniel, we should stand firm in our convictions regardless of the consequences; for if right and true, God will take care of the results.

LIFT UP YOUR EYES

Our interests as a church and conference must go far beyond our own immediate community—or at least they should. The day when we have no interests outside the little circle in which we move has long passed. We must lift up our eyes and behold the field before us. The whole world is our parish and our responsibility. Through our missionary and relief interests, we have representatives in many parts of the world.

Our spiritual maps may be too small. If they show only our immediate family and friends and local church it is time to march off those maps and get new ones! Lift up your eyes and behold the field—which is the world.

With this issue a new editor takes over the responsibilities of the Youth Section of The Mennonite. Lois Duerksen, who has done fine work as recent editor, wishes to be released to devote full time to her chosen profession of teaching. We wish to thank her for her contribution in the past and to wish her God's blessing in her new work.

Maynard Shelly, recently pastor at Allentown, Pennsylvania, but who has now taken up work as assistant executive secretary of the Board of Education and Publication, will add to his various other duties, that of editing the Youth Section. May we remember him in our prayers as he devotes himself to this important work.

The Christian Peace Testimony in Japan

VERNEY UNRUH*

It is common knowledge that following the war the new Japanese constitution renounced war forever as a means of settling disputes and consequently renounced the right to maintain military forces of any kind. Now, ten years later, what is the picture?

The constitution is still in effect, theoretically, but in practice this article has been set aside. At the urging of U. S. authorities, a new Japanese army, navy, and air force has been established but called Japanese Safety Defense Force to get around the constitution. There is constant talk of revising the constitution.

But what about the common people of Japan? How do they feel? The following speech prepared by a Junior High School student for an English speaking contest reflects their attitude clearly. (Incidentally it won first prize.)

Use Atomic Power for Peace

"Everyone of us wishes to be happy and live happily in the world, yet it is always a difficult thing to do. For thousands of years men have met unhappy incidents such as war. In spite of these disasters of war, our human prosperity has been brought step by step and we are enjoying a little happiness.

"But now a few men have produced two great powers, namely the atomic bomb and the hydrogen bomb. These have power to destroy everything on the earth. A great number of people—babies, girls, boys, women, and old men—were killed by the atomic bombs at Hiroshima and Nagasaki ten years ago. We'll never forget these terrible events. Even more, we'll never forget Mr. Kuboyama, a fisherman who met a tragic death from the "ashes of death" at Bikini Island. He was the first man on earth killed by the hydrogen bomb.

"The terrible power of the atom is well known by now. We should never use this power for war again because the use of it means the ruin and destruction of mankind.

"I am told that atomic power has come to be used for electricity in Russia.

"Well, we should use it to make us happy, to make the world better than that in which we live now. This problem, peaceful use of the atomic power has often been discussed at the United Nations Organization. It is very good, I think. How happy we'll be if this problem is solved by the U. N.

"Again I say, never use atomic power for war again; use it only for the prosperity and happiness of human beings."

Before the contest the teacher of this student brought the manuscript to me to correct. He also brought along the school tape recorder so I could record it so the student could listen to it. I gave it as I thought it should be given as a speech. When I finished the teacher turned to me and said with some feeling, "Now record it again, this time as though you were a Japanese speaking to Americans."

I felt rather uncomfortable. The teacher and I are good friends so I knew it was not directed at me personally. Nevertheless, I felt the sting of those words. It gave me a deeper insight into the attitude the common people of Japan have for war. They have experienced the tragedy of war and are still feeling its effects. They hate war.

In such a situation it would seem the Christian peace testimony would be well received. Yet there are dangers and difficulties in presenting it. Peace is still primarily a political issue. Up until now the Communists and other radical groups have been about the only ones who talked about peace. We must therefore be careful lest we are identified with them since we also preach peace. Another difficulty is that as Americans we come from the nation with the greatest military force in the world. If we say we are for peace some reply to us, "That sounds good but better go back home and practice what you preach."

In spite of this it still behooves us as Ambassadors for Christ to present a clear Christian peace witness. We are American citizens, it is true, but we put Christ above country and we are sent out by a Church that has had a peace witness for over 400 years. We do not preach peace because we want to preserve our Western way of life and culture. We preach and teach it because it is a part of the total gospel; because Christ himself is the Prince of Peace.

Then how shall our peace testimony be given? It must be presented as a vital part of Christian teaching. It cannot be separated from the gospel. So far there is little literature available. Good literature which makes the biblical peace position clear to all is a must. Finally, we must seek to work and co-operate with other groups and churches with whom we are united on a biblical position.

Up until now Mennonite missionaries in Japan have not done much along this line. We have been learning the language, getting a foothold in starting a new work and in general becoming acquainted with the Japanese people and their customs. Then, too, a missionary's time is often limited so that he cannot give the proper attention to this aspect of the work that it ought to receive. We are, therefore, very grateful that MCC is sending Dr. Melvin Gingerich to Japan this fall to co-ordinate our efforts and give the Christian peace testimony new impetus.

The day has come for us to stand up and show the Japanese people that in Christ they may yet carry forward the ideal laid down in their new constitution and lead the rest of the world into the paths of peace.

WALTER and MARTHA DYCK

"Then Samuel took a stone and set it up between Mizpah and Jeshanah, and called its name Ebenezer; for he said, 'Hitherto the Lord has helped us.' " Thus Samuel set a reminder before his people—Ebenezer means "a stone of help"—that their help, to that day had come from the Lord.

Similarly, Fernheim Colony, Chaco, Paraguay, unveiled a "Denkmal" on July 2, 1955. This "stone of remembrance" was erected on a lot next to the "Kolonie-Amt" building. The unveiling took place in the presence of Paraguayan government officials, many of the original settlers, visitors from the other colonies, Orie O. Miller and other MCC representatives.

The Lord granted pleasant weather for the occasion. The days before and after would not have been as suitable. Three DC-3 plane loads of visitors from Asuncion had been detained for two days. Rain continued in Asuncion even on Saturday morning—the day of the celebration. Radio reports from Filadelfia told of clearing skies.

So shortly before noon two of these large planes took off for the Chaco. After an hour in the beautiful sunshine above the vast area northwest of Asuncion, we came down through the clouds soon to get our first view of the hundreds of buggies and thousands of people who had gathered for the 25th Anniversary of the Founding of Fernheim—meaning "far away home."

The large church seating at least 1,500 was packed. Other hundreds came and went during the day. A men's chorus and mass choir sang appropriate selections throughout the day. One number was in the Russian language. One congregational hymn was sung in the Low-German dialect.

Many reports were given of the progress made during these twenty-five years. Among the poems, one entitled "My Fernheim" was especially touching. Greetings were given personally, by letters, and by telegrams.

The historic unveiling took place at 2 p.m., before the afternoon session. The Oberschultze Heinrich Duerksen presided. A choir of students of the Zentralschule (high school) sang the national anthem. Elder Jacob Isaak led in a prayer of dedication, also in "a minute of silence in memory of the sacrifices of the pioneers." Two government representatives spoke briefly.

Plaques on the four sides of the monument each had their story. The one pictured below, left, was on the back side. The wording was "For the 25th Anniversary of the Founding of Colony Fernheim," followed by the memorable words of Samuel in 1 Sam. 7:12, translated literally from the German, "Thus far the Lord has helped us." On the opposite side (facing the main street) the same is in the Spanish language. As pictured below to the right, a plaque depicts the missionary message reaching into heathen lands. The opposite side concerns agricultural development.

In the Kolonie-Amt there were numerous displays covering the development in church, school, home, and farm life. The deliverance out of Communism was graphically illustrated by a painting made by one of the pioneers. Out-of-doors there were improvised tents, stoves, tools, and implements which had once served, but which in twenty-five years have become outdated.

We were happy to be present on this day of rejoicing. We are looking more hopefully into the future. Their battle for existence and progress is admirable. May the Lord bless their efforts!

Mission to Washington, D. C.

ELMER NEUFELD and DAVID HABEGGER

On July 11 and 12 four representatives of District Peace Committees were in Washington, D. C., speaking to senators about our opposition to the compulsory reserve bill, H.R. 7000.

Earlier this year four men from the Western District had gone to Washington, D. C., to speak to Representatives against the continuation of the draft and UMT bills. They felt that such a witness was valuable and that the General Conference should do more of it. Thus when the House passed H.R. 7000 by a voice vote, they notified the Middle, Central, and Northern District Peace Committees of their interest in sending men to speak in opposition to this bill. They suggested that these committees each send one person also. As a result of this suggestion Elmer Neufeld, John D. Unruh, Carl Lehman, and David Habegger went on this mission.

The essential features of the bill that passed the House (H.R. 7000) are:

1. A compulsory reserve obligation for every man enlisted or drafted into the Armed Forces—the drafted man having a total obligation of six years (three years in the Ready Reserve and one in the Standby Reserve).
2. A six-month military training program followed by 7½ years reserve status, for which 250,000 men annually may "volunteer" upon completion of high school or reaching the age of 19) instead of being drafted.
3. Compulsory Ready Reserve Training — three years for the draftee and perhaps 7½ years for the six-month trainee—which involves 48 weekly drills and a seventeen-day summer camp annually.
4. A 2,900,000 statutory limit on the Ready Reserve, instead of the present 1,500,000 limit (the present paid reserve is only about 700,000 to 800,000).
5. Presidential authority to order to active duty one million Ready Reservists in an emergency declared by himself (no congressional action would be needed).

While this bill does not provide for UMT, yet it is the first step in that direction for it sets up the machinery for such a program. This is very clear from a study of the implications of point No. 2. The provision for a compulsory reserve is also very objectionable for it puts four times as many men under military control as there are at the present time. These were the reasons for our mission.

Upon arrival in Washington, D. C., we conferred with Harold Sherk of MCC, Stauffer Curry and Edgar Metzler of NSBRO, and with Raymond Wilson of the Friends Committee on National Legislation. We were told that the Senate Armed Services Committee was still holding hearings on the bill, so we were urged to make special efforts to see committee members along with other senators from the states we represented. John D. Unruh and Elmer Neufeld worked as one team, and Carl Lehman and David Habegger as another. Altogether we discussed this legislation with eight senators and with legislative assistants in twelve other senatorial offices.

The Senate Armed Services Committee was holding the final hearings on the bill on Monday. On the Thursday and Friday before our arrival some 24 non-governmental agencies were given opportunity to testify. However, on Monday both forenoon and afternoon were set aside for testimony from the Defense Department and General Hershey. We attended a part of these hearings since we believed the hearings would provide background information helpful in discussing the bill with senators.

We felt quite subdued at these hearings for there were some thirty military officers, all of high rank, present. The members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff testified in turn. In the presence of such power we certainly felt that what we had to say was but a "voice crying in the wilderness." Even one senator later commented, "My, but there were an awful lot of black cars out there today."

It was obvious that the present legislation will fail to satisfy the insatiable desires of the Defense Department. In very incisive language they made it clear that they want universal military training, they want compulsory reserve service, they want a minimum of eight years military obligation (combined active duty and reserve training), they want young men from the age of seventeen, and they want permanent legislation.

Also of ominous proportions were the clear indications of the military proneness to sacrifice personal considerations which are basic in a democracy. Repeatedly, when the senators persisted in their questioning about personal inequities, the ultimate answer was that military security must take precedence—personal equity must give way to military requirements.

President Eisenhower had stated that the present number of men in the armed forces could not be reduced unless a compulsory reserve bill was enacted. Committee questioning repeatedly revealed that the military "experts" are not planning such reductions; in fact, it was pointed out that many additional officers would be needed to train the reservists. The present attempt to triple or quadruple the size of the reserve forces is clearly an addition to the regular forces.

There is much apprehension among governmental officials about Russia's military strength and our need to exceed the same. Various statistics are quoted to urge us on. Russia's present willingness to negotiate is interpreted as a result of American military strength.

The request for a reserve force of nearly three million is justified, at least by some officials, in terms of Civil Defense needs. It is generally conceded that, in the event of war, not all enemy planes can be intercepted. The result would be extensive destruction to American cities. In the case of such attack the Reservists scattered throughout the country would be used to maintain order. The request for Presidential authority to call a million Reservists with Congressional action is from a similar perspective.

In trying to evaluate the mission to Washington we cannot point to any overwhelming success. The Thursday following our days in Washington the Senate passed a modified form of the bill by a vote of 84 to 1, with two voting "present." It did have, however, three significant changes:

1. It states that only men who enter active service after the elapse of 30 days after the bill becomes law will have to join the reserves upon completion of service. Thus it will not compel men presently in service to join the reserves. Instead, a cash bonus ($200. - $600.) will be offered to such veterans who enlist for three years active reserve training.
2. It provides for eight years of combined service in the regular forces and the reserves, instead of six.
3. It removes the 250,000 annual limit on the six-month training program.

The bill has been assigned to a conference committee to agree on a compromise form before final action is taken in the Senate and the House. News reports indicate the committee has agreed to No. 1 above.

Those of us who engaged in this mission feel that there was value in giving our witness against this bill in person. We also feel that there is real value in having people in our churches write to their senators expressing their opinion. At one office we were told that they had received quite a bit of mail and that most of it was against the bill.

It is difficult to assess the full effect of the bill in its final form. What will our country be like when the majority of our young men in their late teens and early twenties will be commuting weekly from every small town—from Buhler, Goessel, Carlock, Danvers, Souderton, etc.—to military establishments for military drill and indoctrination? Or, from another point of view, imagine the eventual effect of having some three million men in the active forces, another three million in the Ready Reserve, two million in the Standby Reserve, and over a million on the civilian payroll of the Defense Establishment. Nine million men and women receiving pay, orders or indoctrination from the military.

With an outlook such as the above, many questions demand clear, Christian clarification. What ought to be our relation to a government so preponderantly militaristic? What is our attitude toward the government's defensive military preparations? What is the eventual prospect for our nonresistant views? May God prepare us for the time of crisis.

Flashes of Thought

Unwelcome Visitors

Walter Gering

It was not until later in the week that I heard about the visitors at the Sunday's service. Visitors, of course, are no unusual occurrence at the activities of the church. Seldom does a week go by without some worshiping with us as a congregation. Some visiting with their friends and relatives in the community come with them. Others passing through the village on the highway on a Sunday morning see the church building and pause on their journey to worship. There are those who having heard about Mennonites have been interested in attending a service and make a special trip to be present.

But those two visitors on this particular Sunday were different. No one saw them enter as they quietly slipped in to the service. Where did they come from? No one seemed to know. The Church Register Book at the door had no record of them. Since no one could speak to them we had no information as to their background. All we knew was that during the service their presence was noted. I personally was not aware of their attendance until later.

It disturbed me when I heard of their presence. It reminded me of the story which Jesus told of the sower who went out to sow. Some of the seed fell by the wayside, and the fowls—the birds of the air came and devoured it up. So it had been on this particular Sunday. These two birds—sparrows which had slipped into the service—had detracted from the sowing of the Word. While the Seed was being scattered the presence of these birds had literally "devoured it up," drawing the attention of those who observed them.

And yet, is it not always that way when the sower begins to sow the Word? In every service the birds of the air—sleep, prejudice, preoccupation, discomfort, daydreaming—are present to devour the seed of the Word. These unwelcome visitors are always present, eager to begin their work. As in the parable, so in life some of the seed is lost, never to bring forth fruit.

A few days later these unwelcome visitors were discovered by the custodian. Do you know what he did? He tried to drive them out. When they would not leave he drove them into a corner, laid hands upon them and threw them out. They had no place in the house of God. So it ought to be with all these birds. They may be stubborn; they may resist all efforts to drive them out. But if the seed of the Word is to bear fruit they must be thrown out.

LORD, HELP US TO THROW OUT THESE BIRDS WHICH DEVOUR THY WORD.

A Countr

EVA

The memory of my first visit to a refugee camp is vivid. We had been invited to accompany some of the Christian Missionary Alliance missionaries to the Gougah settlement for a Saturday night service. The image rises before me——the brilliant tropical moonlight on the open space formed by the roadway . . . the borders of deep shadow thrown by the tall dark pines crowding fast upon the long row of new cottages lining the street . . . the glow of a camp fire here and there or the soft light of a candle or a kerosene lamp . . . the aromatic smell from the newly cut resinous pine of the open cooking fires . . . the hazy veil of the smoke hanging under the dark pines . . . in the distance the roar of the waterfall, Gougah, for which the camp was named . . . nearer and in softer cadence the sigh of the pines, the chirp of innumerable insects, the lonely cry of night birds.

Somewhere down the line of shelters, a native drum increased its tempo feverishly . . . nearer at hand was the haunting strum of a long-necked two stringed guitar in oriental lilt . . . and in the partially completed building before me, with its sides still open, thus accomodating a larger crowd than would otherwise be possible, the staccato tones of the Viet-Namese sermon . . . later, pictures of the creation story thrown on the screen by a kerosene projector. It is the juxtaposition of the semi-primitive with such technological mechanisms as a projector that is disconcerting to the newcomer.

The rectangular, dirt-floored, thatched houses of the 200,000 refugees in these camps reflect in their construction the varying character of the people. Some are of woven bamboo——light, airy, and picturesque. Others resemble the log cabins of Early American times, except that the sides are of bark covered slabs rather than the whole logs. On the comparatively treeless stretches near the coast we saw rows of grey mud houses, some of them sagging at the corners almost before they were dry.

In these new raw refugee villages being founded in the forests of the plains area surrounding Dalat, we have distributed food, clothing, and soap. During the Christmas season MCC distributed about seventy tons of "Poinsettia" packages containing edible fats, rice, beans, butter, cheese, and beef and gravy on behalf of the American government—a goodwill offering from the American people to the Viet-Namese. These gifts seem to have been appreciated as that "something extra," and as a reminder to the refugees that they are not altogether abandoned in the tragedy of their exile. We also gave clothing, soap, and a quantity of canned beef—gifts from the American Mennonite people.

The Peoples of Indo-China

The country of Viet-Nam contains a mixture of races. The oldest in central Viet-Nam are the Chams—a proud but small remnant of unknown origin who bear traces of once being highly civilized. According to one of the missionaries who is working among them, they show some similarities to the Samaritans. Their turbans and wrap-around skirts resemble those of the Hindus. Their language has names for Jesus and for certain Christian concepts.

This and their generally receptive attitude makes them easy to witness to, according to my missionary informant.

It is said that when the Viet-Namese came down from the north and were contending with the Chams for the land, it was proposed that the conflict be settled by a tower-building contest—the victor would be the people who could build the tallest tower within a designated time. The Chams set about constructing their usual substantial towers of brick, examples of which still dot the landscape near Nhatrang. But the clever, if unscrupulous, Viet-Namese made their tower of paper and bamboo to complete a structure three times as high as that of the more naive Chams!

The Montagnards (mountaineers) or Mois (savages) as they are sometimes called, also preceded the Viet-Namese. They are a handsome, dark people, more Indian in appearance than Mongoloid, but they are backward, ignorant, and poverty stricken. The women wear a homespun oblong shawl fastened at the waist. The "civilized" ones wear another thrown over one shoulder on top of a blouse. Some of these shawls are quite beautiful in texture and design.

The men wear Western style coats and shirts when they can get them, and trousers too, but many times the lower garment consists only of a breech cloth. The children are often naked. The women and some of the men wear their sleek dark hair in a bun on the nape of the neck.

The Mois carry their babies and handsome native-made baskets for their burdens on their backs. It is not at all unusual to see a group of them walking on the streets of Dalat single file as on their jungle trails, the father leading the group. They may have walked for several days from their villages of windowless, low smoke-filled, thatch-covered huts. It is a common sight, too, to see a group of them squatting on the sidewalk on the busiest street corner in Dalat, enjoying the sights of the city. They are undisturbed by the thick pedestrian traffic, the vendors with their fruit baskets and portable refreshment stands, the half-grown shoats for sale nuzzling on yard-long leashes. Some of the Tribes people, as some call them, pierce the ear lobes and gradually stretch them by inserting larger and larger bamboo rings until the lobes almost touch the shoulder. A few still wear brass coils on the legs from ankle to knee.

The Viet-Namese are of two main types the Tonkinese from the North and the South Viet-Namese. The most striking physical difference between them is the thick queenly roll of hair that the Tonkinese wear, or lacking sufficient hair the velvet rolled headdress which simulates the traditional coiffure.

Some of the middle-aged and older Viet-Namese maintain a custom which is abhorrent to Westerners. They file the front teeth down almost to the gums and then they cover with black lacquer the stubs and the remaining teeth. To make matters still worse, they chew betel nut, which adds its bright red stains to the generally unpleasant effect.

On the whole, though, the Viet-Namese are a slender, petite, dainty people, especially the young girls. They look graceful and slim in their long, tight-fitting, high necked, long-sleeved tunics, slit from hem to waist to form flowing panels over the white silk pajama-like trouser worn underneath. Men sometimes wear the same costume (even to the rolled headdress), but always in black or black and white.

For outdoor wear, a conical hat serves as protection from the sun for women and laborers. Men and children usually wear felt hats which contribute an unintentionally comic air because the too generous size envelopes the head to the ears. The everyday or working dress of the Viet-Namese often consists of black cotton trousers and white or black hip-length cotton shirts.

The language of the Viet-Namese is monosyllabic, staccato, tonal, complex in grammer, and difficult for the foreigner to learn, although the written language is easier to master than the Chinese because a Catholic priest evolved a Romanized system for them some years ago.

MCC distribution station in Phan Ri

An unpopular but aggressive minority are the Chinese, many of them refugees from their native land sometime within the last two decades. I am told that most of the shops in Dalat belong to these energetic, ambitious, commercial people.

The Tension in Indo-China

Still more unpopular are the French officials, plantation owners, and military who are here in great numbers but are leaving fast. Dalat is situated in the mountains. For some years it was an exclusive French resort; consequently the widely spaced villas reflect the tastes of the French. The sturdily built masonry houses, with steep roofs to shed nonexistent snow, nestle among the tall pines for all the world like a European village in the foothills of the Alps. Its luxurious gardens bear all the vegetables and flowers familiar to inhabitants of the temperate zone—and more! The Dalat market was a housewife's dream of near-perfect temperate and tropical produce. A silent but sad witness to the troubled times are the many abandoned villas on the outskirts of Dalat—abandoned because they were too remote for safety.

The bitterness toward the French runs deep and is manifested in various ways. One educated Viet-Namese told me that he never looks a Frenchman in the face. Others constantly express distrust of Viet-Namese military officers who went to France to study, or of officials who have collaborated too closely with the French. One reason that the South Viet-Namese were so long in recognizing the danger in the Viet Minh was that the latter symbolized for them resistance to the French rather than Communism. In fact many of the common people still have small knowledge of the ideology of Communism, although they are beginning to be enlightened by the tragic stories of the refugees from the North.

The religion of the country is as varied as the people. The Montagnards are animists—to them evil spirits are everywhere to be feared and placated. Many of their dialects have no word for "Good Spirit" or God. A section of the Viet-Namese are lukewarm Buddhists, strongly influenced by Confucius. I have heard some of them say that religion is for women and children.

A large number of the refugees are Catholics. Dalat has one large cathedral, a number of smaller churches, and numerous seemingly prosperous Catholic institutions. The comparatively small number of Protestant converts have been won by the only two groups present in this country—the Christian Missionary Alliance and the Seventh-Day Adventists.

Fear is an ever present force in Viet-Namese lives—fear of evil spirits, fear of wild animals, fear of starvation, fear of the French, fear of the Communists.

Indian Golden Wedding

Below is something new, at least as far as I recollect. Brother and sister Spotted-Wolf are the first Indian couple to celebrate their Golden Wedding, having lived as Christians together for 50 years. This is something noteworthy for which the Conference, as a whole, should praise God.

A Golden Wedding Celebration

On Sunday, July 10, we had the privilege and joy of celebrating the first golden wedding in the history of our mission here in Oklahoma. As far as we could ascertain Mr. and Mrs. Ben Spotted-Wolf are the first Indian couple of this area that have lived together for 50 years.

They were married by Rev. John Funk in the first Arapaho Chapel. They both had accepted the Lord as their Savior before they married and have been members of the Arapaho Church during these 50 years.

We had our regular services in the morning. All present stayed for the bountiful dinner which the family had prepared. At 1:30 we assembled again in the sanctuary for the program. After the playing of some chorals and the singing of hymns the brethren Ralph Little Raven and Bill Williams led in opening Scripture and prayers. Members of the family and friends then gave congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Spotted-Wolf each gave a testimony of their faith in the Lord Jesus and how they had tried to walk in His way.

Then followed some more songs and short messages by Walter Fire, Rev. Alfred Wiebe, and Rev. Arthur Friesen. Closing remarks were made by Rev. August Schmidt, pastor of the Arapaho Church.

We thank God for Ben and Helen Spotted-Wolf, who have shown their own people that it is possible to be faithful to each other for 50 years. They have demonstrated to them that God blesses such faithfulness.

Prayer Request from Colombia

Below are some excerpts of a letter from one of our missionaries in Colombia. This gives us a further glimpse as to what it means to be a missionary. To preach the gospel is by all means the core of mission work. We at home seldom realize what taxing other duties may come up. Our missionaries in several of our fields are really on the spot, and constantly need our intercession. Let us not fail to intercede for them.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

How wonderful are Christ's words, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." The presence of the Holy Spirit is such a comfort in time of trial.

We have not been writing to you very often since we have placed your names on the mailing list for the Colombian News, but a problem has arisen and we need your special prayer; so that is the reason for this extra letter.

New and serious restrictions are being placed on Evangelical schools in Colombia. Already this year over 30 Protestant schools have been closed, bringing the total for the past six years to over 160 . . . in spite of the fact that Colombia is about 50 per cent illiterate and that there are not enough schools to accommodate the children of school age. Our school home which has functioned unmolested until the present time is in grave danger of being closed.

The basis of the difficulty is a recent decree demanding a yearly license from the Ministry of Education permitting private schools to function. Our application has been made, along with the applications from dozens of other Evangelical schools, but we know of none that have been granted. This kind of legal obstacle has to a large extent replaced the violence of the last few years.

We assure you that the children here are praying daily that God will intervene and the school may continue. It is only through prayer that the school has remained open until now. Will you join in prayer with them and us for this serious situation?

Backnang Church Dedicated

Dedicatory services at Backnang, Germany, on Sunday, July 10, marked the completion of the first church for Mennonite refugees in West Germany. The new building provides a place of worship for appoximately 90 families. The sanctuary seats 250 while the basement provides rooms for Sunday school classes, youth meetings, a kitchen, and serving area. Much donated labor of American PAX men and several builders, made possible a large saving in construction costs.

Nearly 400 persons filled the new church and overflowed onto the porch and sidewalk for the all-day dedicatory services. Pastor Goetzke, minister of the congregation presided. The principal message was given by Cornelius Wall, associate European MCC director. European PAX Director, Dwight Wiebe, spoke as a representative of the approximately 65 PAX men presently serving in Europe. Assistant European MCC director Milton Harder brought greetings from MCC. Speakers from Germany included Pastor Goetzke, Elder Johannes Hotel, Richard Rupp, Fritz Stauffer, and Ulrich Hege.

The Way of the Cross

English Cyclist Testifies

John Garbutt biked from Fulham to Cambridge, England, during that country's recent rail strike. He had been ordered to appear before the court to explain his position regarding military service and had no other means of transportation.

Peace News reports that the clerk of the court jokingly suggested that John could have brought his witnesses on his bicycle. But John's witness was contained in a 5,000 word statement which gained him conditional exemption from military service.

In this session in court, which is similar to a draft board appearance in the United States, this young college student said:

"Though I was familiar with the words of much of the Scriptures, they seemed to have little relevance to the way normal people lived. The missionary fervor of the New Testament scarcely corresponded with the deep lassitude of the Congregational Church I knew.

"In the summer of 1952, at the age of 19, between my first and second years at Cambridge, I sat down to reread the New Testament and after making a tabulated comparison of the Four Gospels, wrote a version of the Life of Christ in modern English with an everyday setting."

So it was that this non-Mennonite arrived at his nonresistant position regarding war. He reports on his reactions upon his first awakening:

"One of the first things I awoke to was that I had been tacitly sanctioning war as a just solution for international difference. Earlier I had said flatly:

"'I believe that it is perfectly possible to be a Christian and to drop an atom bomb on a crowded city at the same time.'

"Gradually, I came to realize that any thinking Christian could not contemplate such actions without qualms and self-questioning so serious as to make him unfit for the task.

Divided Churchmen

"Responsible churchmen I found divided, in spite of such unequivocal announcements as that of the Lambeth conference:

"'War as a method of settling international disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord.'

"It seems to me that neither the philosophy of negotiation from strength, nor disarmament, nor 'peaceful coexistence,' nor military action 'in certain circumstances' outside our control, are even faintly adequate to the true situation. Only the Cross seems to me to be adequate. The Way of the Cross is to meet evil with good, to love and to transform one's enemies even at their most destructive, whether one has the power or not to negotiate by destruction, to meet even the final brutalities in forgiveness, and self-sacrifice.

"Clearly this must begin on the personal level, and that is why it is my purpose to become an instructor of Christian teaching in schools."

Argument with Editor

Of a meeting with Shaun Herron, Editor of British Weekly, John said, "(H) spoke against Christian pacifism, and in an argument afterwards the same issue emerged. He quoted Reinhold Niebuhr, the American theologian, who, while admitting that the ethic of Christ is pacifist, does not believe pacifism to be practical because of the evil in the world. Thus are the conclusions of nonpacifist Christians befogged. So are the flowers of the garden picked to allow the weeds to grow."

MENNONITE YOUTH EDITOR

With this issue, Maynard Shelly begins the editorship of MENNONITE YOUTH, taking the place of Lois Duerksen who has served in this capacity for the last year and a half. Formerly the minister of the First Mennonite Church of Allentown, Pennsylvania, Maynard is now the assistant executive secretary of the Board of Education and Publication.

John summed up the position of the nonresistant Christian in these closing words:

"The pacifist does not imagine himself free from the corruption and responsibilities of this world. On the contrary, he attempts to combat the corruption—instead of acquiescing in it—by taking on further responsibilities, for Christ's sake."

John asked for unconditional exemption from military service, on the grounds that he knew he had to teach religious instruction in schools. "I don't think that the type of service you can offer me is as important as the work I can do," he said.

Sir Gerald Hargreaves, Chairman of the Tribunal, reminded John that the Tribunal does not "act on the principle of letting people off because they can find something better to do," and in granting conditional exemption advised him that if he wished to carry the matter further, he must go to the higher court.

The example of John Garbutt's awakening through the study of the Scriptures challenges the Mennonite Church to find more ways to witness for nonresistant Christian discipleship.

PENCIL POINTS

Lois Duerksen is getting all set to carve herself a career in school teaching.

So while Lois is molding the minds of second-grade moppets in Whitewater, Kansas, I am left to carve a pencil point and edit MENNONITE YOUTH for awhile.

My name's Maynard Shelly, and I'm a D. P. That means Displaced Pennsylvanian.

Just now I'm making my home in Kansas, but with this issue of MENNONITE YOUTH, I'm moving.

I'm moving in on you, and we'll try to live together. MENNONITE YOUTH will be our home and I'll be living wherever this finds you.

I would like to say that I'll try to be an agreeable host, but I can't. This house of MENNONITE YOUTH doesn't belong to me, it belongs to you.

The editor is your housekeeper. So, if you find any dust, let me know. Dust that develops from a dry condition, that is.

Or if you find any cobwebs, call for the brush.

And then there's the furniture arrangement. If the columns get pushed around, remember that my favorite hobby is rearranging furniture. Just holler when I go off the deep end.

MENNONITE YOUTH is your section and I'm here to make you feel at home, so that we can all be a united Mennonite youth in Christ.

That's the point.

Boom Town Adventure

Ten years ago, Moses Lake, Washington, was a small settlement of some 300 people. Today, it is a boom town with a population of 7,000 or more. What has caused this spectacular growth which presents such unique problems and possibilities?

Three major factors working simultaneously give us the answer. The opening of great tracts of land nearby for irrigation as a part of the Columbia Basin irrigation project has done its part. Larson Air Base located near the city has brought a great many servicemen and their families. Third is the Boeing Company, which has made Moses Lake a branch of its aircraft manufacturing industry.

As a result, most of Moses Lake's people are newcomers. It's a surprise to find someone who's been here more than a year or two.

The established churches are plentiful—in number and variety. But they find it difficult to reach the shifting population in trailer courts and housing units where live the families of construction workers, servicemen, engineers, and prospectors.

Why did a Voluntary Service Unit come to Moses Lake? Many Mennonites are asking that question and we're sure many of Moses Lake's people have asked the same. Here is how it came about.

Edgar Toevs, Presbyterian minister in Moses Lake and Willard Wiebe, of the Menno Mennonite Church near Ritzville, saw that youth volunteers could be of help in this area. The entire project has been one of experiment and faith, but also one that has been most rewarding.

The Workers

We, in the Voluntary Service Unit at Moses Lake, feel privileged to be a small part of the "wheel" in our Conference Voluntary Service program. Together we have worked on our project and we have enjoyed every minute.

The "spokes" of our "wheel" included Anette Kaufman, Marion, South Dakota, schoolteacher who was our unit leader. Also from Marion was Betty Graber. From the Pacific District came Mary Ellen Zook, Portland, Oregon, Lois Franz, Lind, Washington, and Lucille Hege, from Aberdeen, Idaho.

What We Did

We spent our first two weeks teaching Bible school in the local churches. Leola Schultz, who was with the unit for those weeks, taught little tots at the United Missionary Church. Anette and Betty assisted at the Presbyterian-Methodist Bible School. It was an interesting experience to work so closely with these denominations and get acquainted with their program.

On a Saturday morning following our teaching experience, two of us were called into Edgar Toevs' office where we found ourselves face to face with eight ministers of the ministerial association. They commissioned us to make a survey of the trailer courts for the churches. Some of the ministers would ask the trailer court owners for permission to survey their camps, and after introducing us, we would be on our own.

On Monday, went in Lois' car to the Central Trailer Court. Unaccustomed to this type of work, we decided to go together to the first few trailers. Then each one took certain rows and asked for the following information: name, church membership or preference, number of children and their ages, and if the children would be interested in a short Bible school held on the trailer court.

Reactions to these questions varied, but on the whole most of the people were friendly. There were a few who wouldn't give any information, but on the other hand, many were most helpful.

When the question of church membership or preference was raised a surprising number of people gave answers such as this: "We believe churches are good institutions but we do not attend." "We don't have any preference." "We used to attend back home but haven't gotten around to it here."

Most of the mothers were eager to send their children if a Bible school was held on the court.

After doing the survey in the trailer courts we realized that there are a great number of people who have not found the part that Christ should have in their lives. We hope that our visits will help awaken their interest in the church.

Pelican Court Interlude

"Here we are at Pelican Trailer Court! It doesn't look like we are going to have any children this morning," remarked Anette as she and Mary Ellen got out of the car.

They had just left Lucille and Betty at the Lake Shore Trailer Court where they were having a Bible school, and had just arrived at this court where they were teaching.

The two girls picked up their teaching supplies and carried them over to a grassy spot in the shade of some trees. There they sat down to wait for a little boy or girl to peek around a trailer at them.

Soon they saw some children playing on a garbage can, and several minutes later the teachers and the two children were talking happily. It was time to start, and there were only two, so they decided to wait until some other children came.

Finally two older boys approached timidly. Anette asked them if they knew any others who might be coming.

Immediately one of the boys exclaimed, "I have some cousins. We'll go find out if they can come."

And off he and his friend went. So there were only two, but not for long, for back the boys came with two little girls.

"These are my cousins," proudly announced one of the boys.

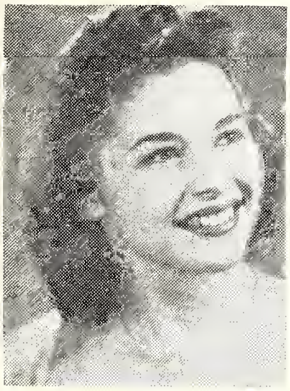
Soon the six children were singing "Heavenly Sunshine," "This Little Light of Mine," and "Fishers of Men." Anette told a story and gave an object lesson and then the children folded their hands and closed their eyes as they prayed together.

Four Bible schools, each of them three days in length, were conducted in a similar manner during this week. Thus our two teams were kept busy every day.

We found some interesting results brought about by the Bible schools. One mother told us that her son had been sickly and wouldn't eat much. But during the Bible school he got up, dressed himself and ate his breakfast of his own accord so he could come to the classes.

Other mothers expressed similar appreciation when the children showed them their handwork. And certainly the children were happy to have a Bible school to which they could come to study the Word of God.

Meet the Presidents



Mrs. Kathleen Kindle, president of the Middle District Young People's Union.

The Middle District Young People's Union recently chose Mrs. Kathleen Kindle of Bluffton, Ohio, to be its president. Having served as the union's vice-president and secretary-treasurer, Kathleen brings to this office considerable experience in youth work.

She also serves as the primary Sunday school superintendent and president of the ladies' chorus in the Ebenezer Mennonite Church, Bluffton, of which she is a member. Married to Herbert Kindle, a railway mail clerk, she lives at 212 South Jackson Street, Bluffton.

Among Kathleen's co-workers in the Middle District Union is Ernest Neufeld, vice-president of the Grace Mennonite Church, Chicago, Illinois. Ernest is a middler at Mennonite Biblical Seminary and is at present summer pastor in the First Church, Reedley, California. Doneta Amstutz, also of the Ebenezer Church in Bluffton, and a sophomore at Bluffton College, serves as secretary-treasurer. Doneta is majoring in elementary education.

Caleb Gerber continues to serve as the union's field secretary for Ohio and Indiana. An active member of the Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio, he is also an officer in the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union. In Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri, the union is represented by Homer Garber, a member of the Bethel Church of Fortuna, Missouri.

An outstanding production of the YPU is the Vine Press, a bimonthly newsheet edited by James Sprunger of Berne, Indiana, with the assistance of Helen Neufeld, of Chicago, Illinois. Both of them have had experience on student publications at Bluffton College.

Fulfilling its aim to lift up Jesus Christ and give Him pre-eminence in the lives of all youth, the union supports the Verney Unruhs in their work as missionaries on Kyushu Island, the General Conference mission field in Japan. Another part of this program is the Ohio-Indiana youth retreat which will be held on the Bluffton College campus, August 27 and 28.

SPECIAL FUND FOR NEEDY AMONG MENTALLY ILL

The Mental Health Section of the MCC is now in process of setting up a special fund for needy patients among applicants to the three MCC administered mental hospitals. This fund will be used only (1) for those whom the hospital psychiatrist recommends as needing the treatment which the hospital can give, (2) when the patient and family recognize the need for treatment but require aid to pay the cost, (3) if there is no other aid available.

Even though our hospital staffs work for much less than competitive pay rates, costs of treatment of mental illness run much higher than general hospital care because the treatment is so highly specialized and usually requires more time. Thus the cost can be prohibitive to those who need this care but have no source of financial aid from relatives or congregation. It is for those who meet all three of the above conditions that this fund is being established.

A local committee will administer the fund from each of the three hospitals—Brook Lane Farm, Hagerstown, Md.; Prairie View, Newton, Kan.; and Kings View Homes, Reedley, Calif. The committee will include the local hospital administrator, psychiatrist, and social worker.

Mennonites and Brethren in Christ have become increasingly aware of their responsibility to the mentally ill. Our mental hospitals and the young men serving in the state mental institutions are outgrowths of this concern. But there have been cases at our hospitals where patients had no finances to cover treatment. Since our hospitals have no source of operating funds other than patient fees, they could not accept many such patients.

If you can contribute to this special fund for needy cases among the mentally ill, send your gift to your conference treasurer or to MCC, Akron, Penn.

DONALD KLIPPENSTEIN TO DIRECT KOREA PROGRAM

Donald Klippenstein has been appointed to direct the MCC program in Korea. The Administrative Committee consisting of Verne Kohls, Robert Lee, and Clara Eshleman will continue to serve in an advisory capacity for the first six months of Bro. Klippenstein's term.

Bro. Klippenstein, formerly of Henderson, Neb., taught mathematics at Bethel College, North Newton, Kans., before entering MCC relief service. Mrs. Klippenstein (Elizabeth Teichroeb) of Winkler, Man., is a registered nurse.

The Klippenstein's sailed for Japan on July 8. They will go from there to Korea, and are expected to arrive at Taegu in early August.

PAX MATRON SAILS

Anne Driediger of Winnipeg, Man., sailed on August 1 for Germany. She will serve for two years as PAX matron at Bielefeld, the newest PAX unit in northern Germany.

Anne is a member of the North Kildonan, Man., Mennonite Brethren congregation. For the past years she has taught grade school at Winkler, Man.

A COUNTRY IN UPHEAVAL

A concommitant of this fear is an underlying distrust of their fellows, especially manifested by those who have gone through the neighbor-spy-on-neighbor policy of the Communists. One such refugee said to me one day, "In the North you did not tell anyone anything that was true—not even your former classmates and friends. And if you intended to go South, you did not say so when asked, even though the next morning might find you at the airport ready to embark."

The Catholic refugee camps have efficient leadership and resources that many of the non-Catholics do not have. This has been a concern with us, and with the other Protestants. As a consequence, we are planning a "model" or pilot village of, largely, non-Catholics. It is our purpose to live at least part time in the new village, giving our services in whatever way we can—with technical know-how, spiritual strength, medical aid, and as morale builders—with God's help. It should be an interesting experience to live in the jungle in a bamboo house.

In the meantime, we have been trying to make our Dalat house a truly, "precious House," as one young Viet-Namese called it, for any who might seek us out. The opening wedge is the natives' ardent desire to learn or improve in English. The urgency of this desire symbolizes in my estimation the turning to America as the real hope for the future of Viet-Nam. Pray that God may give our country the wisdom and power to keep the world at peace and to assist those less fortunate. One needs to see America from this side of the world to realize what a marvelous country it is—and it is in true humility that I speak. God has so richly blessed us, not only in material things, but in intelligence, vitality and courage as well. Let us pray to God daily that we do not appropriate these blessings for our own selfish ends, but that we may always think of ourselves as stewards of His bounty.

The man who cannot wonder is but a pair of spectacles behind which there is no eye.

For the past six months Rev. Sprunger has been supply pastor for this congregation. This was a union service of the six Mennonite churches in this area and the program consisted of talks by representatives of the various churches and farewell addresses by Rev. and Mrs. Sprunger who, with their two daughters, are on their way to the Congo. We were greatly blessed by their stay in our midst. Each week a number of our young people and children are attending retreats at Camp Friedenswald. Several families attended the Peace Retreat the first week end in July. Friesen, home on furlough from the mission field in Africa, occupied our pulpit in the absence of our pastor, and showed slides in the evening. Sunday morning, July 3, our pastor Leonard B. Ewert filled the pulpit at the E.M.B. Church at Meade. July 17, Rosco Schultz, a 1955 graduate from Grace Bible Institute at Omaha, Neb., brought us the message both morning and evening. The Ladies' Missionary Society is making attendance and memory verse cards for the migrant mission station at Eloy, Arizona. Also cutting quilt blocks for the Indian mission station in Arizona.—Corr.

The Creed of the Nations

I condemn war and name as peace
My sought for priceless gem,
Yet still prepare for that which I
So bitterly condemn.

I present Purple Hearts and praise
As rewards to young men
For their efficiency and zeal
In that which I condemn.

Though peace and freedom is my aim,
I train young men to kill,
And through conscription force those men
To train against their will.

Though I denounce the use of force,
Through pious phrases sung,
Yet threat of force I too employ,
Debunks my prating tongue.

Though I profess to be the means
Through which our wars shall cease,
Yet still I train young men for war,
The opposite of peace.

One does not train to save his life
In order to decease,
Then why should nations train for war
To bring a state of peace.

CHRISTIAN PARENTS BABY BOOK by Alta Erb and Winifred Paul, illustrated by Esther Rose Graber. 48 pages. Scottdale, Pennsylvania, Herald Press, $2.75.

A Christian Baby Book

Christian parents will not want to miss the delightful baby book carefully prepared by Alta Mae Erb and her daughter, Winifred Paul, both Christian mothers of Scottdale, Pennsylvania.

Every page of this baby book has a warmth of feeling as it guides parents to recognize their privileges and opportunities in receiving from God the gift of new life to love and to nurture.

"Laborers together with God" is the emphasis of the book. The very first page links the parent to God in the prayer of Manoah:

> "O my Lord,
> Teach us what we shall do unto the child,
> How shall we order the child
> And how shall we do unto him?"

On the following page are the beautiful lines in simple wording:

> "My God, I sit beneath Thee,
> My little child upon my knee;
> My little one looks up to me
> And I look up to Thee."

Large portions of the book are given over to helpful parent-guidance and to charting of the child's growth in all phases of his development, giving space for recording the many achievements in a child's early years.

If you are parents of a newborn babe you will enjoy possessing this book for your own spiritual growth in parenthood and for a later spiritual heritage for your child. The rest of us will enjoy placing this book into Christian homes to which children have been born.

The book is delicately bound in white cloth and is packaged in a white gift box. You will be delighted with the art work by Esther Rose Graber, especially her toddlers at sleep, at play, or at mischief.

THE READER SAYS—

Dear Editor:

At a meeting of the Mennonite delegates attending the 1953 Detroit Conference on the Church and Peace, the concern was voiced that Mennonites ought to testify of their nonresistance convictions to groups associated with the National Association of Evangelicals as well as those in the National Council of Churches.

Several recent articles in Christian periodicals indicate not only that these convictions are finding expression in both of the above groups, but also that they are receiving serious consideration. We are encouraged by this new interest in Christian nonresistance. At the same time, as Mennonites we would do well to consider the current areas of agreement and disagreement.

In an article entitled "God Wills Both Peace and Justice" (Christianity and Crisis, July 13, 1955) Episcopalian Bishop Angus Dun and Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary suggest that pacifist Christians distort the Christian concept of love by their attempt to apply an individual ethic (that which applies between the individual Christian and his neighbor) to a collective situation such as international politics. This article is largely written in answer to "Peace Is the Will of God," an earlier joint statement of the three historic peace churches.

Equally significant is the appearance of two articles in the August 1 issue of the United Evangelical Action. C. N. Hostetter, Jr., president of Messiah College and chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, sets forth the nonresistant view of "The Christian and War." This is answered by Gordon H. Clark, Butler University, in an article entitled "Is Pacifism Christian?". His article relies heavily on the Old Testament and Romans 13 in concluding that the execution of criminals and the waging of war are legitimate functions of government.

How would you answer these objections by fellow Christians?

A Call to Prayer

Elsewhere in the pages of this issue of The Mennonite you find the description and details in regard to the study Conference on the Believers' Church to be held in Chicago this month. In the light of the need for greater unity within our Conference and clarity on important concepts regarding our faith, let us enter into sincere and fervent prayer that the Conference may accomplish in a large measure the aims and purpose for which it has been called. Let us pray that the blessings of this study may not reach only a select few who are in attendance, but that they may be brought back into the life and work of every congregation concerned.

THE CONGO CALLS

We rejoice that more of our missionaries are returning to the Congo. Brother and Sister Sam Entz will sail soon. When they again reach their field, it will be Brother Sam's responsibility to keep all the vehicles in repair as well as do other evangelistic work. Mrs. Entz will have medical work as her particular charge. They would enjoy a steamer letter to wish them Godspeed.

AIR-CONDITIONING

"Hot and humid" seems to be the general weather forecast day after day. Perhaps by the time this is read the prolonged heat may have broken. But at present writing it seems quite general throughout the world.

The art of air-conditioning receives a great stimulus from such warm weather and it has had a tremendous growth with the past few years. The next step seems to be the air-conditioned automobile. Man has a genius for making himself comfortable, physically.

We could do a great deal more to condition the atmosphere, spiritually. This is especially important for the children. Many grow up in an atmosphere that is unwholesome and unhealthy. The church could be as a great atmosphere-conditioning unit in a community, which would make the spiritual climate invigorating and stimulating. Children should have the privilege of growing up where honesty, truth, faith, and love are vital parts of the community "weather."

PROGRESS IN MISSIONS

Many who attended the General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota, in 1950 will remember the high moment when it was voted to open mission work in Japan. The report this week, showing the progress "after four years," is indeed encouraging. As is pointed out, it is not an easy task with everyone just waiting to accept Christianity. But there has been significant progress for which we thank God and take courage.

The Board of Missions deserves our sincere appreciation for the way in which they at once availed themselves of the opening and sent out so large a group of missionaries in so short a time. Sometimes in opening new work things move very slowly. In this case missionaries were selected and sent over with remarkable speed. Probably it was felt that the time may be short and that we must really work while it is day. At any rate, the number of workers put on the field in these few years sets something of a record for our mission work.

But with the sending forth of these fine young Christians there must also go the prayers and support of the home base. They should feel that we at home are with them in spirit and interest, and doing what we can by prayer, information, and giving to support them in their work.

We are extremely limited in China, a good deal of uncertainty exists in India and South America, but in Japan and Africa the doors still seem wide open for mission activity. It is well that we seize the opportunity while it still exists and redouble our efforts to get missionaries out on these fields.

SUMMIT MEETINGS

The whole world was watching the "summit meeting" in Geneva recently, when the heads of four great nations met to discuss common problems and ways of preserving world peace. Just what was accomplished is not quite clear, but it is generally felt that the spirit of goodwill and confidence will have much to do with a better spirit throughout the world.

Perhaps there are other realms in which "summit meetings" could be helpful. Frequently the very fact that we meet with others with whom we may not be in total agreement will help us to understand each other and see each other's viewpoint.

In any large body or denomination scattered over wide areas and having contact with different cultures there are apt to be misunderstandings and different emphases. It would be a good plan, where such differences arise, to have a friendly meeting of the leaders of the different views and discuss their ideas with the hope of understanding each other. This has been done in several instances with a general feeling of real value. More such meetings could well be planned to consider our various shades of differing opinions. In the spirit of Christian fellowship we might become more united witnesses in a divided world.

BEYOND THIS WORLD

Suddenly the papers and radio reports are filled with announcements and opinions about the launching of a small man-made satellite sometime between July, 1957, and December, 1958. About the size of a basketball, it is to be shot 200 to 300 miles above the earth and then start speeding on its orbit around the earth at the rate of 18,000 miles per hour, making its circuit around the earth every 90 minutes. It is expected that scientists will gain much interesting information and data as the new little "moon" goes on its journey for perhaps only a few days.

Some see in this the first step in space-flying to be evolved in time. Whatever the outcome, the world is watching with interests for further developments. The new venture is to be purely in the interests of peace and all information gained is to be shared equally with scientists around the world.

To the Christian, life beyond this world always has a real interest. For the Christian is convinced that there is life beyond the bonds of the earth, and that the true children of God will be ushered into this spiritual world as we leave this earthly life. Much has been written about what the future world will be like but the chances are that it will be much more wonderful than anything we can imagine. As an unborn babe could have little conception of the kind of world it will be ushered into, so we have not the power of comprehension to form a proper concept of heaven. The prospects of going there, however, should be far more thrilling than the announcement of the launching of a man-made satellite in two or three years.

Conference on the Believers' Church

Seeking new light on a variety of problems for the sake of building a more vital church life, eighty delegates from the General Conference Mennonite Church will meet for three days of study in Chicago beginning Tuesday, August 23.

A study of the biblical and historical conceptions of the church under the direction of Erland Waltner, P. J. Schaefer, Cornelius Krahn, and E. G. Kaufman will open the Study Conference on the Believers' Church which has been called by the Executive Committee of the General Conference.

On the second day of this session at Mennonite Biblical Seminary the delegates from the seven districts of the General Conference will study the practices in Mennonite Church life under the leadership of John B. Graber, Cornelius J. Dyck, R. L. Hartzler, and Donovan E. Smucker. The conference will conclude with sectional meetings in which guidance for future activities in church polity, missions, inter-Mennonite relations, and interdenominational relations will be sought.

Elmer Ediger, general secretary of the Board of Christian Service, will open the Study Conference by speaking on the subject, "Statement of Our Task in This Study Conference." This will be followed in the Tuesday morning session by a paper presented by Erland Waltner, associate professor of Bible and Christian education at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, on "The Church in the Bible." A response to this presentation will be given by Paul Goering, pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Upland, California.

P. J. Schaefer, principal of Mennonite Collegiate Institute, Gretna, Manitoba, will trace the historical development of the church concept in a treatise entitled "From the Apostolic Church to the Reformation" on Tuesday afternoon. He will be followed by Cornelius Krahn, associate professor of church history at Bethel College with a paper on "The Mennonite-Anabaptists and the Biblical Church." A response to Krahn's exposition will be given by Russell Mast, pastor of Salem-Zion Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota.

"The General Conference Mennonites and the Biblical Church," a study prepared by E. G. Kaufman, Bethel College professor of religion and philosophy; with a response by J. Herbert Fretz, pastor of Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, will conclude the Tuesday sessions.

Three discussion periods during the first day will allow the delegates a large block of time to evaluate in small groups the studies presented to them. Leaders of the discussion groups which will convene after each presentation during the entire conference include: Wilfred Ulrich, pastor of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, Ontario; J. Winfield Fretz, professor of sociology at Bethel College; John D. Unruh, professor of history, Freeman Junior College, Freeman, South Dakota; E. J. Bohn, pastor of the Bethesda Mennonite Church, Henderson, Nebraska; and Ronald von Riesen, president of Freeman Junior College.

Beginning the second day's activities will be John B. Graber, pastor of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Downey, California; and Cornelius J. Dyck, pastor of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas; with studies in "Standards and Practices in Admitting Members" and "Discipline in the General Conference." "Patterns of Responsibility and Authority in Our Congregations" by R. L. Hartzler, field secretary for the Central Conference; and "Guiding Principles for Our Day from the New Testament and Our Mennonite Anabaptist Experiences" by Donovan E. Smucker, associate professor of biblical theology and Christian ethics at Mennonite Biblical Seminary, will be presented Wednesday afternoon.

The Findings and Statement Committee will give its first report at the Wednesday evening session. Members of this committee include Erland Waltner; Henry Poettcker, instructor at Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Jacob T. Friesen, pastor at the First Mennonite Church, Beatrice, Nebraska; Willard Claassen, executive secretary of the Board of Education and Publication; H. N. Harder, pastor of the First Mennonite Church at Normal, Illinois, and vice-president of the General Conference; D. C. Wedel, president of Bethel College; and Robert S. Kreider, dean of Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio.

On Thursday morning the delegates to the study conference will divide into six groups to study special concerns facing the church. Under the direction of Lloyd L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College; and P. R. Harder, secretary of the Canadian District Conference; one group will study "The Congregation, the District, and the General Conference." A second group will study "Our Concept of Church on the Mission Field" led by Andrew R. Shelly, Mennonite Biblical Seminary instructor, with the assistance of Lubin Jantzen, missionary to India. Another group will study "The General Conference and Inter-Mennonite Relations" under the direction of Henry A. Fast, professor of Bible and Christian education, Bethel College; and David Schroeder, former pastor of the Bethel Mennonite Mission, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Two other sectional meetings will study "Responsibility of Mennonites in the Larger Christian Church" and "Values and Problems of the Lay and Supported Ministry." John Schrag, instructor in psychology and philosophy at Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska; and Harold H. Gross, professor of philosophy and psychology at Freeman Junior College;

A Concern

VIRGIL VOGT

Most persons who have an Anabaptist heritage, view this unique background with humble satisfaction.

We have studied long trying to find for our day an equivalent to this heroic Christian movement. The search has led us to adopt distinctive and sometimes radical positions on issues such as: labor relations, war, vocations, mutual aid, political responsibility, and race relations.

There is one area, however, in which we as a church have failed to apply these great principles for which our forefathers stood. The administration of church programs bears only a faint imprint of the distinctively Anabaptist doctrines.

Our heritage is obvious in the types of service which the church is trying to provide. But there is nothing peculiarly Anabaptist about the way in which this service is administered.

We have concentrated our efforts on the task to be done and have been satisfied to pattern our administrative procedures after those of other similar church and governmental agencies. When there were hungry to be fed, we exerted every effort to feed them. When refugees needed houses, our primary concern was for their building. That Sunday school classes have teachers and congregations have the usual services, has often been the goal for which we resolutely struggled. That church schools continue and grow is a major concern.

Because we are performing a Christian service, the occasional hard feelings generated in the process are usually accepted with regrets, and the program continues. If some individual's personality is wounded in the process, with fatalistic resignation this is viewed as a cost of doing the church's work. After all, there had to be a Judas.

For several decades the church has been actively administering a commendable program of Christian activity and service. Yet along the road over which we have traveled, are the scars and debris of strife, misunderstanding, jealousy and competition. Because the cause is Christian we have continued in spite of these regrettable incidents.

But this is a pagan doctrine! This is the foundation on which communism stands; it was this idea that formed the cornerstone of Hitler's philosophy. There is no cause so worthy that it dare continue in spite of unacceptable by-products incurred in the process. No goal is so high that questionable means for reaching it are justified.

As confirmed in the story of the widow's mite, Christ was more concerned about "How" and "Why" things were done, rather than in the deeds themselves. Wouldn't this be a radical approach to church administration! It might mean building one half as many refugee homes just to maintain harmony between brethren. Terrible? But why build the others if because of it there is jealousy among administrators. "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not Love it profiteth me nothing."

You will recall the scriptural admonition—if on your way to the temple with an offering, you remember a brother with whom there is difficulty, leave your offering and go become reconciled to your brother. Worship and service must follow Christian relationships with all brethren.

Real Christian service can only result as a by-product of a deep spiritual condition. Even in church administration, Christian service can be performed only if and when this essential spiritual condition has been achieved within the organization. To continue in spite of internal difficulties is gross hypocrisy.

We need to be primarily concerned in our church administration with "How" and "Why" things are done. That something is accomplished must be a secondary consideration. Procedural standards generally acceptable to business and government dare not suffice in transacting God's business.

will lead the first group while P. K. Regier, executive secretary of the General Conference Mennonite Church; and I. I. Friesen, president of Canadian Mennonite Bible College; will direct the latter group.

A final group under the leadership of A. H. Schultz, pastor of the Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; and Elmer Friesen, pastor of the Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania; will study "Emphases Needed for Strengthening Our Biblical Church Life and Mission."

Following the adoption of a statement to the General Conference congregations, the delegates will hear a closing message given by Dr. S. F. Pannabecker, professor of missions and American Church history and president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, on "My Vision for the General Conference Mennonite Church."

The devotional sessions for the study conference will be in charge of A. E. Kreider, former president of the Board of Missions.

Invited to the study conference are the officers of the seven district conferences with delegates from each district on the basis of one for each 1,000 members. Visitors interested in attending the sessions of the study conference should make inquiry of P. K. Regier, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

The aims of the study conference are to get basic direction for General Conference church life in the light of its God-given mission, to examine the concept of the believers' church in the light of Scripture, and to plan how to move ahead on these issues toward a more vital church life.

Consecration for PAX Men

A service of consecration was held on Sunday evening, July 24, at the Hinkletown, Pa., Mennonite Church for the 26 young PAX men who sailed for Germany the following Wednesday.

Brother Ira Buckwalter, treasurer of the Eastern Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, brought the message, and Brother C. N. Hostetter, chairman of the Mennonite Central Committee, lead in the service of consecration.

Brother Hostetter stressed the importance of the service which these PAX men were to render their country during these next two years. To ease the tensions of fear and hatred by building understanding and trust while helping these people in their need, constitutes a service to our country which men in uniform cannot do, he said. He then lead in a prayer of dedication.

Included in the program were testimonies by four of the PAX men. Challen Beattie, a Presbyterian from Summit, New Jersey, who has chosen to give his 1-W service in PAX, presented this as his testimony:

"Yes, I come here as a Presbyterian, but not as a stranger—for wherever we go in the name of Christ, we are one!

"There are, perhaps, two questions which I have been asked again and again since I came to Akron to join the PAX group. The first is 'How did you come to decide to take this stand?' The answer to this one is comparatively simple.

"I was brought up in an atmosphere of Christianity by my parents—both devout Christians. I was sent to Sunday school in the usual way, studied the Bible in the usual way and became a member of our church in the usual manner. This all passed.

"Then, while I was in college, there came the time for my decision about my two years under the draft.

"What about the Christian teachings that I had learned? Were they not the truth?

"The answer was yes! That is how I became a conscientious objector.

"The second question that I was asked quite frequently was 'How did you come, or rather, how were you lead to join the PAX program?'

"There are perhaps, few here who know what it is to be alone in one's convictions—what it is to be scorned and even hated for these beliefs, to see your Christian statements 'echoed' only in the smug, knowing glances of your schoolmates. Even my parents who loved me and who could understand my reasons could not agree with me. So one learns what loneliness is. There were times when my faith was so shaken by this that only the 'mustard seed' remained.

"When I came to Akron I was seeking fellowship—fellowship with people whose ideas and convictions were like mine—friends—like all of you!

"I visited Akron, and I found this fellowship here at Akron.

"So this time is, for me, a time to give a prayer of thanksgiving for this fellowship found. And as we, in this PAX group go out together to our service in Germany, it is also my prayer that we might learn more of this love which 'beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things and endureth all things.' "

Twenty-six PAX men sailed on July 27, the 35th Anniversary of the creation of MCC, for Germany. They will spend the next two years in construction work in one of the four German PAX units at Backnang, Enkenbach, Wedel, or Bielefeld. From left to right they are (first row) A. Shelly, Quakertown, Pa.; D. Short, Archbold, Ohio; J. Stemen, Goshen, Ind.; P. Gingerich, Uniontown, Ohio; L. Reichert, Bremen, Ind.; J. Raser, Dallas Center, Iowa; P. Boyer, Dayton, Ohio; M. Stoltzfus, Elverson, Pa.; H. Boshart, Mannsville, N. Y. (Second row) F. King, West Liberty, Ohio; J. Shearer, Elizabethtown, Pa.; D. Hartman, Wakarusa, Ind.; D. Hostetler, Harper, Kan.; I. Zook, Latour, Mo.; E. Pfile, Freeport, Ill.; H. Miller, Arthur, Ill.; R. Lambright, LaGrange, Ind.; J. Kauffman, Parkersburg, Pa. (Third row) R. Lambright, LaGrange, Ind.; M. Gerber, Sugarcreek, Ohio; A. Keim, Uniontown, Ohio; A. Kasper, Hutchinson, Kan.; J. Bertsche, Flanagan, Ill.; L. Hochstetler, Kalona, Iowa; C. Beattie, Summit, N. J.; M. Hostetler, Topeka, Ind.; J. Besse, Uniontown, Ohio. Dean Hartman will sail during August.

AS WE ARE BORN

He might have begun his earthly career as a full-grown man. The Incarnation might just as easily have been accomplished within the limits of adult life and full manhood. But what an immeasurable loss! It is because He was born as we are born, lived through all the problems and difficulties of our lives, died—and yet conquered—that He is the continuing inspiration of our hearts today.

Genius and Saint

THE WORLD OF ALBERT SCHWEITZER by Anderson and Eugene Exman. 144 pages. New York: Harper, $5.00.

Taking the place of Abraham Lincoln as the dominant sermon illustration of our times is Albert Schweitzer. When we look for someone who embodies devotion, self-sacrifice, and service to humanity, we turn to the witness of Schweitzer. In this unusual book of photographs we discover why this eighty-year-old man has caught the imagination of the world.

Schweitzer says, "Example is not the main thing in influencing others. It is the only thing." As such he has set an example which is the outgrowth of his theology.

As in music he is a student of Bach and in philosophy of Goethe, so in theology his name is joined with Karl Barth, not because he and Barth are alike but because they contrast. Barth in his theology makes much of eschatology, the doctrine of last or final things. Schweitzer also has an eschatology but it is equated with Paul as "being-with-Christ." This fellowship leads not to speculative concern of events "beyond history" but to ethical concern now. This concern is expressed in the words, "Reverence for life (Ehrfurcht vor dem Leben)." He sees Christ as the supreme revelation of a world-renewing ethic.

Born a German citizen in Alsace in the village of Guensbach he early felt that because he himself had been spared personal pain it was his call to help in diminishing the pains of others. So in spite of the fact that his genius in theology, philosophy, and music assured him a secure academic career, he purposed to give himself to the task of carrying his share of the world's misery. Because he felt uneasy about only talking about the religion of love, he has spent twenty-five years since 1913 in a hospital on the dark continent's west coast, in the Gabon province of French Equatorial Africa. Serving under the Paris Missionary Society but without financial aid from them he has built and rebuilt hospitals there serving as the missionary physician to ten different native tribes.

Erica Anderson, producer of a number of film biographies, has given us more than just a Schweitzer picture book. The photographs tell a story. The text by Eugene Exman supplies more than captions. He allows the pictures to tell their own story, and puts into words those dimensions of this great life which cameras cannot capture.

Flashes of Thought

Unafraid

Walter Gering

We laughed as they tore past us in front of the car. It was only later that I pondered the real significance of the pursuit. We had been called to meet with the draft board and so we had made certain that we would be there in time. In fact, we were early and found ourselves sitting in the car as we waited. The normal activities which appear on every street caught our passing attention. In our discussions we hardly noticed them. We were more interested in going over the more immediate concerns of the moment. Several times we did notice him as he hurried across the lawn, in and out among the bushes. The school grounds were directly opposite our car and he was evidently familiar with the lay of the land. We thought nothing of it. He was going about his business and we were tending to ours.

Then suddenly like a streak they whizzed by, across the street and on down through the alley. It seemed so ridiculous, that big husky dog yelping and straining every muscle in mad pursuit of that little bunny rabbit. In and out, whizzing around the corners the little fellow dashed for his life. He had no time to lose; he must escape from the path of that mortal enemy or pay with his life. He was no match in strength for that dog. What he lacked in strength must be overcome in speed and cunning.

I do not know whether he escaped or not. The last we saw of them he was gaining ground. I hope he made it safely. My heart went out to that little fellow in his plight.

It was the words of Robertson which stopped me in my tracks. With that scene still so vivid in my mind my eyes became fixed upon those sentences: "Some Christians are like scared rabbits. They jump and run at the first adversary who says: 'Boo.' They have no more courage than grasshoppers and shy at every shadow. They have to be nursed and coddled if they do their ordinary duty as Christians and church members. Panic is the worst of defeat."

Paul must have had the same thought in mind when he wrote to the Philippians: "And let your manner of life be worthy of the Gospel of Christ . . . and be not frightened in anything by your opponents." For little rabbits it is but proper that they flee in terror. But for children of God, let them "stand firm in the Lord."

In case you need help in drawing up your will, simply address the Conference Treasurer, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas. We will see to it that you get the right kind of help—and it isn't expensive.

After Four Years

VERNEY UNRUH*

Just four years ago the M. S. Olga Maersk steamed into Kobe port and we were at the end of our journey. New scenes greeted our eyes, new sounds our ears, and new smells our noses. Now, after four years, we do not feel so much like strangers; in fact we feel quite at home. Japan has truly become our adopted country.

High lights of the four years stand out like mountain peaks—the trip with "Uncle Will" Voth around the island of Kyushu shortly after we arrived and being led of the Spirit to choose Miyazaki prefecture as our field; welcoming other new workers that year—Vorans, Miss Patkau, Boschmans; living together with these co-workers in the Kobe Mission House while studying the language; the pilgrimage of all of us to Miyazaki for a visit with the Voths and to see our new field in April, 1952; moving to Miyakonojo in February, 1953; watching the work develop as the Lord opened doors; being joined by other workers as they completed formal language study; the first baptisms at the various stations; the first Bible camp; the visit of the Shelly-Detweiler party last year—these and many other experiences come to mind in a brief glimpse at the past.

The victories and the joys that have been ours have come not because we were wise or powerful or of noble birth. The source of these is our Living Savior who is "the same yesterday, today and forever." That there have also been mistakes and failures we would not deny; and the source of these has been our inexperience, our failure to follow Christ completely; an over-concern for self and our own comforts; being busier and more concerned with the things of this world than for that which is Unseen and Eternal.

In these four years the understanding of our work in reaching Japan for Christ has undergone change. Like most young missionaries we came to Japan fired with the enthusiasm of General MacArthur's words that 1000 missionaries could make Japan a Christian nation in three years and reports that the people were hungry for the Gospel. Now that we have a more realistic picture of the work we know that those were fine words but they were spoken from a rather superficial understanding of what it requires to win a nation to Christ that has been under the influence of other religions for centuries. People were hungry, it is true, but that hunger was for anything new and different, not necessarily the Gospel.

So it has required considerable adjusting and refocusing on our part. Our vision remains the same —Christ for Japan and Japan for Christ—and our message has not changed—the Cross of Christ still holds the answers for our deepest needs; but we are still seeking for the method God wants us to use in proclaiming this message. That only preaching is not enough is clear to us; somehow we must also demonstrate that Christ is the Living Savior Who would have men serve Him and Who would be their companion seven days a week.

So much for reflections. Our work the past four months has been slowly developing into something more stable and permanent. In April, four of our fine young Christians left us—a girl just out of high school went to Nichinan to help in the new kindergarten where the Vorans are stationed, and three boys left for Tokyo where they entered Japan Christian College to train for future leadership. You can well imagine that this left quite a hole in a small group but since then older people have shown greater interest and been more regular in attendance and this has been very encouraging to us—several mothers, two businessmen and especially two young men who have a vision of establishing a Christian Brotherhood.

This Brotherhood, we feel, is the most significant development in our work here thus far. The two boys are Hamada and Matsumoto. Both of these boys became Christians before we knew them through the influence and teaching of Soul Clinic missionaries. Since that family moved away these boys started coming to our meetings and are both radiant Christians. Hamada-san has been baptized over a year; Matsumoto-san was baptized on June 3 at our service here.

The Brotherhood idea originated with these two. Up until several months ago Matsumoto was in partnership with his brother making bamboo chopsticks. His brother decided that he wanted to sell out and dissolve the partnership. Matsumoto talked to Hamada and they decided it would be a good opportunity to take over this small industry and make it a Christian industry based on Christian principles and then use whatever profit they made for evangelism. At that point they came to me with their plan. I encouraged them all I could. I also told them about the Omi Christian Brotherhood which has been operating for 50 years in a small town near Kyoto. It was decided that it would be most profitable if we went and observed the work of the Omi Brotherhood firsthand. So the first week in May we spent three days there. One leaves there with the feeling that this is one of the most significant phases of Christian work being done in Japan today. Our visit only increased our enthusiasm and determination to develop something similar here in Kyushu. Since then we have been praying, working and planning and now financial problems have been solved temporarily and we will be ready to launch the Kirishima Brotherhood within a week or two. (Kirishima is pronounced Ki-key, ri-like in real, shi-she, ma-like in mama; ki-ri-she-ma). For the time being chopsticks will be produced since this business has a background of some 20 years but we have plans to expand and develop other bamboo products, if possible for export. So it is possible that some day you will own something made by the Kirishima Brotherhood.

*Missionary to Japan

This is an adventure of faith. An adventure of faith must be backed by prayer so this is one special request we would like for you to remember.

Another aspect of our work that needs your prayers is the Bible camp program for this summer. The camps the past two years have been high lights in our work just as retreats serve a real need in the Church at home. We will have two camps—a junior camp for junior high and high school students (Aug. 3-5) and a senior camp for older young people (Aug. 6-8).

Also on the program for this summer are tent evangelistic campaigns. In our limited experience they have proved to be an effective way to reach some people. Those who became believers in a tent campaign in Nichinan last November are now the nucleus of the church there. And a tent campaign in Miyazaki in May proved that older people in Japan will also respond to the gospel message. A number of old grandmothers are now regular in attending services and express real joy now that they believe in the True, Living God. One major advantage of a tent campaign is that people are less hesitant to enter a tent than they are to enter a building such as a home or church.

There will be four campaigns, most of them ten days. The first will be in Hyuga where the Edigers live; next in Takazaki where I have had a Bible class for nearly two years; and finally two campaigns in the Kobayashi area where the Boschmans are working. Speakers are being secured from other churches and the six young men of our Mission who are in school are coming back for the summer vacation to help. They will conduct children's meetings, do house to house visitation and be on hand to deal with individuals personally after the close of the meetings each night. You can also have a part in these campaigns by praying for them. We are expecting great things.

Our family is all well although with the coming of summer heat we find that we tire more easily and must slow up considerably. The rainy season will soon be over and then the real summer heat will set in. We have experienced that our bodies are still not used to this climate so we covet your prayers for the health of all your Japan missionaries during these summer months.

Real joy comes not from ease or riches or from the praise of men, but from doing something worthwhile.

First Fruits at a New Station in Japan

What a joy the first fruits are: Even in our gardens and fields. How much more in that field which Jesus speaks of in John 4:35. Such joys have been experienced in every land, also on the mission fields. Yet one never gets tired of rejoicing with our missionaries when they can point to such first fruits.

Here is a short statement taken out of one of Brother Paul Boschman's reports:

"For over three months I have been visiting a patient in the city hospital who is a young English teacher by the name of Shiramizu. During this time he has finished a short course on the Gospel of Mark. While finishing the last lesson he gave his heart to Christ. Now he has a wonderful testimony. He said to me the other day, "I have been saved in this hospital, and as a Christian I am to preach the gospel to every creature. In the past three years I have taught over 1000 junior high school students and will teach many more in the future. I want to tell them the gospel of Jesus Christ." He further said, "My desire is to love God with all my heart, and soul, and mind." Praise the Lord with us for Brother Shiramizu, our first convert in Kobayashi! Then let us also pray for him that he may grow strong in his faith and live an upright life even while he remains in the hospital for some time to come."

We Are Challenged

In September our missionaries in Japan expect to carry on intensive evangelistic work by means of tent meetings. They have asked us to remember them and all the hearers before the throne of grace in this campaign. Let us do that.

Many of you will have received Rev. Paul Boschman's "Kobayashi Linkletter." I will here quote only a few sentences from that letter: "Pray that many of these folks will decide for Christ during the tent meetings in September. Speaking of tent meetings, both the Kobayashi and Kyomachi meetings are heavy upon our hearts. Please make them a special matter of prayer—for the evangelist, personal workers, the listeners, and the missionaries. It would be well if you could form little prayer meetings during the very days of the tent meetings."

Some Indian Testimonies

ANNA BAERG*

We want to thank all who pray for us and the Lord's work here. We want to thank those too, who visit us from time to time, and encourage our hearts in the Lord.

We are especially thankful for having been privileged to have Howard G. Nyce with us for three weeks of evangelistic meetings. We not only had meetings in the evening, but the Christians at Oraibi met every morning at seven for prayer meeting while we were having meetings here. At 9 a.m., Dr. Nyce spoke to the mission school children. At 10 a.m. we had Bible study at the church. This often lasted till 12 noon because the Christians here are genuinely interested in the study of God's Word. Dr. Nyce spoke on the Book of Ephesians, here at Oraibi and the Christians wanted to have another Bible study Saturday morning. After we finished the Book of Ephesians, we had some testimonies by the Christians as to what this study had meant to them. I won't be able to quote them word for word, but I think you'll enjoy their message.

Susie, one of the fine Christians here, said it had hit the sore spots in her life. "There were some things in my life I knew shouldn't be there. Everything we shouldn't have been, that's how I've been. We had been praying that the Lord would reveal these sore spots and He did."

Jennie, a Christian of only about seven years spiritually said, "My testimony is about the same. These lessons have showed how we should walk before God. I haven't been a Christian very long and some of these things I've never heard. I've been lifted out. I've been so anxious to study His Word and I'm so happy to be enlightened."

Tom, one of the older Christians who missed only one meeting at all three stations said, "From the first day I knew it was something big and it was something we needed. I liked the illustration Rev. Nyce used about looking through glasses, showing how God looks at us through the Blood of His Son and we are justified. It's so big to my heart."

K. T. Johnson said, "I thought I knew, but now that we have studied Ephesians, I see we have been so short of that. It's clear now. I wonder if my walk is going to be that way now. It isn't in our own strength that we'll do it. All this time we have been wanting to be rocked and have attention. I'm very happy you came. We've been praying that you would shake us by the shoulder and wake us up. I have translated Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians, but I was like the Old Testament Prophets, they prophesied, but didn't understand, that's how I translated."

Willard, who used to be our interpreter, but who backslid, and just now came into the fellowship of the church again said: "Its been quite a while since you gave me the memorandum of your teaching. It has helped me a lot. It talks about me. The Word of God may offend me, but He wants us to be obedient, so why do we want to be offended. I just began walking again. The only provision I can see is to pray. If the evil spirit does start working again, use the Scripture. We don't use the Scripture enough. I'm not going to brag now, its been a hard teaching, you sifted us, but it's the Word of God, and we needed that. When I went to Fred I wasn't happy. It used to be when someone corrected me, I get wrath, but now the Word renews me. I really enjoyed the teaching. We have to pray and get down again where we started before."

Willard's wife, Alice, who is a sweet Christian, said, "He talked for himself. Two days of studying the Scripture points my life out. Its been a joy and blessing because it has lifted and restored me. This lesson this morning made me change some of my opinions toward other Christians. We should look at each other as saints. When I see a Christian I think of Christ. When I didn't have the Lord I saw the two edged sword pointing to me everywhere. It was so powerful I couldn't dodge it."

Glimpses from Hopiland

Below are a few gleanings from a friendship letter from Mr. and Mrs. P. K. Dirksen of Oraibi, Arizona. These glimpses bring out the joys and sorrows on an average mission field. Let us pray for the strength and continuing energy of our workers on the fields.

"Church attendance varies from a record high of ninety-five on Easter Day to a low of thirty-eight on May 30. Human nature has not changed through the ages, and we still "wrestle not against flesh and blood, but, against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world." Especially do the young people find difficulty in resisting evil. Though some of Pete's Boys' Class have been quite regular, as have a faithful few in Dorothy's Girls' Class, yet the ceremonials have a Satanic power which only God's love can conquer. Pray for them."

"During the week in March when Rev. Howard Nyce held special meetings at Oraibi, we felt a definite spiritual awakening among the people. His messages proved a great blessing to us all. Thursday evening was a special occasion of rejoicing and praising God, when Willard and Alice Sakiestewa, who had left the church in anger a few years ago, openly confessed their sins and were gladly welcomed by the Christians' warm handclasp and words of encouragement. This family needs your earnest prayers because at present their only means of livelihood is making Katchina Dolls, (idols) which is not a Christian occupation. Also, the older children have lost the desire to attend church."

CHICAGO STORY

HELLO! We're glad you stopped by for a minute. We would like to give you a brief look at our unit here in Chicago and give you a picture of the Woodlawn Voluntary Service as nine of us are experiencing it.

The setting is Chicago's southside. One of our group reported an impression of the community like this:

"Late last night my sleep was disturbed by loud hilarious laughter and angry shouts. I hurriedly sat upright thinking strangers were entering our building. Upon glancing out of the window I noticed the sounds were emanating from the hotel across the street; just another group leaving after hours of riotous living.

"Back in bed again, other sounds came to my ears. A saxaphone rent the night air with its wierd melody. Cars came screeching to a halt at the corner of 47th and Woodlawn. Off in the distance sirens started and I knew somewhere there was tragedy."

A Changing Community

You have concluded correctly. This community is not one that rural people are accustomed to, but is characterized by an unstable population. It has not always been so, for until ten years ago the southside of Chicago was considered a highly respectable locality.

But in 1948 the restrictive covenant, an agreement between landlords that they will not sell or rent their property to non-whites, was declared illegal by the courts. So the "Black Belt," literally bursting at the seams because of increased Negro migration to Chicago, overflowed into this upper-class community. Landlords split the fashionable dwelling units into smaller apartments of 2 or 3 rooms charging the same high rate that had been charged for the large comfortable apartments.

White owners pulled stakes, perhaps not only because of their Negro neighbors but because of the current trend to move to the open suburbs. Because of crowded conditions blight and decay set in. Today we see litter and empty cans strewn about the streets, visible evidence of an overtaxed garbage collection system. Many buildings seem to be in need of repair and care. Uneasiness develops as crime increases and law enforcement becomes slack.

School population figures from nearby Shakespeare Elementary School provide a more dramatic picture of the increased population. According to a report recently given, this school, located directly behind Mennonite Biblical Seminary, between 1951 and 1954 has increased its enrollment 56 per cent.

In spite of blight and deterioration there has been marked improvement in the last years. The South East Chicago Commission is one organization that has been making plans and taking action for the redevelopment of this area. They want to provide adequate housing for everyone, regulate the flow of traffic, improve the parking situation, and eliminate the spread of a slum condition.

Churches have established centers of recreation, but the moral and spiritual problems are not being

The Woodlawn Service Unit asks . . .

In Whose Service Are You?

It is a mistake to think that you need not serve anyone. Whether you realize it or not, you serve; the only question is, whom do you serve?

By nature we are made to serve ourselves. We are all sinful, that is to say, sin is our master and the service of sin leads to destruction. We must have an altogether different Lord and Master.

We must serve the Lord Jesus Christ. It is for this reason that He has redeemed us. The word redeemed means "purchased for use" and so it is that we who are in Voluntary Service have found ourselves purchased by God to serve Him. We are happy that we have this opportunity. Think what it cost Jesus to win us for His own and take us into His service. Let us serve Him in all that we do and say.

"Ye serve the Lord Christ," Col. 3:24.

CHICAGO STORY

met. This challenge has caused our Woodlawn Mennonite Church to attempt an extensive Sunday school and weekday church school program which has been growing by leaps and bounds.

People for the Challenge

Into this kind of community and to meet this kind of a challenge, the nine members of the General Conference Service Unit came last June.

JoAnn Kleinsasser and Yvonne Hofer arrived first coming from South Dakota. Another South Dakota girl is Winona Waltner.

Tom Lehman, from Berne, Indiana, is fortunate or unfortunate (we can't decide which) to be the only fellow in the unit. Doris Leichty also came from Berne, making this a busy summer for her since she assisted in Bible school in her home community before coming to Chicago. Harriet Amstutz from Bluffton, Ohio, who taught school in Kansas last year, and had been in Chicago last summer was another member of the group.

Eldeen Stucky, Moundridge, Kansas, was our unit leader, which meant that among other things she had to keep unit activities moving and buy the groceries. Marian Regier from Whitewater, Kansas, spent part of her time with the unit, and part doing secretarial work for the Congo Inland Mission which has its headquarters here. Martha Thiessen from Inman, Kansas, completed the group.

Mornings, Days, and Weeks

Three large tasks consumed the time of these Voluntary Service workers in Chicago.

The first was summer Bible school. Part of our unit served at the Grace Mennonite Church and part of us at the Woodlawn Church on the seminary grounds. The population around the Grace Church is predominantly white while the Woodlawn Church is in the Negro district described earlier. The enrollment for the twelve days of Bible school at Woodlawn was ninety and at Grace forty-seven.

Our second privilege was to accompany children on day camping sessions from July 19 to 29. The camp site was Laning Woods Forest Preserve where the children worked and played from 9 o'clock in the morning to late afternoon. Boys and girls from 8 to 13 were enrolled and those who attended Bible school regularly were given first chance to go. At day camp the children engaged in hikes, games, crafts, and swimming. There was also time for meditation and a story. So these children learned to get along with others, to know God in nature, and to apply in everyday living what they had learned.

The final phase of the VS unit was a week at Camp Friedenswald in Michigan with children from all three Mennonite churches in Chicago. Buses took the children to the camp where they engaged in the various camp activities. There were Bible classes, a nature study course, and chapel, along with crafts and recreation. On Saturday night a consecration service was held in which some of the children made real decisions for Christ.

Not All Work

This was our work, but we had time for play too. Our unit enjoyed a variety of outside activities since we came to Chicago. The first Saturday spent here we attended a picnic intended to welcome us. It did.

On the following day we visited one of the Jehovah's Witnesses' world rallies held in Comisky Park, home of the Chicago White Sox. The J. W. president spoke at great length about the importance and responsibility of Witnesses in the past, present, and future. If he had not been standing in the shade he wouldn't have been able to last as long as he did. None of us were converted.

We attended several concerts in Grant Park, hearing a performance of Beethoven's Ninth "Choral" Symphony in D Minor at one of them. We also attended Moody Memorial Church taking part in a service at which Dr. Alan Redpath, the pastor spoke. We also visited the late evening service of the First Church of the Deliverance, a colored church, which began at 11 o'clock and lasted until midnight.

PENCIL POINTS

A bicycle has its ups and downs.

And it's good exercise, mixed with a bit of work.

Like walking, bicycling brings you close to the world. An automobile doesn't do that.

It separates you from everything around you. Enclosed in a steel hull, catapulting across the earth, you miss life. You move too fast with your mind set on where you're going, rather than where you are. There is no chance to slow down and observe life. He who slows down is bumped from the rear.

A bicycle goes slower, though it's still faster than walking, so that you're not bored by being in one place too long.

So you stop when you spy a buttercup; you pause to eat a berry; or read the fine print on that roadside sign.

Thus you can see life and think.

While coasting and enjoying this unmixed bliss I discovered the relation between joy and service in the Christian's life.

The great joy in pushing those pedals is that there come moments when you can coast.

All joy is greatly to be desired.

But he who coasts must also pedal.

The Christian finds joy in having been saved by the Lord Jesus Christ. But it is a joy that brings responsibility.

All Christian young people are happy. But sometimes they find their happiness melting like an ice cube in a cup of hot tea. They have not faced the responsibility of the joyous.

For if joy finds no expression in service and witness it soon runs down.

That's the point.

Watermelon and Fish

BARBARA VOGT

This all started one night when the Youth Fellowship of the First Mennonite Church of Halstead, Kansas, had a meeting at our pastor's home. We had been playing croquet in the yard and had just returned to the house. We were sitting around talking, when our minister's wife said something about going fishing.

Plot

No one gave it much thought, except one of our sponsors. In his mind he was forming a plan. Soon he asked if we would like an all-night camping-fishing party. Of course, we all chorused a "yes" back at him.

Our president appointed three committees: food, transportation, and place. These committees acted immediately. Two girls sent invitations to everyone.

Soon the transportation was arranged, a big truck with our bed rolls as seats. Food was ordered: steak, potatoes, salad, and watermelon for supper; bacon, eggs, juice, rolls, and coffee for breakfast. The place chosen for the party was Countryman's Ranch near Cassoday, a perfect place with creek, trees, grass, and a rock ledge bank overhanging the creek.

At noon on Friday, July 8, the young people gathered in front of the church, and within a few minutes the truck with its load of happy youth was rolling down the road toward Cassoday.

Conflict

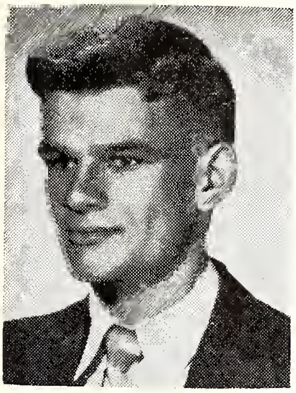
After stopping several times to fill the truck with water, we arrived at our destination at about 4 o'clock. Having unloaded our equipment, everyone was excited about swimming and fishing. Of course, all the big fish got away! Leeches and sharp rocks spoiled our swimming plans. But soon it was 7 o'clock and time to begin the evening meal. Supper was super-delicious!

After supper we left camp to go fishing on the Walnut River. We had just set our lines when a man came down and asked for the leader of our group. As our sponsor stepped forward, the man calmly told us to leave. This we did with no arguments, singing gospel songs as we drove away. When we got back to camp, we enjoyed our watermelon which was cold by that time. After that we were free to fish, eat, visit, or sleep. (Some didn't get too much of the latter.) Three "guards" on duty made the rounds punctually every fifteen minutes!

Happy Ending

At 5:00 a.m., everyone was up, ready and waiting for an early breakfast. Hearty appetites soon devoured the good food. At 7:30 we broke up camp and started for home. It was a weary, but happy, group that arrived home from one of the many enjoyable times Christian young people can have together.

Meet the Presidents



Marion Deckert, Northern District Youth Fellowship

Marion Deckert was elected in June to serve as president of the Northern District Youth Fellowship. Marion is 20 years old and comes from Richey, Montana, where he has been spending his summer helping his father on the farm. A member of the Bloomfield Mennonite Church he has attended Bethel College for the past three winters and hopes to graduate there next spring.

Marion's helpers in the work of the Northern District youth group include Abe Krause, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, who has been serving as vice-president and Don Kaufman, Marion, South Dakota, is the fellowship's YPU representative. Edna Thieszen, Henderson, Nebraska, and senior at Bethel College is secretary-treasurer, while Jane Epp, also of Henderson, and a Bethel junior is Youth Editor.

One of this district's big areas of concentration is the new retreat grounds that they are developing at Swan Lake, South Dakota, for an expanding camp program. Members of the youth group's retreat committee who share the responsibility for this work with representatives from the Northern District Conference are James Waltner, Freeman, South Dakota, who is a student at Mennonite Biblical Seminary; Shirley Schrag, also of Freeman, and a Freeman Junior College student; and Stanley Pankratz, a Bethel College freshman from Mountain Lake. Ardys Preheim, Freeman Junior College sophomore, assists the retreat committee in promotion, while Walter Gering, pastor of Bethel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, serves as advisor to the work of the youth fellowship.

To promote the Missionary Education Fund this district youth organization has asked Jakob Duerksen to visit the churches of the district in the coming weeks. Bill Gering, General Conference Youth Worker, will spend time with the various congregations in September.

MCC news & notes

SECOND RRA FAMILY ARRIVES IN U.S.

The second MCC sponsored refugee family has found a home in the U.S. The Erwin Schmidt family from Gronau, Germany, was scheduled to dock in New York on Aug. 6.

Although of German ethnic origin, the Schmidt's were born in Poland. When war broke out between Poland and Germany in 1939, the Schmidt family was forced to flee to West Prussia. In 1944 Erwin Schmidt was inducted into the German army. From 1945 to 1949 he was prisoner of war in Russia. Since his release in 1949, he and his wife Natalia have lived in Gronau, Germany, as refugees. Bernhard and Irmgard were born to the family in 1950 and 1953. In 1955 they are beginning again in America.

The Schmidt's are sponsored by C. L. Graber, Goshen, Ind., and Milo Yoder of Millersburg, Ind., has provided a home for them. Mr. Schmidt will work as a welder at the Star Tank and Boat Co. in Goshen.

"...Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost to me, I lift my lamp beside the golden door"—we printed long ago on the base of the Statue of Liberty. This door has opened for one more family, but there are many others who wait for someone in the U. S. to sponsor them. If you can help one of these families, write to Mennonite Aid Section, MCC, Akron, Pa.

REPORT ON INDIA

"We found them in a little room which Americans would not use to house pigs. The mother squatted before a low fire, cooking some rice in a little pan. Four young children beside her were waiting hungrily for this, their only meal for the day.

"While we were talking to the mother, the father came in. He began to cry when he realized that someone had found them in this condition. But he could do nothing about it. For over four years he had not been able to find regular work."

The Edward Benedicts were able to help this family by sending two of the children to boarding school without expense to the father, by taking the three-year-old to the doctor and buying the prescribed medicine, by giving some clothes to the family. Finally they were able to put the father in contact with a prospective job.

But this family is only one of many. When Pakistan and India were separated, there were mass movements of Hindus from Pakistan, which became a Mohammedan state, to India. In northern India, where the population was already 2000 to 3000 per square mile, thousands of these displaced persons could find neither decent homes nor work.

In Habra, a large settlement of these refugees, the MCC workers are distributing milk powder once a week. For the especially needy with small children there is an additional ration of cheese and special milk powder.

Many of these peoples are sick, but unable to pay doctor bills. The MCC workers have found two doctors who are willing to see these sick destitutes without charge, and one dispensary which will sell medicines at cost. This allows them to help more people and use funds to the best advantage.

However, extending relief to these people cannot cure the basic need for homes and employment. The MCC workers during this first year are laying plans with the Mennonite Relief Committee of India, a relief committee representing all the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ missions in India, for a long-range program of resettlement and development assistance.

MONOPOLY ON CHRISTIAN LOVE?

For the past years the Mennonite groups have accepted feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, housing the refugee, and aiding the sick as part of our expression of the love of Christ. But there have been some other church groups that could not see this in any connection with the Great Commission.

The lead article in the August issue of Christian Life describes the work of the Mennonite Disaster Service and VS group in Oklahoma and Kansas tornado areas. The author's conclusion points up the concept of service and love which motivates this outreach and ties it so closely to the total program of our church.

"Disaster service arises from the desire to offer a total Gospel witness. To Mennonites it is pre-evangelism.... Meanwhile other evangelical groups shy away from social service. They still associate neighbor-loving with liberal theology. But Mennonites...refute that idea....There's no reason why evangelicals shouldn't mimic the pattern.... Mennonites claim no monopoly on Christian love."

We are thankful that our church has helped to bring some concept of the social implications of the Gospel to larger Protestant groups.

A CALL TO REPENTANCE

August 6 marked the tenth anniversary of the dropping of the atomic bomb on Hiroshima—the initiation of the era of atomic war by the United States. On the anniversary of this event, the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a group of concerned individuals have drawn up a call to repentance:

"Let this Tenth Anniversary of Hiroshima, then, be for the American people a day of repentance. Let it be a day to reflect on what it means that after visiting atomic death on thousands of Japanese in order to disarm them forever and writing a pacifist clause into their Constitution, our government is now desperately engaged in urging rearmament upon Japan. Let us realize once for all that no people has a moral right to drop H-bombs on another people at any time or for any reason, and let this realization become the basis of national policy. Let us reflect that the nation which took the initiative in discovering and using atomic power for unprecedented destruction has the responsibility now to provide leadership in finding new ways to use another kind of power, the power of love which is for the healing of the nations."

"A real three-inch gusher fell on thirsty Hopiland June 19 to 20. The next few days old and young were busy planting corn, melons, etc. The rain was truly "God-sent" since it came during planting season (June), and will mean an ample harvest; but what a letdown to the August snake-dance rainmakers—this unseasonal downpour. The average rainfall is four inches."

"July 11, the adult leaders and children traveled to Flagstaff for a week of Bible camp."

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kan.: Our pastor, H. G. Nyce, is taking his vacation beginning Sept. 5 to the end of the month. Amy Winsinger, R.N., one of our missionary workers to Brazil, was married to Gerald Bergen. Rev. and Mrs. Richard Ratzlaff have accepted a call of the Home Mission and Church Extension Committee of the Eastern District Conference to be mission workers for the new mission now under construction in Philadelphia, Pa. A daughter was born to Rev. and Mrs. Peter Voran in Japan. We are planning a homecoming welcome for our missionaries, the Harold Grabers. Our church was recently featured in a four-page article in the MENNONITE LIFE. The Men's Fellowship had an open meeting, July 17, at the Rudiger picnic grounds. The church was invited. A short devotional program was given at that time. Several of our young girls have been helping at Camp Mennoscah during retreat times. —Mrs. LaVerne Unruh, Corr.

—Butterfield Church, Butterfield, Minn.: Funeral services were held July 2 for Mrs. Katharina Enns, 80, member of our church. Our pastor, Edward Duerksen, brought words of comfort from Hebrews 10. We are confident that her church service has not been in vain. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vogt celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Sunday, July 3, with a family gathering in the church. On Sunday morning, July 10, our pastor completed his series of six sermons entitled, "Marks of a Believer." These messages, based on I John, have been greatly appreciated. That evening our C. E. service was presented by the Junior Choir and their director, Orlando Schmidt, of the Bethel Church, Mountain Lake. It is wonderful what is accomplished through the singing of objective church music as sung by the choir. Mr. Schmidt pointed out that through music one can worship in a vertical relationship to God as well as fellowship and teach horizontally to each other. On Tuesday evening, July 12, a group of 60 gathered for a combined Sunday school and church fellowship supper and a period of recreation in the local park. Eight baptismal candidates led in a series of testimony, devotional reading, object lesson, and music on Sunday evening, July 17. The following Sunday the above young people were baptized and received into the fellowship of the congregation. Let us pray that they might remain in the faith. Holy Communion was observed on Sunday morning, July 31. —Willis Linscheid, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kan.: Brother Henry T. Neufeld of Meno, Okla., brought the morning message July 3. Andrew Shelly spoke in our church July 10 in interest of our seminary in Chicago. Funeral services for Peter Friesen were held here July 12. Dr. and Mrs. John Zook and daughter of Portland, Oregon, who are candidates for the Congo African mission field, spoke and showed slides here July 25. Willie Regehr from here, and Maurine Voth from the Bethel College Church at North Newton, were married here July 26. The bride's parents are missionaries in Formosa. Mrs. Willie Regehr transferred her membership to our church and was accepted as a member into our fellowship on July 31. Mr. and Mrs. Regehr left August 2 for a year of voluntary service in Newfoundland.—Mrs A. F. Enns, Corr.

—First Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: It was our privilege to have Ed. G. Kaufman, president emeritus of Bethel College, for a series of meetings the first week in May. Prior to the sermons, pictures were shown of Egypt and the Holy Land. Dr. Kaufman also spoke at the Men's Brotherhood meeting. Other special events in May were: the fine program given by the Boys' Chorus from the Boys' School, under the direction of Milton Baer; the fellowship of the United Church women; the dedication of children on Mother's Day, which were Susan and Jeanette Collins, Gary Schmidt, and Duane Quenzer; and the monthly family night program also in honor of mothers. Latest addition to the cradle roll arrived March 30, named Roy Thomas Younts. May 22, a memorial service was observed in the Old Adobe Church, and in the evening the program of the union C. E. was held in the Willow Creek Church. May 28, the wedding of Lydia Quenzer and Robert Broeckel took place, with Brother Paul Quenzer, of Doland, S. D., officiating. The young couple are at home near LaCrosse, Wash. In June the Bethel College Ensemble presented a program of sacred music. It was followed with a social hour to get better acquainted, and was enjoyed by all. June 19, the fathers and also the eighth grade graduates were honored on family night at the Neufeld's beach home. After a period of recreation and the evening meal, a devotional service was held at sunset overlooking the Pacific through large picture windows. June 12, Eugene Schmidt was welcomed as a member to our church by right hand of fellowship.—Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The high point of our summer's experiences came with the farewell services for the Vernon Sprungers on July 3, reported elsewhere. Our church co-operated with the Methodist Church in conducting vacation Bible school June 6-17. The Union school has outgrown its facilities and continued division was necessary so that this year eight Bible schools were functioning at one time. Pastor Neuenschwander has been elected president of the Wadsworth Ministerial Association for 1955-56. The Wilbur Geisers left in June to make their future home in Bradenton, Florida. Martha Reed, of Leroy, was married to Richard Gilbert at a church wedding on July 2. They are living temporarily in Topeka, Kansas. —Onecho Church, Colfax, Wash.: Several from the church attended the Pacific District Conference held in Monroe, Washington, June 2 to 5. The Women's Missionary Society sent nineteen Christmas bundles to the MCC and also 100 pounds of used clothing. Dr. and Mrs. John Zook and daughter visited June 26 having charge of both morning and evening services. The Zooks sailing date for Africa is August 15. A farewell dinner was given at the church in their honor. Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Jantzen and children were with us the evening of June 23, showing interesting pictures as well as giving verbal reports on the work in India. Rev. Gustab Jacobson of TEAM, home on furlough from Africa, showed pictures and spoke to us concerning the mission work there in an evening meeting. The DVBS was held for two weeks at the beginning of June. About 60 attended. The collection this year was sent to the Evangelical Welfare Agency to help place homeless children into Christian homes in Chicago. The school was followed by the usual Children's Day Program and pot luck dinner on Sunday, June 19. The Home Builders Sunday school class enjoyed dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Largent. Nine couples were present. Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Albright were co-hosts. The Beacon Bible Class had a pot luck dinner at the R. W. Classen home Sunday, July 24, with 24 adults and 18 children participating. The picture, "The Way of Light," was shown July 10, depicting life of Christians in West Germany.—Corr.

Into the Beyond

MRS. ANNA B. HOFSTETTER, aged 75 years, passed away at the Community Hospital, Wooster, Ohio, July 23 after an illness of ten days. Mrs. Hofstetter, widow of Jacob Hofstetter, was a member of Salem Mennonite Church, Dalton, Ohio. She was an active member of the Dorcas Sunday school class and the Missionary Society.

CHRIS WALTNER, of Pretty Prairie, Kansas, and member of the First Church of Pretty Prairie was born March 22, 1897, and died July 25, 1955.

FREDERICK BLAINE MILLER, of Kitchener, Ontario, and member of the Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church, Kitchener, died July 26, 1955.

Eastern Ohio Disaster Unit Organized

At a meeting held in the Martins Church near Orrville, Ohio, July 26, were completed the Article of Organization and the plans for disaster service in case of serious emergencies, such as tornadoes, floods, fires, or atomic explosions. The council members represent directly the various Mennonite conferences and congregations in eastern Ohio. The executive committee members represent all groups of Mennonites in the region.

For administrative purposes, this eastern Ohio region is divided into five geographical areas. In each area is a contact man chosen by the delegates from the area. His territory generally includes two or more counties. He represents all the participating Mennonite groups in his area. If disaster strikes anywhere in eastern Ohio he will immediately call on his group of experienced workers to render carefully organized aid on notice from the co-ordinators. Such relief work shall be done supplementary to, but not in competition with, such well-known national organizations as the Red Cross.

The executive committee members present at this meeting were Leonard Kreider, chairman, Wadsworth; George E. Falb, vice-chm., Orrville; Alvin J. Miller, sec.-treas., Kent; and Howard C. Yoder, coordinator, Wooster.

Meeting of Mutual Aid

Frank H. Epp

The July 14-15 meeting of Mennonite Mutual Aid Societies in Chicago, Ill., elected a committee of seven together with an MCC representative, to form the administration of the continuing organization of Mennonite mutual aid societies. Those elected were Harold Swartzendruber, Goshen, Ind.; C. J. Rempel, Kitchener, Ont.; Howard Raid, Bluffton, Ohio; Elmer Ediger, Newton, Kan.; Wayne Martin, Goodville, Pa.; Samuel P. Wenger, Laura, Pa.; and M. L. Klopfenstein, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

This committee will be responsible for continued research on existing mutual aid organizations and their business efficiency. Separate committees will be appointed to study the possibility of the mutual sharing of risks among Mennonite aid societies and the pooling of efforts in colonization concerns.

At least forty delegates representing almost as many mutual aid organizations attended this MCC sponsored conference on Mennonite Mutual Aid.

Meeting for the first time, this inter-Mennonite group studied the purpose, scope and problems of existing mutual aid societies in four separate sessions. A motion to form a continuing organization was passed at the final session.

Discussions centered around five presentations on areas of Christian mutual aid activity. Dr. H. C. Amstutz presented Hospital, Surgical, and Burial Aid Plans; Howard Raid, Property Aid; Guy F. Hershberger, Credits and Loans; J. D. Burkholder, Automobile Aid; and J. W. Fretz, Colonization and Rehabilitation.

Melvin Gingerich gave an opening survey of Existing Mutual Aid Organizations and their Scope of Activity. Orie O. Miller gave the closing challenge on Pooling Material Resources for Better Witness and Service.

Each session opened with devotional messages. C. J. Rempel discussed the Nature of Christian Mutual Aid As It Relates to Charity; Frank H. Epp, Toward the Vision of the Christian Community Through Mutual Aid; John W. Miller, Mutual Aid As Related to the Social Order; and Harvey Driver, Mutual Aid and the Mission of the Church in the World Today.

Testimonials voluntarily given at the closing session on Friday morning indicated the great significance of the conference and the mutual benefit gained.

CONCERNING MENNONITES IN RUSSIA

At long last there is information about the fate of the Mennonites still remaining in Russia. Harold Bender's interview with representatives of the All-Union Council of Baptists and Evangelical Christians of Russia, as reported elsewhere in this issue, is hopeful.

Of special interest will be the announcement that it is now likely possible for American and Canadian Mennonites to visit the Mennonites of Russia. No doubt the Mennonite Central Committee, and perhaps General Conference officials, will make an effort to have some group visit these people and see what assistance may be rendered them both physically and spiritually. If, as seems likely, this door is now open to such visits, the opportunity for such friendly contacts should be promptly used.

It was a fond hope of the late C. F. Klaassen that when the door for such visits in Russia might be opened we would be ready to render full assistance to the needs of our fellow-Mennonites in Russia. Perhaps this marks the beginning of the fulfillment of that dream.

SPECIAL EDUCATIONAL NUMBER

Next week's issue of The Mennonite will be devoted largely to the cause of Christian Education. Every year there is a special emphasis on Christian education and the churches are encouraged to observe Educational Sunday. We do not know how many actually make this cause a matter of special thought and prayer but it certainly is a worthy subject and deserves the thinking and prayers of all our people.

Christian education has many angles and sides as well as many possibilities. Our youth should have the opportunity of receiving the best possible Christian training and development. The Christian college plays a large part in this field. Set up as it is by the churches and conferences for the express purpose of giving our youth the best possible education that is Christian, it touches many lives and gives them that particular emphasis needed to keep their training and information in harmony with the Word of God. Church schools usually have a rather difficult time to keep going because they are constantly in need of funds but their work is so important and so far-reaching that every church should have definite plans for the support of Christian education.

Church colleges are not self-supporting. If they charged enough tuition to pay in full for the actual operating costs, few of our young people could or would attend. The difference must be made up by contributions. If we are to supply the best possible for our youth we need to get back of our Education and Publication interests and bring this arm of the church to its rightful place. It is a rather sad commentary on the churches that the Board delegated to have this responsibility is usually the recipient of less contributions than any other board. Watch for next week's issue and give it thoughtful study. Support our Christian education.

ATOMS FOR PEACE

One of the very hopeful meetings held recently is that of the world scientists at Geneva, Switzerland, in a sort of survey and exhibition of what is being done in adapting atomic power to peaceful purposes. Great interest is displayed by the various representatives from the nations of the world. Many wonderful predictions are being made of what the harnessed atomic power might do within the next ten years for improved means of living, particularly in the field of furnishing power and heat.

When the top men of the nations can get their minds off the idea of preparation for war and put their energies to adapting this new mighty power to the ways of peace, there is real cause for the common people to rejoice and be thankful. It must grieve God to see His intelligent creatures first bend their best knowledge toward war preparation. On the other hand, we believe He will help and bless those who are seeking to use the new discoveries in peaceful pursuits and for the welfare of all people.

AFTER VACATION

By this time most vacations are over, or nearly so, both for school children and students as well as for families and adults. To be sure for many there were no vacations as they go on day by day busily engaged in the work that must be done. But many others have had at least some sort of vacation during the summer months.

We now come back to our tasks with what is hoped to be renewed energy and enthusiasm. No doubt we are making plans for improving our work and for a more wholesome attitude toward the daily routines.

We need times of fresh appraisals of our work and life. We also need those of new starts and enlarged outlooks. To take no new interest in our work or to have no new plans or visions for improvement is to become stagnant and dull.

This is a particularly good time for churches to begin laying definite plans for the coming year. The church year really begins in the fall. Each church should place before its people definite goals and particular achievements which they hope to accomplish. It is not enough simply to continue Sunday after Sunday with no new goals, no program of advancement all along the line. Here is where pastors with their church boards can render a real service in forward planning. It is also a good time for the various Conference Boards and executive offices to build larger and better plans for the advancing of His kingdom.

As vacation days come to a close may the days of advancement challenge us all.

Home and Church, Teach Christ Now

PAUL R. SHELLY*

"Home and Church—Teach Christ Now!" was the theme of the Twenty-third International Sunday School Convention held in Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31. The first International Sunday School Convention was held in New York in 1832.

This Sunday School Convention at Cleveland was not a convention which was held to conduct business. The only business of the convention was conducted at one brief business session when Harold E. Stassen, secretary of peace in President Eisenhower's cabinet, was re-elected president. The following are some observations of the Convention.

THE DELEGATES REPRESENTED MANY DENOMINATIONS FROM THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA. Delegates came to Cleveland from practically every state in the United States and from practically every province in Canada. A few delegates were also present from other countries. The World Sunday School Conventions are distinct from the International Sunday School Conventions and their conventions include delegates from many countries. The delegates at Cleveland were members of many of the Protestant denominations.

The delegates to this convention in Cleveland were laymen primarily. Most of them are Sunday school teachers at the present time in their local churches.

THERE WERE THREE MAIN EMPHASES AT THE CONVENTION. These emphases were stressed on the three days of the convention which followed a similar morning schedule: Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. The Bible was the theme on Thursday. Dr. Donald G. Miller, professor at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia, spoke on the subject "Christ Opens the Bible Now." Following this message the delegates divided into a hundred interest groups. Each group discussed ways in which the Bible could be taught more effectively in relation to its particular interest. I attended the interest group on "Using Audio-visuals in Worship, Study, Service." On Thursday we discussed how we could teach the Bible through audio-visuals. Friday we discussed how we could teach in the home through audio-visuals. On Saturday we discussed how we could reach others for Christ through audio-visuals. Each interest group followed the same procedure.

Not only were these emphases stressed in the morning sessions but they were also stressed in the evening sessions as well.

THERE WAS A BALANCE BETWEEN A DENOMINATIONAL AND INTERDENOMINATIONAL EMPHASIS. All of the delegates to the convention participated in the parts of the convention mentioned thus far. However, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the entire afternoons were open for denominational meetings as well as Friday evening. These separate denominational meetings gave the denominational leaders an opportunity to introduce their own Christian emphases to their people. Many of the delegates also attended a church of their denomination on Sunday morning.

THE DELEGATES HAD MANY OPPORTUNITIES FOR GROWTH. It is always difficult to evaluate what takes place in the lives of people at a convention. I personally need a convention of this kind every year or two to keep in touch with the ever-increasing opportunities that God has given us through the Sunday school and related organizations in the church.

The exhibits helped delegates to see what materials and other resources are available for their task today. Sixty-four denominational publishing houses and other interdenominational groups had exhibit booths at the convention. These booths covered 10,000 square feet. I saw more than half a dozen new films. I bought a few new books in the areas of my interests in Christian education. I purchased a number of pamphlets. I brought back a considerable amount of free material. In America the problem in Christian education is not that there isn't any material available for the person who is a Sunday school teacher or superintendent but where to secure material and how to choose the most suitable material.

The delegates were helped in their particular area of interest and need. Interest groups met three days for an hour and a half each time. There were interest groups for people who work with all age groups from nursery to adult, for pastors who work with small churches and large churches, and for those who work in other areas which are more specialized such as television and radio. Many delegates will be better Sunday school teachers because of the new insights they received in these groups.

The delegates were inspired anew for their tasks. Delegates receive a new inspiration for their task as they participate in a large convention of this kind. In addition to the new methods they learned about, they received inspiration from the convention speakers including Rev. Ralph W. Sockman and Rev. Charles B. Templeton.

The delegates dedicated themselves for their tasks. This dedication occurred at various times throughout the convention, but particularly at the closing session when Rev. Charles B. Templeton, Secretary, Division of Evangelism, Presbyterian Church, USA, brought a message on the theme: "But Am I Captured?—To Teach and To Reach." He pointed out, as was done frequently throughout the convention, that the most important part of the teacher's equipment is his being completely possessed by God through Jesus Christ. As the delegates joined him in a heart searching prayer of dedication the climax of the convention was reached.

A number of speakers throughout the convention pointed out that this convention in Cleveland was more important in relation to the solution of the needs of the world than the Summit meeting in Geneva participated in by the Four Powers.

Mennonites In Soviet Russia Today

HAROLD S. BENDER*

Through a conversation with the president (Jacob Zhidkov), the general secretary (Alexander Karev) and the treasurer (Ilja Ivanov) of the All-Union Council of Baptists and Evangelical Christians of Russia, whom I met at Carey House, Selly Oak, Birmingham, England, on July 28, I learned some things about the present state of the Mennonite Brotherhood in Russia today, which will no doubt be of much interest to our Mennonite brotherhood at large, and which is being made public through the Mennonite papers in the various countries.

Where Located

The Mennonites, as well as the German-speaking Lutherans of European Russia, formerly located largely in the Ukraine, Crimea, and in the Volga River Valley (Samara, Volgo Republic, etc.) have all been removed and are now located largely in the territory of the Ural Mountains or east of the Urals in Middle Asia, in Uzbekiston, Kerghiz Republic, and Todjakistan. The Mennonite colonies in Siberia, such as around Omsk, Novosibirsk, and Maryinsk have largely remained, as also the Orenburg settlement now called the Tschkalovs district. A few families remain in Alexandertal (Samara, Kuibyshev), as was reported to me by Nicolai Levindanto of Riga, superintendent of the Baptist churches in the Baltic Republics and vice-president of the All-Russian Council, himself a native of this region. The total number of Mennonites in Russia was estimated by Karev at 20,000, although no statistics are available.

The Menonites are still largely farmers and as such are prosperous above other farmers. They are however working in industries in such places as Magnitogorsk, Kussnetz, and Karaganda. In Karaganda there is a Baptist church with 1000 members, of whom 400 are Mennonites. Mennonite preachers serve in this Baptist church, preaching also German to the Mennonites. The Mennonites here work in the coal mines.

Their Religious Life

The relation of the Mennonites to the Baptists is very close. In those places where there are no organized Mennonite congregations the Mennonites attend the Baptist services. Elsewhere the Mennonites have their own congregations, with their own preachers who conduct services in German for the Mennonites. However Mennonite preachers are also doing evangelistic work among the Russians, preaching in Russian. About two years ago a revival began among the Mennonites, which is still continuing. The Mennonites are considering joining the All-Russian Union of Baptists and Evangelical Christians.

The Mennonites are free to conduct religious services, although their congregations are not registered with the government. To be registered they have to have a national organization or conference which is registered. They are now considering taking this step soon.

Literature and Schools

German Bibles and religious literature are not yet available in Russia, although the Baptist headquarters in Moscow recently secured a supply of some 200 German Bibles from the Seventh-Day Adventists, which they are distributing among German-speaking evangelicals. Some Mennonites have secured copies of these. The Baptists have been publishing their own church paper since 1944. Their ministerial training school was closed in 1929, but they have recently secured permission to establish such a school, which they hope to do as soon as they can raise the money for it. Meanwhile they have secured permission to send a limited number of their young men to foreign Bible schools for training, such as in Baptist schools in England. The Baptist church itself claims 520,000 baptized members in 5,400 congregations in Russia. (It was not clear whether this included the Evangelical Christians, Prokhanov group.)

Mennonites May Be Visited

The Baptist leaders answered two important questions in the affirmative: (1) Whether it would be possible for Mennonites from America (and other countries) to visit the Mennonites in Russia, and (2) whether Russian Mennonite delegates could attend the Sixth Mennonite World Conference in Karlsruhe in August, 1957. They are sure a visit to Russia could be made at any time now, with completely free movement, visiting all Mennonite centers, and preaching in Mennonite congregations. They would be willing to furnish an interpreter and guide to accompany foreign visitors. They say that the Russian policy now is to admit tourists freely for free travel throughout Russia. All the major Mennonite centers can be reached by plane or rented car, and the trip could be made in two to four weeks, including visits in Mennonite homes on invitation. Mennonite visitors would be welcome in Baptist meetings.

The Baptist leaders authorized full publication of this interview as they gave it. They are not as well informed naturally about Mennonites as about Baptists and their statistics may not be accurate, but I give credence to their report as the first authentic report of the status of Mennonites in Russia in recent years, particularly since World War II.

Needed: A Regular Diet of Biblical Seminary

A Book Review

MARIE J. REGIER*

FIRE IN THY MOUTH, Donald G. Miller
Abingdon Press, 810 Broadway
Nashville 2, Tennessee

"There can be no true or permanent spiritual recovery until the Bible gets back into a position of centrality in the modern pulpit."

During the summer term at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in the course, "Preaching from the Old Testament," we read a very stimulating book which says in a new vital way what has been said throughout the history of the Christian Church but needs to be repeated anew for each generation.

The title. "Fire in Thy Mouth," based on Jer. 5:14 immediately catches the reader's attention. The author says in the preface that the rediscovery of the Bible has not gone far enough because there is still a great lack of biblical preaching in the average sermon. Some ministers are quite frank in admitting that they find the Bible too outdated to use it much. Others believe that they, of course, use the Bible but as Dr. Miller says,

> By various means—spiritualization, subjectivism, questionable analogy, downright misinterpretation, immediate departure from the text to the realm of their own thought—the true meaning of the text is lost.

There are various reasons for this. In the first place there is the lack of time. Too many other pastoral duties waiting. In the second place it takes so much more effort to dig out the meaning of a passage in Scripture and put it into a form so that it can be grasped by the modern mind than it does to produce other types of sermons. Third, there is an increasing dependence of the modern minister on homiletical helps of one kind or another. "So the minister finds it more and more easy to use crutches than to stretch his own intellectual muscles."

Miller insists that preaching is not saying words but accomplishing a Deed. The first chapter is thus called, "Biblical Preaching As Redemptive Event." He feels that the word "preaching" has a bad connotation today, as something that we are ashamed of if we do it, and which we do not like in others. "Don't preach to me" we say. Many preachers too feel that all their other duties are much more important than preaching. The author on the other hand believes:

> There can be no activity in the world equal to it! To think that the redemptive Deed of God is to be brought to a focus in one's life as he stands before men in the act of preaching: that the yearning agony of the Redeemer is to leap into actuality on the plane of history once more: that the turning point of destiny for some soul or some congregation, or even a significant turning point in history for that matter may be reached as one humbly but passionately proclaims the Word of God.

He emphasizes the fact that during the sermon men are to have an encounter with God. He says that preaching in the New Testament is nothing other than bearing witness to a series of events. But these events are not thought of in the New Testament merely as past events, but as part of the total Event of redemption, which spans the entire sweep of history from Creation to the Parousia. The good news is not singular but plural.

After having made it most emphatic that biblical preaching is necessary, the author deals with the Bible in its uniqueness in the next chapter.

> Why is the canon closed and a clear line of demarcation drawn between the history of redemption in the Bible and church history? Revelation lies primarily in the unfolding drama of redemptive history rather than in a set of religious ideas. Since the Bible is the record of the redemptive history, it remains permanently normative, even though the church under the guidance of the Holy Spirit gains clearer insight into the full implication.

In the third chapter the author deals with the preacher as biblical interpreter and believes that our divisiveness in Christianity is due to the fact that our concern is too much with ideas about the Bible than with the Bible's ideas. The Bible is not an end in itself but the means to an end. We should therefore approach the Bible in terms of function and should use it to find Christ and the light He throws on life. "To try to make the Bible yield good science or exact history, or a literal pattern of future events, is to misuse it."

In the fourth and fifth chapters the author deals with the values of biblical preaching, such as keeping the minister from riding a hobby, but dealing with all the subjects of the Bible, and with the implications of biblical preaching. In true preaching the minister must try to keep in the background to make room for Jesus Christ. That will help him to keep both from unworthy despair at any seeming failure and from pride over any supposed success.

I wish that every minister might be able to read this book, or better still have one in his own possession that he might refresh himself with it ever so often.

Flashes of Thought

While at the Dentist

Walter Gering

It happened in the dentist's chair. The inevitable day came when the annual announcement appeared through the mail reminding that it was time for another dental appointment. Strange, is it not, how quickly a few months can pass by, especially in terms of visits to the dentist. Of course a regular periodic visit for examination is good. We ought to do it even more frequently than we do. But always it seems as but yesterday when we made the last visit.

But there it was, a reminder that the time had come for another appointment. There was nothing left to do but to keep the appointment. Imagine my inner satisfaction to discover that this was one of those rare occasions in which no work needed to be done. The examination revealed no cavities or source of trouble. I was soon on my way back to the study.

And yet . . . not before I had been impressed with a solemn truth. It came while the examination was being made. After a rather thorough probing the verdict was: "Well, your teeth seem to be in quite good shape." Jokingly I replied: "They ought to be. You have been doing most of the work on them." It was true. For the last five years he had been doing all of my dental work.

But I was hardly prepared for the response which came. "I was looking," he said "at the other man's work to see how that was standing up." Like a flash the thought came—yes, that is the trouble with all of us; far too often we are looking upon the works of others with an eye to seeing how they stand up when we ought to be examining our own work.

For the dentist it was only proper that he examine all the dental work which had been done. That was the purpose of the appointment. It is the only way to safeguard the health of the patient. It is expected of them that they do so. But for the Christian to apply this same principle to everyday life involves dangers.

How easy it is to become so engrossed in examining the works of another that we loose sight of our own. Probably that is what the Word of God has in mind in the letter to the Galatians: "For if a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone and not in another," 6:3, 4.

LORD, GRANT US THE COURAGE TO PROVE OURSELVES

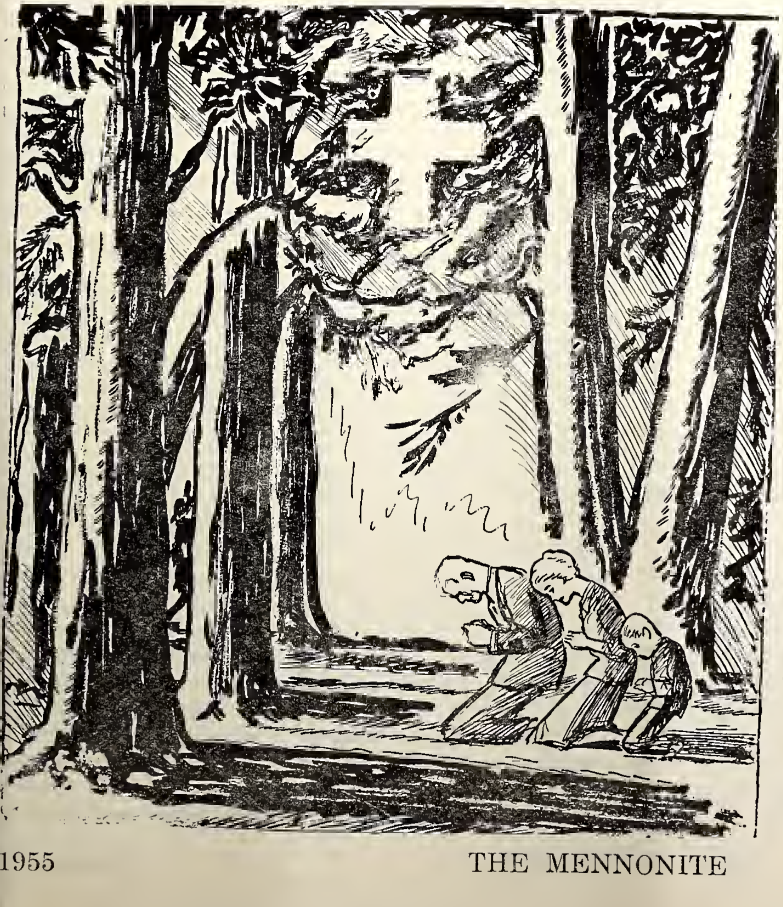
We Find Him Everywhere



By Charles A. Wells

Do not let vacation days rob you of the solace of worship. It is good to seek God in the strength and fellowship of the congregation, but when you are out of reach of "divine worship," are you beyond the presence of God? No—for what greater evidence is there of His presence than the incomparable beauty of nature? You can find a cathedral in trees, a niche for prayer among the rocks, a choir beyond excellence where the waves surge and sing against the shore. Some of the greatest revelations of divine truth have come to men while they waited upon the Lord under the stars, in the loneliness of the desert, on the peak of a mountain. Do not let the summer months keep you away from God; let them bring you to Him.

The Chri

C.

(The following presentation of "The Christian and War" was delivered to the National Association of Evangelicals, which convened April 19-22, 1955, at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill. Dr. Hostetter served a three-year term on the Board of Administration of the N.A.E.)

Introduction

In this discussion the New Testament is our basis of reference and we shall endeavor to view war in the light of the teachings of the New Testament. In it we discover God's highest revelation concerning all social relationships. The Old Testament is not contradictory to the New, but it is readily recognized that in the Old Testament God made concessions "because of the hardness of men's hearts," and repeatedly permitted what He did not approve. Therefore, in defining the Christian's relationship to war, we present in brief statement form what the New Testament teaches that is relevant to war for the Christian.

The New Testament teaches that war will continue until the end of this age, culminating in Armageddon. "There shall be wars," the Master said. Why can't we have world peace in history? Because of the basic cause of war, sin, selfishness, selfness and covetousness. War is a part of sinful human history. Self-defense becomes the first law of sinful life. The course of a sinful civilization is self-destruction through conflict. David Lloyd George, ex-premier of England, said after World War I, "If another war comes, the Church has failed." I believe the famous English Premier was wrong. The Church cannot prevent war in a sinful society, but the Church is responsible if she shares in war.

Christians are not to be governed by the practices of a sinful society, but by the will of God. To discover and live in the will of God is the highest function of the Christian. God reveals His will by His Word. In many areas of truth, the Master and the apostles did not define detail. In many areas of ethics, the Master did not spell out duty in specific terms. What did Jesus say about liquor? What did Jesus say about slavery? Not any more than He said about war. The Master did say "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." He also said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." We discover the will of God not only in proof texts that pinpoint specifics, but by and through (a) the example of our Lord, (b) the eternal principles of truth which He taught, (c) the adjustment of our practices in harmony with life's chief motive and life's highest task in the light of the divine will.

We live in a sinful world, but we are to be governed by the will of God and not by the practices of a society which destroys itself. Where are Christians commissioned to destroy sinners?

Christ conquered evil by redemption and atonement. Christ suffered at the hands of men whose god was the State. Our Lord was born and reared in a world where the Totalitarian State was supreme. Our Lord founded His Church within the borders of a nation that for nearly 300 years relentlessly fought the Christian Church with the sword. But the cross won. How did Christ conquer evil—by love, by death, He died. He won the victory over hell by love. The cross defeated the demoniacal efforts to exterminate the church by a cruel, ruthless nation that paid no homage to any god but itself. Why has no artist dared to paint the picture of our Lord with a gun or sword in His hand? The New Testament portrayal of Christ is incompatible with sword or bayonet.

The Master's mandate to the Christian is discipleship. "As the Father hath sent me so send I you," are the words of the Master. "Follow me as I follow Christ," said St. Paul. The Master attacked evil by His work on the cross; we attack evil by the message of the cross. St. Paul knew the power of that message as he approached the degraded, morally decadent city of Corinth, and he determined to know nothing but "Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

Our conflict is a spiritual one, and the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. We do not attack evil by force; we attack with the message of the cross. The message is effective. The preaching of the gospel converts communists. The cross can defeat communism, but the sword cannot defeat communism.

Discipleship involves doing Christ's work in the world. He said, "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations." "Preach the gospel to every creature." Is not war in conflict with the obligations of discipleship? In answer to that question, let me assume an actual war situation: Our country is at war with Russia. I am a soldier on combat duty with the infantry. The enemy is attacking. Coming toward me is a Russian. He is either a Christian or a sinner. I shoot. I kill. If he is a Christian, I kill my brother and the Bible says, "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." If he is a sinner, I "destroy him for whom Christ died." War is at variance with the duties of discipleship.

God, in this dispensation of Grace, has reserved to himself the administration of judgment and vengeance. In the future it will be different for "we shall judge angels." Now, however, the Master says, "Judge not that ye be not judged." The reason for this is self-evident. For judgment to be fair, knowledge must be complete. We are finite and limited.

Therefore, the Lord says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." We recognize that God is still sovereign in His world. The devil operates as the prince of this world, but our God is still on the throne. The nonresistant attitude of pacifist Christians is grounded in faith in the sovereignty of God. Is it not presumptuous and premature for us to assume an administration of vengeance that God has not given to us?

Obedience to the State is conditioned upon a prior obedience to God. (Read Romans 13:1-7). What is St. Paul here teaching? All of us would agree that he is not teaching the absolute authority of the State. If a State would demand idolatory of its subjects, evangelicals would unitedly agree that this passage would not require obedience. This passage is a part-mention of truth, and all part statements must be interpreted in light of complete record. The total New Testament teaching in relation to human government clearly establishes that the authority of the State is always only relative—regardless of the nature of the State.

This message, then, in part teaches two truths; (a) It establishes the validity and authority of human government. (b) It requires the attitude of submission on the part of the Christian toward government. (Please note that the word "obey" is not used in Romans 13:1).

Human government is necessary, and note that human government is authorized to use force. In a sinful society, force is required and justified to maintain law and order. Police action is justified. The sword restrains the evildoer, but the cross changes the evildoer.

What was the primary lesson that St. Paul was endeavoring to teach in this passage? Like all Scripture, Romans 13:1-7 must be interpreted in light of context. Here is how St. Paul introduces his statements about government. "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," Romans 12:18-21. In the light of this introduction, he then says, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." At the time St. Paul wrote this, the State was the number one enemy of the Church, and Paul is here teaching that Christian love requiring subjection and respect for the authority of the State was the way to overcome evil with good. After thus defining the Christian's attitude toward the State in Romans 13:1-7, he continues and concludes by saying, "Owe no man anything, but to love one another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet, and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Thus, the call of the State is not a justification for the Christian to participate in war on the basis of New Testament teaching.

The obligations of Christian love link us as Christians to the Cross of Christ. We noted that the Old Testament moral law was summarized as meaning (1) supreme love to God, and (2) love your neighbor as yourself. The Apostle John in 1 John 2:7 says this is an old commandment. This is part of the Old Testament law; to love God supremely with heart, soul and strength is required in Deuteronomy 6:5, 6 and love your neighbor as yourself is required in Leviticus 19:18.

The message of the cross is more than loving your neighbor as yourself. In St. John 13:34 Jesus says, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you; that ye also love one another;" This breathtaking commandment links us to the Christ who died for His enemies. This new standard of love requires that I love my enemy more than I love myself.

Love of home and family is beautiful. Love of country is right and sacred. But in the light of the cross Christians are required by the Savior's command to love their enemies and to give up all if necessary for their redemption and salvation. This is the true meaning of the cross of Christ. What tremendous implications! As a Christian I am committed to the "way of the cross," as I endeavor to interpret the "work of the cross."

Conclusion

These great truths are particularly relevant to our day. Is God in the closing days of this period of the Church on earth allowing to be re-enacted the history of the first, second, and third centuries of the Church's life? Since we have not presented the work of the cross to Russia and to China in the hour of our opportunity, may it be that God will require us to walk in the "way of the cross" in these last days? Christ conquered evil and sin by His death. It is proper for the Christian to love home, loved ones, and country. By the Grace of God the Christian can love his enemies. Following the example and teaching of Jesus the Christian cannot kill, but it may be necessary for him to die as he overcomes evil with good.

From Montana Mission

The following report from our missionaries the Malcolm Wengers, in Busby, Montana, is so refreshing and heartening that I feel I must share this with all of you. Our Lord prospers the efforts of His servants.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

Vacation Bible school was something special at Busby this year. It wasn't the attendance, averaging about 40 with an enrollment of about 60 that was unusual. It wasn't especially the daily rain although that was unusual (5.42 inches in May made it the wettest since records have been kept). It wasn't that a Voluntary Service worker, Joyce Willems, came from Kansas to help out, although her help was tremendously appreciated.

The unusual thing about the Bible school this year was the fact that for the first time five Cheyenne young people from the local church helped with the teaching.

Not everything went as one would have liked. However, we see this as the beginning of local responsibility for the summer Bible school and we are thrilled.

At Kirby, just off the reservation to the south, we had a summer Bible school in co-operation with the American Sunday School Union. Both Cheyenne and white children attended this school. Prospects looked poor at first but so many came that we had to send an SOS for more teachers.

In the beautifully wooded hills between Lame Deer and Ashland at Crazy Head Springs the annual Bible Camp was held with children from all over the reservation. Attendance was smaller than we hoped for.

A new constitution has officially organized the church here as the Bethany Mennonite Church at Busby, Montana. The church council provided for in the constitution is little by little taking more responsibility for the direction of the work here.

Those baptized recently include a young couple Bob and Gladys Big Back, Oliver Risingsun, a father whose wife and four of his five children were already Christians, and Robert Bailey who has been attending Freeman Academy during the past year. Robert attended catechism class at the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman.

Others who have been away at school from this church include Delores Littlebeare, now more than half through with nurses training at Bethel Deaconess Hospital, Newton, and Raymond Littlebeare, who attended high school at Lind, Washington, and lived in the Cliff Taylor home. If other Christian homes were open for this kind of ministry, more Cheyenne young people are ready to take advantage of it.

The Zeal of New Converts

A few paragraphs taken from a report by one of our missionaries in Japan, Miss Leonore Friesen, shows us how zealous new converts found faith to others. Would that we all, also in our home churches and as common lay church members, be so zealous for our Lord.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

"In April the local church group was busy making preparations for the campaign in May. In December we were privileged to have a "team" down who had complete charge of the campaign, children's meetings, and the personal work after the services. They also went from house to house distributing tracts and hand bills. It was wonderful to see the local Christians now assume these same responsibilities. There were those who volunteered to write the songs on cloth (large sheets that all could see.) Others wrote out the posters and posted them; others took care of other forms of advertising. Several were appointed to lead the meeting and direct the singing. We had a number of sessions in teaching a little bit about personal work. Best of all the group faithfully prayed for the campaign that the Lord might bring an ingathering at that time. These preparations continued through the first part of May.

One of our zealous believers told her folks at home what the speaker had said. Then her father would add some comments. She realized he was informed about the messages. Finally she became bold enough to ask. He said he had never gone in but he had stood in the shadows away from the tent listening a number of evenings. Again thanks to Bernard for having two loud-speakers—one inside—one outside!

The Wednesday night prayer meeting, I believe is the powerhouse of the church. A really good number come out—if we compare percentages with those in America. Yet if we were to ask one of our members here if the prayer meeting is well attended, they would say, "Only a few come." May the Lord meet that disappointment and really bring others out. About 10 to 13 come. Verney Unruh said that at Miyakonojo they lead their own meeting. We have started that here now. We are studying Acts and they each take a chapter. It has become a warmer meeting and more meaningful. The prayer time also is blessed. Most generally everyone that comes prays and they are beginning more and more to be specific in praying. Praise Him!"

Put on then, as God's chosen ones, holy and beloved, compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, and patience, forbearing one another, and, if one has a complaint, forgiving each other; as the Lord has forgiven you, so you also must forgive. And above all these things put on love, which binds everything together in perfect harmony. Col. 3:12-14 (RSV)

OPERATION CHRIST FOR ALL

H. N. Harder

At the time of the conference youth rally at the Normal Mennonite Church, Normal, Illinois, last May, the executive committee of the Central Conference YPU met with several pastors to plan the program for 1955 and 1956. Out of this meeting there came a desire to sponsor a program that might be used of God to deepen the spiritual life of our young people.

But what should it be? After much discussion and prayer by those who were present it was thought good to ask our pastors and churches to support our young people in a spiritual emphasis program, called "Operation Christ for All."

Choosing a Speaker

Several meetings later it was decided to ask John J. Esau, an evangelist living in Reedley, California, to come to our churches for a period of five weeks to minister to our young people and their home churches.

Brother Esau was born and reared in Mountain Lake, Minnesota. He received his education in the Mountain Lake Bible School and at Moody Bible Institute. From 1927 to 1938 he held pastorates in a number of Mennonite churches.

It was then that he became blind. Of this he says: "God permitted my physical eyesight to be taken from me in the first year of my ministry, but by His grace I have the joy of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ."

Choosing a Work

What do the young people expect to accomplish in this spiritual life emphasis program with Brother

Esau as their speaker? They want to bring a spiritual impact upon our churches so that there may be a spiritual awakening of old and young alike.

Our youth leaders are deeply conscious of the fact that comparatively few young people are contemplating going into Christian service. They have a conviction and a deep feeling that God will use these weeks with Brother Esau to bring about those spiritual results that will challenge young people to choose a Christian ministry for their life work, if God so wills, and to receive their training in our Christian institutions.

Then, they are also hoping that their parents and church leaders will attend these meetings together with their children, and thus gain rich spiritual blessings. It appears that a Holy Spirit directed program such as this one will be used of God in a mighty way.

The plan calls for a youth rally at the Carlock Mennonite Church on Sunday, August 28, and another rally at the Meadows Church on September 25. Between these two rallies Brother Esau is to bring evangelistic messages in all our central Illinois churches and in Goodland, Indiana. He will give from three to four days in each church. It is hoped that the young people will attend these services faithfully and sacrifice other things in favor of these meetings.

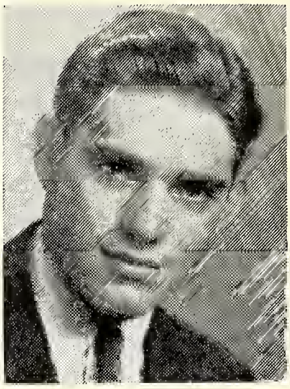
Choosing a Challenge

Again and again it is youth that has carried the torch of our Christian faith and lifted high the banner of the Cross of Jesus Christ. In Acts 2:17 we read, "Your young men shall see visions." Note that in the first recorded instance of Christian preaching there is found in this quotation from the prophet Joel a mention of youth as receiving the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. It seems to be a forecast of the part that youth was to play in the expansion of Christianity.

Youth has shown a readiness to adventure that called for sacrifice and hard work. There is a real and deep relationship between the characteristic qualities of youth and the appeal of Jesus to men. Someone has said, "There is no greater disaster in all the long history of the church than that it has often either smothered or kept in the dark background those aspects of the gospel which have an inherent and commanding appeal to youth with its love of risk, daring, sacrifice and its response to the lure of a great objective." Jesus knew better than that: "If any man will come after me let him take up his cross and follow me."

Perhaps in no other decade of our lifetime has Christian youth in America been as active, resourceful, and spiritual as during the past ten years. By the scores they have gone out as missionaries, relief workers, Christian social workers, and as ministers of the gospel. They have been challenged by the great spiritual needs of our bleeding world and they have challenged the church.

Meet the Presidents



Burdell Roeschly,
Central Conference YPU

Burdell Roeschly is the president of the Central Conference Young People's Union. A young farmer from Graymont, Illinois, he is a member of the Flanagan Mennonite Church where he serves as its Sunday school superintendent and mission treasurer. He is married and the father of two sons, Dennis and Mark. Before taking up farming he attended Goshen College.

The officers who work with Burdell on the executive committee include Arlene Hartzler, Goshen, Indiana; Betty Yoder, Danvers, Illinois; and Richard Baum, Carlock, Illinois. Arlene, a music teacher and a member of Goshen's Eighth Street Church, has been elected vice-president. In addition to being secretary, Betty is a junior in Danvers High School. Richard, who does the work of the treasurer, operates an auto agency with his father. and is Sunday school superintendent in the Carlock Church.

Since 1953, this YPU has had the three area committees, Faith and Life, Service, and Fellowship.

The Faith and Life Committee is chaired by Dale Miller, a member of the Meadows Church who has just completed his two years of 1-W service. Other members of this committee are Warren White, Congerville, Illinois; and Aldene Zimmerman, Bloomington, Illinois. H. N. Harder, pastor of the Normal Mennonite Church, serves as committee advisor.

Ernest Porzelius leads the Service Committee with the assistance of Adele Bertsche, Meadows, Illinois; and Sandra Strotheide, Flanagan, Illinois. Lotus Troyer, pastor of the Meadows Church advises. Ernest has graduated from Bluffton College and has recently finished his 1-W service. He is a chorister in the Flanagan Church.

With the Fellowship Committee it is Allen Ropp, a member of the Normal Church who has attended Bluffton College who is the chairman. Mildred Daum, Washington, Illinois, and Carolyn McCowan, Danvers, Illinois, round out the group with Raymond Yoder, pastor of the Congerville Church as advisor.

The three committees and the executive committee meet about every other month. Harry Yoder, pastor of the Washington, Illinois, Church serves as advisor for the entire group.

The Fellowship Committee starts the year's program with a New Year's Eve watchnight party which has come to be one of the highlights of the

Making the Grade on Your Job

ERNEST L. YODER

In Ephesians 4:1, we read, "I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called."

What is my vocation? I have chosen the trade that Christ worked at when He was a young man, working with wood. Perhaps He could see then, as I do now, that which can be constructed out of wood starting with the raw material and making it into a thing of beauty.

African Lesson

Three years ago I was privileged to spend two years on the African mission field working with the Congo Inland Mission. When I left the United States, I thought I had most of the knowledge needed to do construction work out on the field. It was not long after I had arrived that I realized how little I really knew. It only takes a few Africans and their simple way of life to make one realize how much he has yet to learn.

Many were the times when workmen would come to me asking what to do next. As I walked to where they were working, I would offer a short prayer asking for guidance on what to do next. Sometimes it wasn't until I arrived at my destination and looked it over well, that all at once the answer would come to me, and I knew that Christ had answered the prayer offered a short time before on the path.

It was there in Africa that I had learned to keep Christ pre-eminent in my vocation, whatever the work I might choose in the future. I knew I needed Christ with me at all times.

Businessman's Lesson

A few weeks ago I heard over the radio a testimony given by one of our big businessmen who has a chain of stores all over America, and I would like to share it with you. This man, as a boy, was brought up in a Christian home. He attended church regularly. When he became of age, he started out in a small business.

At first things were hard. By putting Christ first and having great faith, he slowly built his business into a great chain of stores. As time went by he gradually began to put Christ to one side and make decisions on his own. Eventually Christ was left out altogether.

Soon after that the depression came and he lost almost everything. Things kept getting worse after this. He was forced to enter a mental hospital.

While there, one morning he heard a group of people singing hymns in one of the wards. He went in and started singing with them. Slowly he realized what had happened. He had left Christ out of his life when he needed Him most. He got right down and prayed, asking for forgiveness

Soon after, he was able to leave the hospital. He went to live with his wife on a small property they had been able to keep all of this time. It wasn't long before he was working as a beginner in the very business he himself had started. In time he worked his way up to become president of the company.

This had all been made possible because he again accepted Christ as first place in his life and work.

I want to give Christ pre-eminence in my vocation. With His help I am better able to deal with customers fairly and courteously and to do my work carefully and honestly. Probably I will never be rich in worldly goods, but my hope is that people can see Christ through the manner in which I do my work and in my everyday business actions. I think every kind of work would be better done if Christ were pre-eminent.

MEET THE PRESIDENTS

union's fellowship activities. They also plan the monthly roller skating parties. In early spring, when the basketball fever runs high, the Illinois churches get together for a tournament which always provides plenty of excitement until the new champion is crowned.

The Faith and Life Committee is responsible for the planning of the two annual rallies held in the spring and fall. Instead of the fall rally this year they have invited J. J. Esau, Mission Board evangelist, to hold meetings for three or four days in each of the Illinois churches, with a rally at the opening and close of the entire series. This is "Operation Christ for All" with which they hope to deepen the spiritual life of young and old alike.

The Service Committee edits the youth page in the "Christian Evangel," the district conference's monthly publication. It also finds ways to raise the union's $1,200 yearly budget. This money supports a mission project, the General Conference YPU, Camp Friedenswald, and the district work.

Central Conference youth have enjoyed the fellowship of a joint conference meeting with the Middle District Conference young people the past three years in an inspirational gathering highlighted with a banquet. Both groups are looking forward to a possible merger of the two conferences in which they can work closer together on a permanent basis.

The goal of the YPU of the Central Conference is to have a well-balanced Christian program of activities, to strengthen the local youth groups, and to have a "United Mennonite Youth in Christ."

GENEVA TELEGRAM

During the recent meeting of the leaders of Great Britain, Russia, France, and the U.S. at Geneva, the MCC sent a telegram to President Eisenhower expressing the appreciation of the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches for his efforts to ease tension and promote international understanding and assuring him of our prayers for the meeting. C. N. Hostetter, chairman of the MCC, has received the following letter from President Eisenhower:

> "I am deeply grateful for the thoughtful message which you sent to me here in Geneva. In pursuing our efforts here it is especially helpful to have assurances such as those conveyed to me on behalf of the Mennonite Central Committee. With best wishes, Dwight Eisenhower."

NEED IN JORDAN

A new food station was opened on July 4 in a small frontier village in southern Jordan—a three-hour journey by bus and donkey from Hebron. Here where malnutrition is prevalent, the center will serve one meal a day to all the children of the village who are old enough to carry their plates and manage their food.

The canned meat which MCC sends to Jordan is very importrant in supplementing these diets where children rarely get meat. The first meal served was thick soup of beans, tinned meat, onions, and fats, a half loaf of native bread and a handful of dried apples. Some days the soup is rice with meat or rice with leban.

Since the only well to serve this village is across the line in the Israeli territory, a second project here is to haul water by truck. However, this can continue only as long as funds permit.

Jordan continues to be one of the most needy areas in which MCC is serving. Malnutrition is very prevalent and the death rate among children is high. In these crowded refugee camps sickness and disease spread rapidly, aided by the exposure and malnutrition. These displaced persons are dependent on the help which we can send them in gifts of food and clothing and medical care.

158 VOLUNTEERS IN SUMMER SERVICE PROGRAM

The MCC Summer Voluntary Service program included 152 young people from the United States and Canada. Three from Mexico, and one each from Holland, Germany, and Jordan brought the total participating to 158. Eighty-three served in units in the U.S. and 75 in Canada.

These young people worked among delinquent children and crippled children; they served as aides in mental hospitals, as guinea pigs for medical research, as social workers among migrants.

The group which toured Mexico helped to paint the inside of the Cuauhtemoc Regional Hospital and assisted with public health work.

These 158 young people have chosen summer voluntary service as one means of expressing their concern that the name of Christ be made known to all men.

CHRISTMAS BUNDLES SHIPPED

The MCC centers at Waterloo, Ont.; Reedley, Calif.; Newton, Kan.; and Akron have completed processing 28,652 Christmas bundles. About half of these will be shipped to Korea and Jordan where the need among the displaced persons is so acute; 7,896 of these bundles will be shipped to Korea and 7,678 to Jordan.

The remainder of these Christmas bundles are being shipped to Austria (2020), Formosa (1020), France (422), Germany (5002), Holland (320), Hong Kong (288), Indo China (4006), and London (46).

Since the beginning of the Christmas bundle shipments in 1946 this sharing of gifts with our neighbors in other countries has been an added testimonial to our joy in the message of "peace on earth, good will to men."

Special Project Possibility

The Old Colony Mennonites in Mexico do not always welcome help from the outside. We know however that they do welcome the German edition of the Martyr's Mirror. Forty copies have already been contributed (cost $5.00 each) by various individuals and church groups.

From Old Colony letters we know this is one way to win their confidence and speak to their hearts.

Perhaps there are individuals or church groups who want to buy 10 copies. Our goal is to purchase the remaining 160 German copies for this purpose. Special contributions will be welcome.

PRAYER IS the chief agency and activity whereby men align themselves with God's purpose. Prayer does not consist in battering the walls of heaven for personal benefits or the success of our plans. Rather it is the committing of ourselves for the carrying out of His purposes. It is a telephone call to headquarters for orders. It is not bending God's will to ours, but our will to God's. In prayer, we tap vast reservoirs of spiritual power whereby God can find fuller entrance into the hearts of men.

Jottings

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Funeral services for Mrs. Anna B. Hofstetter, who passed away on July 23 following a ten day illness, were held Monday afternoon, July 25, at the church with Pastor James Reusser officiating. Among those present were Mrs. William Geiger, of Honolulu, Hawaii, niece of the deceased, who is spending some time with her mother, Mrs. Matilda Fankhouser, while she is living at the Memorial Home at Bluffton. Marcella Gerber, Lolita and Barbara Lehman attended Senior Camp at Camp Friedenswald. Attending Pre-Junior Camp at the same place were Roelif Badertscher, Niffi Sohar, John Hofstetter, Virgil Gerber, and Rodney Wilson. A film on the Christian family life entitled "The Bible on the Table" was shown at the church last Sunday evening, July 24. Following the morning service a business meeting of the congregation was held and it was decided to purchase a new heating system as recommended by the Church Council. Two laymen brought the morning messages for two Sundays while Pastor and Mrs. Reusser were on vacation. They were George Breneman, who spoke on July 31, and Ward Hofstetter on August 7.—Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: On July 1, Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Sawatzky observed their Silver Wedding Anniversary. July 3, the pastor's message was "The Church's Responsibility." That afternoon a missionary farewell service was held for Tina Quiring who left the same week for the east coast boarding her ship on July 18 for service in Africa. The Committee on Evangelism of the General Conference met in our church library with W. F. Unruh, Sylvan Lehman, Willard Wiebe, and our pastor present. Glendon Klaassen, member of our church, and Reitha Kaufman of Peabody, Kansas, were married on July 15, at Newton, Kan. On Friday evening, July 22, a wedding reception was held for them in our church. The Ben J. Nickel family returned home July 15 from Alaska after about a year's work at the Minnfield Home at Auke Bay. Rev. Nickel was the guest speaker on Sunday morning, July 17. The young people's Lightbearers program was held at Heppner's Point on Sunday evening, July 17. Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Wiens left July 18 with a school bus packed with equipment for the Minnfield Children's Home at Auke Bay, Alaska. Sam Quiring of Spokane, Wash., gave the morning message Sunday, July 24. That evening the young people's choir presented a special musical program with Virgil Fitch of Jackson, as the speaker. Men responded with voluntary help to combine over 3200 bushels of oats on the church oats project of which a share goes for the building fund of our church. Our pastor, A. H. Schultz left Sunday afternoon, July 24, for Oklahoma where he served as Bible teacher and evangelist at the Oklahoma Young People's Retreat at Hydro for a week. During our pastor's absence Ben J. Nickel spoke Sunday morning, July 31. That evening, Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Janzen and their family on furlough from India brought a message and showed pictures.—Mrs. Waldo Stoesz, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: Our young people again showed their interest in church when a large group came with hoes, rakes, and mowers, and cleaned up the church yard, July 20. We as a church want to say a big "Thank you" for their fine service. Their evening ended with a wiener roast and hymn singing. There were sixteen of our young people who planned to go to the Young People's Retreat at Hydro, Okla., this year. Pastor Levi Koehn went with the young people. Mrs. Koehn and Sharon spent a week with her sister and mother at Pond Creek, Okla. We are sorry to hear that Mrs. Koehn's mother has been in ill health. Also sorry to hear of Rev. Koehn's father being sick. We wish them God's speedy recovery. July 24 in the evening we had a program consisting of a set of slide pictures and a tape recording describing Home Mission work in Chicago. It proved quite interesting.—Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

—Inman Church, Inman, Kan.: Correction: a son instead of a daughter born to Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Warkentine (Betty Wiens). Death—Mrs. Helena Pauls. Married—Velma Thiessen and John Carden. Lerow Warkentin is with us again after four years in the navy. Several of our young people have enjoyed retreats at Camp Mennoscah. Youth Fellowship of Bethel and local churches meet twice a month socially. They recently sponsored Eddie Motter, blind acrobat, and Bill Sachs in a program. Andrew Shelly showed some pictures ot his recent world trip. He also solicited in the interests of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Five local churches are having Sunday night union meetings during August. Some men have been helping rebuild Udall, Kan. Pastor Rahn and family were vacationing in Minnesota the first two weeks of August.—Corr.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kan.: The young people's C. E. had an outdoor meeting at the Ernest Schmid' farm for their July program. The adult C. E. program was held July 17 with the theme of "Seventy-five years of Missions." Pastor P. A. Wedel and Agnetha Duerksen were speakers. Mrs. Rein Voth showed pictures of the 75th anniversary celebration of the Oklahoma missions and Bible schools. Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen spoke in our church on leper work in mission fields, July 20. The funeral service for Mrs. P. J. Flaming was held July 15. Walter Goossen of the Go-Ye Mission filled the pulpit July 17, and while pastor P. A. Wedel was at the young people's one-day retreat, P. K. Regier, executive secretary of the General Conference, filled the pulpit. The one-day retreat at Camp Wood, Elmdale, Kan., was attended by most of our young people. The day's schedule consisted of morning worship, recreation in the afternoon, and a program on Christian Living in the evening. Also several young people have taken the advantage of attending Camp Mennoscah this summer.—Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Penn.: Recent weddings at our church were Naomi Heffentrager and Willard Standhardt and Shirley Yergey and Ronald Eddinger. Wilmer S. Shelly, our former pastor, performed both ceremonies. Rev. and Mrs. Henry B. Grimm and their three children have occupied our parsonage since July 1, and we are happy to have them in our midst. On Sunday afternoon, July 10, he was installed as our regular pastor. Dr. Elmer E. S. Johnson, gave the charge to the pastor. Dr. Johnson is our pastor emeritus. Wilmer S. Shelly, our former pastor, gave the charge to the congregation and the installation was in charge of Arthur S. Rosenberger, president of the Eastern District Conference. Our choir and our officers and teachers and their families have recently held swimming parties at the Reichert Swimming Pool. Our Sunday school picnic was held on Saturday, August 6, at Men-O-lan.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Penn.: Rev. A. S. Rosenberger of West Swamp and president of E. D. C. spoke on "The Workings of the General Conference" at the Adult C. E. meeting for July. Our pastor, Claude Boyer, was camp director at the high school retreat at Men-O-lan. He and his family spent their vacation at Sugarcreek, Ohio. Richard Ratzlaff supplied the pulpit July 31, and Wilmer Shelly August 7. The annual Fretz reunion was held here August 13, with our former pastor, J. Herbert Fretz, as one of the speakers. Some of our number availed themselves of the opportunity of hearing Jakob Duerksen from Paraguay who spoke at the Zion Mennonite Church at Souderton, Penn., recently. A group from the Rosthern Juinor College, Rosthern, Sask., visited our church as a point of interest July 22. Ely Fretz's and Mahlon Wassers attended the Fretz reunion in Canada.—Corr.

—East Swamp Church, Quakertown, Penn.: DVBS closed June 24, having an enrollment of 116. It was a joy to have a few decisions for Christ. Mrs. John Sprunger was the Bible teacher at Sunshine and Junior retreats. Rev. Sprunger served as a counselor for the high school retreat. We regret that Bob Gerhart broke his arm during this retreat and had to be hospitalized two days. Communion was held June 19, when four young people were baptized and received into our membership. Four hundred and twenty-five pounds of clothing and 37 bundles were taken to Ephrata. July 6 Miss Elsie Pfister, children's worker in Kentucky, spoke at our Missionary and Brotherhood meeting. Esther Kline has returned to Newton, Kan., and Arlene Dietz to Omaha, following vacations at home. Missionaries Miss Elizabeth Foth of New York spoke at our Senior C. E., July 4; and Erwin Wedel, of Mississippi, at the evening service. His subject was "Excuses." Prayer meetings are being held at the parsonage for the coming tent evangelistic meetings with which we are cooperating. They are to be held Aug. 13-28 with Torrey Johnson as speaker.—Corr.

"Don't Squench the Spirit"

A negro friend used to say to me, "Don't 'squench' the Spirit." He coined his own word, but "squench," being a combination of "squelch" and "quench," really should be in the dictionary.

We quench the Spirit in more ways than we suspect. When we stifle the inner impression to speak or act for the Lord we do it. And we can quench the Spirit in others when we criticize or discourage or by any attitude "throw cold water" on their fire. The brother in prayer meeting who mixed his metaphors and said, "Lord, if there should be a spark of fire in this meeting, please water that spark," unwittingly suggested another way to smother the Spirit's freedom. How we do conspire to limit God in our meetings! We have an honored Guest in every Christian gathering, and He can be grieved very easily. A frivolous spirit, a critical or rebellious frame of mind, a fed-up complacency—that will do it. The very way we arrange physical details, the way we scatter all over the church, two to a pew; the way we hear and hear not—surely "squench" says it, for we squelch and quench the Spirit.

Hold High the Torch

Hold high the torch!
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
'Tis yours to keep it burning bright,
Yours to pass on when you no more need light;
For there are other feet that we must guide,
And other forms go marching by our side;
Their eyes are watching every smile and tear
And efforts which we think are not worthwhile,
Are sometimes just the very helps they need,
Actions to which their soul would give most heed;
So that in turn they'll hold it high
And say, "I watched someone else carry it this way."
If brighter paths should beckon you to choose,
Would your small gain compare with all you'd lose?
Hold high the torch!
You did not light its glow—
'Twas given you by other hands, you know.
I think it started down its pathway bright,
The day the Maker said: "Let there be light."
And He, once said, Who hung on Calvary's tree—
"Ye are the light of the world." . . . Go! . . . Shine
—for Me.

Religious Education and Mennonite Piety . . .

BY PAUL R. SHELLY

Here is a scholarly work that deals with many of the issues now being considered by the Conference on the Believers' Church. Here is what others have said about this useful book.

"This is a book of courage and candor: courageous, because it probes openly and deeply into the actual life of the three major Mennonite groups of Eastern Pennsylvania, to see how they seek to maintain their way of life and also how well they maintain it; candid, because the author reports honestly what he finds without fear or favor. It is a helpful book, both disturbing and challenging, based on scholarly and effective research. It is an encouraging book, because it is written by an author who evidently believes wholeheartedly in both his church and the principles for which it stands and seeks to help that church, with its historic heritage, to fulfill its mission in the modern world."

Dr. Harold S. Bender, Dean

"For the first time, we have before us a very useful volume outlining the course of Religious Education and Mennonite Piety among the Mennonites of Southeastern Pennsylvania. It is a handbook which may serve as a guide for Mennonites and others who are proceeding 'with the objective of perpetuating their basic principles.' The production is well done. This work offers a challenge to those denominational groups which have a concern relative to the preservation of their identity while at the same time desire to foster the potential power of a united Protestantism as it faces world issues. Here is a portrayal of the problem of maintaining a distinctive way of life and at the same time have its potential piety effective in an extended area. Dr. Shelly has rendered all of us a service in this publication."

Christian Economy

A man working for the Boeing Aircraft Company at Wichita, Kan., told of the celebration there on V-J Day, August 14, 1945. The war was over, and the workers were overjoyed. But one office girl sat at her typewriter crying. When she was asked why, she said, "I'm afraid that now I won't get my new Buick paid for."

We think she was selfish. We wonder how she could possibly have wanted the war and its destruction to continue just so that she could draw a high pay check! Yet her attitude is our attitude when we are unwilling to oppose war if it means temporarily accepting a lower standard of living.

The U. S. economy is still something of a war economy, and, in the short run, this may seem to be the road to prosperity. But as Christians we know that such a war economy is basically wrong and will fail in the long run. An economy should be based on supplying genuine needs of people—needs for food, clothing, houses, books, schools, hospitals, recreation, roads, and so on. An economy should not be based on making military aircraft, battleships, tanks, and atomic weapons. Several years ago I learned that for what it then cost to make one "flying boxcar" (approximately seven and a half million dollars) seven campuses the size of one of our church colleges could be equipped with classroom buildings and dormitories.

You may not have much to do with the whole economy of the country, but as a Christian you are responsible for your tiny segment of it. How do you earn your living? Is it a Christian way? (The Apostle Paul made tents; he did not do clerical work for the Roman army.) Are you interested in making every phase of your work Christian? e.g., Would you rather have government protection for the product you produce than let some person on another section of the globe have a higher standard of living even if it means a reduction in yours?

One way out of asking and answering such questions, of course, is to say that Christianity has nothing to do with one's work. Fortunately, fewer and fewer in our brotherhood take such a view.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION EMPHASIS PERIOD

Each fall, near the beginning of school, the Board of Education and Publication sets aside a period which it has chosen to call, Christian Education Emphasis Period. This year the dates are set for August 28 to September 25. While this period is intended to emphasize all phases of Christian education including our schools, the material presented in this issue of The Mennonite is directed mainly to the teaching church. It is the local church at work teaching that gives stability and continuity to the work Christ has entrusted to us. Churches and Sunday schools are urged to emphasize and pray for the teaching ministry in our churches. It is suggested that a day be set aside sometime within this period to emphasize the work of Christian teaching and if possible receive an offering for your Board of Education and Publication.

SHALL WE START A NEW SUNDAY SCHOOL?

In view of the fact that many of our more recently established churches are outgrowths of Sunday schools, we ought to give more serious consideration to starting new Sunday schools in our communities. At the last session of the General Conference at Portland, churches were encouraged to establish mission outposts. We committed ourselves to a more intensive program of evangelism in these words, "Be it resolved that every congregation take definite steps to prayerfully promote the spirit of New Testament evangelism for winning the lost to a new life in Christ."

How many churches responded to this challenge? Are we as alert to opportunities for starting new Sunday schools as we could be? This writer is convinced that this technique alone goes a long way to explain the more rapid growth of some other groups.

Unreached people live in the old transitional sections of cities, in shiny new suburbs, in temporary trailer camps, in the more remote open country.

Who will spark a project of this nature? Perhaps it will be the superintendent. Or perhaps someone who has a concern. Those churches having a board of education might well put this question on the agenda.

IS IT WORTHWHILE?

We are now in the process of producing graded materials for our Sunday schools. Carefully estimated costs for our part of this project place the figure over $200,000. This is the approximate cost of a public building such as we have erected in many of our communities. This investment will provide Christian training for our children for years to come. Looking at it that way the figure does not seem so large.

But some will be sure to ask, "Is it worth it?" "Why should we go to the work and expense of trying to produce our own materials?" There are a number of good reasons why we should publish our own materials and why churches ought to use the materials published by their denomination.

The question boils down to this: Is our church with its distinctive beliefs and its way of life worth preserving? If it isn't, then there need be no concern about producing and using our own materials. However, if we feel that our beliefs should be safeguarded and taught to our children, then what we teach our children should be a matter of vital concern to us.

What is the case for producing and using our own Sunday school materials? Is it just a case of denominational pride? Can we compete with other groups which have invested heavily and produced a great variety of materials? There are a number of factors which build a pretty good case for using our own materials.

In producing our own materials our own distinctive theological emphases and our Christian witness to the whole body of Christianity can be helpfully interpreted to the various age groups. Objectives for Christian education have now been worked out. The objectives point out the direction we want to move. Persons who would like to know the outcomes desired in the lives of boys and girls in the materials we are now preparing will find them clearly reflected in the "Objectives for Christian Education Curriculum Materials." This is the pattern from which the finished garment will be cut. The objectives center around twelve topics: Bible Knowledge and Use, Salvation, Christian Beliefs About God, Discipleship, Church Fellowship, Worship, Witnessing, Stewardship, The Christian Home, Christian Social Relations, Nonconformity, and Christian Citizenship. Even a casual glance at these headings will reveal that other materials do not make these emphases.

Furthermore, in using our own materials pupils and teachers become acquainted with their own church's life and work. This includes the missionary motive and program, relief work, Voluntary Service, Christian education, and significant events and references to great spiritual leaders in our own heritage. The curriculum is not at the mercy of persons or pressure groups who will claim disproportionate emphases on their cause regardless of other important concerns that they crowd out of their curriculum. Interdenominational publishers by the nature of the case are compelled to trim their materials to an average level that will catch the sales of as many groups as possible. The end product is frequently undesirable.

The spirit of unity and fellowship which we constantly need is strengthened in many ways when the churches use the literature prepared for them.

The Bible Speaks for Christian Education

The Teaching Commission

AARON J. EPP*

The word "teaching" is used twice in the Great Commission, thus emphasizing the importance of the teaching function of the church. Again Nicodemus came to Jesus and said, "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God, for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." Jesus said of himself, "Learn of me." The Bible is saturated with admonitions to teach, to instruct privately and publicly.

Organized education as we know it today, was begun by the church. Education derived its beginning from the Christian view of God, man, and the world and as the schools have slipped out of the hands of the church, God, man, and the world are viewed much more from a non-Christian view, supported by a spirit of secularism and materialism. These two are a greater threat to the church than communism. Proof of this is the boy or girl who upon graduating from high school or college asks only, "How much will I earn?" Little thought is given to Christian values.

Where this is not true it has been because the church has been able to influence many students and teachers. We believe that through Christian teachers, homes, and the church, our primary and secondary schools are still able to function effectively and prevent the apparent trend to nationalism and statism. That is why we encourage young Christian men and women to go into our public schools and teach, leaving a definite witness for Christ and the Church.

We have a responsibility for our public schools as well as for our church schools.

The command to teach is not to a few, not for a time far back, not only far across the waters, but for you and me. If you and I do not, someone else will, but will it be Christian?

The Command to Teach Implied Throughout Scripture

Abraham's home is an example of religious training. Not only did Abraham pray with his family, but he taught them and led them, for he was a prophet and priest in his own home. He did not stop at correcting his children, but he taught them the way of the Lord.

Moses gives the same command for teaching in the great text of Deuteronomy 6 as Jesus gave in the Great Commission, though the setting, time, and purpose were different. In teaching our children we need to teach that the Lord God is one Lord whom we are to love and serve. It is our job to make Christ real in our homes, in our speech and in our conduct and conversation. If we do not talk to our children about God and His presence, they will not think of Him as real in everyday life.

David prayed in Psalm 119:33, "Teach me O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end." Here it is assumed that he knows the law, but wants more. All of us desire the best for our children, and yet it is impossible for the children to know the way of the Lord if there is no reading of the Bible, no instruction or interpretation of the Christian life in the home.

We Must Teach Christ in the Home, School, Church, and Wherever We Play and Work

Certainly we teach Christ in the home and in conversation. The home is still the greatest school and parents are the greatest teachers.

Of course, if the child doesn't get it at home, he must receive his training from the church. But I believe the church should not be looked upon as the institution that takes the chief role. But the church can give each individual fellowship and a more complete picture of the Christian faith as expressed by others.

The Christian's teaching responsibility never ends. Parents often say, "My child is old enough now, he can make up his own mind," assuming that age and experience have little or nothing to offer. Teaching begins before the child is born and ends only at death.

So the church has an on-going ministry to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship (Acts 2:42).

We must teach people that God is working through His Son, Jesus Christ, reconciling the world unto himself and helping to interpret the will of God unto man. Teach people in such a manner that they may have a faith in God which is to have meaning for all of life.

Who shall we teach? First of all, we need to teach ourselves. We need to hide God's Word in our hearts. Then we need to have a fellowship of teaching which includes the Sunday school and the midweek service. If we are looking for a great change in the church, there lies the possibility!

Next, we need to bring the children of the community into our Sunday schools. Here is the door of least resistance into the kingdom of God.

We need to share a positive Christian witness in all of life. Everything we say or do must reflect the Christian life. And then we must prepare for teaching on the mission field. We need to call young people to train for this teaching task.

The teaching command of the Great Commission still stands today. The hunger for the Word of God and for truth is camouflaged by our prosperity and absorption with pleasure. May we more faithfully attend to the task of teaching so that others may know Christ and know Him better.

Christian Education Begins at Home

Sharing Families

MRS. HARRY YODER*

Christian homes aren't just going to happen. It takes planning and adjustment to make God real in the life of the home just as it took planning to build the house itself. So it is necessary to have a goal in mind.

The Place

In each home where a Christian man and his wife live there is a dominant atmosphere of outgoing love. But this quality needs to be renewed daily at the throne of grace lest it becomes dormant.

When children are added to a home, family worship takes on an even deeper meaning. There should be a consciousness that wherever any member of the family is, whatever he is doing, it is being shared by all other members of the family as they meet for their time of worship. This uniting force of worship plays an important part in family life today when the scattered members of a family take part in so many varied experiences.

To the youth in a distant city who faces a serious decision the knowledge that his family is praying about the same thing gives him courage. He finds strength to do what is sometimes "the hard right against the easy wrong."

If family worship is to play this important part in life we must start while children are very young. They should sense from their earliest moments the vital part family worship plays, in the daily lives of their parents.

Is Christ evident in the conversation about the day's activities? It may be the task of father and mother to guide the discussions that Christ will be a living reality to each one.

The Time

Family worship following the meal would in this case lift everyday events to spiritual levels. But there is no rule to follow as to the time or form of family devotions. This will vary with the age of the children and the religious experiences and occupations of the parents.

Devotions in the morning hour seem to be a fine way to start the day. Fortified by the bond of prayer and divine guidance the family is ready for whatever may come. But it may be that the supper hour is more suitable. At that time the experiences of the day are shared. Discussion of a few of the incidents of the day may make real the fact that God is at work in the schoolroom, in the factory, on the farm, or in the home. The scripture that is read may take on new meaning in the light of the table conversation.

Bedtime is not usually the best opportunity for family worship. This is the time for an individual approach to God which is as much needed as worship with others. The end of the day is the traditional time for children to pray as individuals.

As one family worshiped one day, thoughts were on God's willingness to forgive if He is asked. That night this thought returned as the little boy of the home said his bedtime prayer.

"God forgive me what I did wrong today. You know what it was," he prayed.

The group experience led to a personal experience. Both are needed, and one should not take the place of the other.

The Book

Dora Chapin, author of a book called "Children and Religion," tells of a little girl who said, "I don't want to hurt God's feelings, but the Bible is an awfully long book, isn't it?"

Maybe many children feel thus. That could be the reason so many young people falter when they read the Bible aloud.

Parents should use the Bible in family worship in such a way that it intrigues children to read it with understanding themselves. The way in which Jesus knew and used Old Testament passages gives us an example of the place the Bible must have in the life of the Christian.

Children's minds are ready for Bible memory work and at family worship passages may be stored away to come to their full meaning later on in life. When a passage or verse has been committed to memory the child can be asked to repeat it during the worship period. He will beam with joy because he is able to contribute something of his own to the group.

Teaming Up for Christian Education

WILLARD CLAASSEN*

Since articles in this issue of The Mennonite feature Christian education in the local church, it should be helpful to state what the Board of Education and Publication is doing to help the churches in their teaching program. Much of the work of this Board goes on quietly and like a stomach we do not realize the big job it performs until it begins to ache.

Publications Going Out Regularly

Periodicals

Papers like The Mennonite and Der Bote requiring detailed organization and steady work to keep them on schedule to go out to our families bringing news of the work of the Conference, new ideas, spiritual inspiration, and news of religious significance from all over the world. The Junior Messenger and Der Kinderbote provide wholesome reading material for our children.

Sunday School Helps

A group of consecrated writers provide teaching materials for the Adult Quarterly, Young People's Quarterly, Intermediate Quarterly (General Conference edition), Junior Teacher and Pupil, and Herald Teacher (General Conference edition).

Recent Publications

To help co-ordinate the retreat programs throughout the Conference, a Retreat Curriculum Guide was published last spring. Objectives for Christian Education were specifically prepared as guides for writers of our graded materials and have now been printed for use by pastors, superintendents, and teachers. Four units of Junior Program Helps designed for use in Junior Christian Endeavors and midweek sessions have been published to date. The first of these units is a study of the life of Jesus, the next features programs built around special days of the year, and the last two units are mission studies of our field in Colombia and the Congo.

Work in Progress

The Catechism Handbook by Gering is being revised and illustrated with art work. It should be available in its new printed form on or before September 15. The second edition of The Gateway to a Christian Home is now on the press. The Youth Hymnary will be ready by the time of the General Conference next fall. A new pamphlet entitled, Do You Want Teachers? will give stimulating suggestions and resource materials for teacher training. It will be made available to pastors and superintendents in connection with the Christian Education Emphasis Period during the month of September. A series of tracts on What Is the General Conference? prepared especially for the benefit of those unfamiliar with it, are scheduled for publication this fall. Another pamphlet on Techniques and Resources for Family Worship is being prepared for printing. A fifth unit in the series of Junior Program Helps entitled, This Is Our God, will feature Bible studies.

Graded Sunday School Materials

When we pick up an attractive and well-written Sunday school quarterly, we often fail to realize the amount of unseen work and planning that went into the production of it. Many important steps need to be taken by the curriculum committees before writers can begin their work.

The production of graded materials for our Sunday schools is at present one of the biggest undertakings of our Board. We have talked about the need of having our own graded materials for a long time. In December, 1952, our Editorial Committee entered into discussions with representatives of the Curriculum Committee of the (Old) Mennonite Church to explore the possibilities of publishing graded Sunday school materials jointly. These joint sessions and many more since that time have resulted in joint planning of the curriculum and negotiations are at present under way for joint production of these materials.

A first step in planning the curriculum is the development of objectives for Christian education. We must determine for ourselves and for the guidance of editors and writers what we want to happen in the lives of boys and girls. This can already be clearly seen by reading the objectives. These objectives need to be spelled out for each department. What we can teach primaries and intermediates about the Bible, for example, are two different things.

A second step is the formulation of lesson outlines. This refers to the lesson title, the printed Scripture and background, and a brief lesson aim. With the open Bible before us, what shall we teach in the various departments? In the case of the uniform lessons we buy the outlines already prepared. For the graded series we are making our own to fit our own needs. During the summer of 1954 a group of representatives from both the General Conference and the (Old) Mennonite Church met to prepare outlines. The task of editing and refining these outlines is one that is still in progress. Copies of the outlines have been circulated among leaders in our churches for criticism and evaluation.

Last June a third major step was taken. Lesson plans for the various departments were worked out. The lesson plan refers to the manner in which a lesson is developed which is much different for primaries than it would be for intermediates. At the same session specifications for the materials were also adopted. Specifications refer to the size of the books, type, pictures, art work, and paper. In connection with these planning sessions it was necessary to project costs of the materials to determine whether plans were within the realm of possibility or not.

*Ex. Sec., Board of Education and Publication

Cost is tempered considerably by the fact that two denominations are co-operating. The total cost for the whole project (primary, junior, and intermediate materials) will run over $400,000.

The large task of writing, editing, providing art work, printing and distribution still lies before us. Willard Claassen from the General Conference and Paul Lederach from the (Old) Mennonite Church have been appointed co-editors by their respective boards. In order to make provision for editorial demands on time, our Board has secured Maynard Shelly as assistant executive secretary. The present goal is to come out with graded primary materials for the fall of 1958. For those of us who have waited so long for these materials this seems a long way off. Yet, this brief report should already indicate that it has taken three years of hard driving to come as far as we are. If quality materials are to be produced, writers and editors must not be unduly pressed for time, and also where two groups are co-operating, the readiness of each group to proceed must be considered.

This project will require faith to move ahead and holds untold possibilities for spiritual blessing. The Board will have to borrow heavily. It has sought to build up a small reserve, but even its small budget of $54,000 had reached only 27.8 per cent at the halfway mark. Shall we move ahead on this project? The churches have the answer. The Board covets your prayers and support.

The income from the sale of denominational materials is used to improve and extend the help which may be given to the Christian education program of the local churches. Not to use the materials already prepared cripples the ability of the publishing house to produce better materials.

The consecrated wisdom and experience of many people goes into the production of our own materials. Much time and effort involving many people went into the production of the uniform outlines which we use for the uniform lessons. We feel it is a distinct advantage to take the best that two groups have to offer in building the graded Sunday school curriculum. We have already reached out to glean the best from many sources.

There is a good case for using our own Sunday school materials.

Flashes of Thought

A Lingering Melody

Walter Gering

That melody . . . it kept ringing in my mind all day long. Not that it was such an outstanding score of music; in fact it was a very simple little children's chorus. But all through the hours of the day it was constantly with me. It was Sunday; there was much to be done. I had to keep my mind upon the worship service with its prayers, hymns, and sermon. In the background of it all was that haunting melody with its message.

It all started at early dawn with that thumping of the squirrel across the roof of the parsonage. For some time now he has done the same thing. There is a thud as he lands from the treetop upon the roof. Then there is the sound of his hop across the roof. It is just enough to awaken a light sleeper at that time of the morning. So it was on this Sunday.

But it was not the squirrel itself which brought on that melody. He was soon gone and then, followed a silence. It was so quiet that the proverbial pin dropping in the house could have been heard. Not a creature was stirring. There was not a ripple of breeze; silence reigned supreme.

Then suddenly, far in the distance sounded the crow of a rooster; the first call of the day. There was no response; silence again took over. Again he sent out his challenge. This time it was answered far off in another direction. That was the beginning of a mighty chorus of voices. In a few moments it seemed as though the heavens were filled with song. There was the song of the meadow lark somewhere out in the field. The robins began to stir in the neighboring treetop; the little wren with its sweet melody began to sound through the air, singing as though his little heart was bubbling over with joy. One by one the little winged creatures added their song until it was like a mighty chorus.

My heart could not but respond to their message. Like a flash that little children's chorus came:

> The birdies in the treetop sing their song,
> The angels chant their chorus all day long,
> The flowers in the garden lend their tune,
> So why shouldn't I—why shouldn't you
> Praise Him too?

That was it; they were all praising the Creator who had made them. Why should not I praise Him too? Surely my heart could join in with that heavenly choir of creatures at the break of day. What better way to begin a new day than to sing forth the praises of God, my Lord and Savior? The little singers soon disappeared, going about their day's activity. But the melody lingered on: ". . . praise Him too."

BLESS THE LORD, O MY SOUL

Through the Knothole of Our Back Yard Fence

JOHN SAWATZKY*

We have got to settle down after a few centuries of escape. We have to make a realistic appraisal of what our responsibilities really are.

Our world has grown small. Communications and transportation facilities are such that the people of the world live closely together and we have suddenly become neighbors. Most areas of the globe have become settled.

These things mean that we as Mennonites can no longer readily escape to some nice quiet corner to do as we please. It looks as though we have got to settle down after a few centuries of escape. We have to make a realistic appraisal of what our responsibilities really are. We have little experience with such a challenge.

Most of us live in communities in which the social and religious bonds are loose. They are not like the well-knit and relatively stable villages of Russia from whence many of us come. The individual is easily lost in our urbanized type of society.

Looking Outward

Looking at life through the knothole of my back yard fence I note that the brotherhood idea is not easily observed in the competitive and unorganized society common today. Economics, the market, production of goods, personal wealth and a high material standard of living have become exaggerated in importance. Our work, our job, however specialized and narrow, is often the focal point of our existence. Technology, the machine, has become an object of worship.

Science has produced facilities for making life more pleasant but it has also provided a too easy cushion on which to rest our heads and hearts. Man has come to feel, through having the powers of science, that he is master of his destiny. The most dangerous type of thinking that this has achieved is that of humanism as expounded by philosophers, such as Bertrand Russell and others. The idea is that intelligence, education, science will save the world; no other power or authority is necessary.

The churches in our society are growing in numbers, both buildings and members. There are some signs of religious revival but how real is it? We do not know as yet but much of it seems to involve people who are scared of atom bombs and Russians. They are looking for easy answers, the kind often provided by eloquent radio and grandstand preachers.

Christianity is a religion of the cross, it is a philosophy of denial, but we do not see many signs of it in the current so-called revival.

Looking Inward

Where do we stand as Mennonites? Have we done any better than the people of the society around us? Not likely. In fact it is our contention that one century has brought us "farther from God and nearer to the Dust." In this one century the experience of our group of Mennonites has been to seclude ourselves in a comfortable spot like a village in Russia or to run away, when the going gets tough to some comfortable spot, where the cross is not so great.

Living in Russia, as we did, was like living in a warm greenhouse in which we did little but look after ourselves and pay little attention to our responsibilities, in a cold world. Fortunately we got out of it, but now we are shivering in the breeze not quite knowing what to do.

But it seems that a coat (the garment of isolation) is not going to help; the best solution is to roll up our sleeves and go to work. We cannot easily run away because there are no easy places left so we must face up to our spiritual and social obligations. And the needs, the challenges and perhaps the opportunities in the world have never been greater.

As a recent editorial in The Canadian Mennonite put it: "No other message than that of Christ and the Cross, the message of reconciliation and nonresistant love is adequate for this situation. The Mennonite Church must rise above average Protestantism and proclaim without apology the demands of complete allegiance to Christ. No other gospel in today's world will do."

Christian pacifism is not a popular idea and our role as missionaries in all walks of life is not an easy one. Indeed Christ gave us, in a sense, a revolutionary task. Professor Kermit Eby, speaking at the 1956 Bluffton Peace Conference, said, in effect, that if Mennonites got around to spreading and living their faith it would be the communists (instead of us) who would be fearfully looking under their beds before retiring at night. We must lose our self-consciousness, our feeling of inferiority so that we may confidently profess our faith and be witnesses in our community in whatever we do.

Well Equipped Workmen Needed

The implications for Christian education should be reasonably clear and we would stress two aspects.

First, the people whom we should be trying to influence may be pagan but they are not ignorant. This also applies to members of our own groups. Present day facilities for communication and education are such that people have much information and they do some thinking too.

This means that we have to be as well educated as possible; not in a sophisticated manner but basically well equipped with language, an understanding of the world in which we live and of course most importantly with thorough knowledge of the Bible and Christian theology.

A Book Review

Revival in Christian Education

MAYNARD SHELLY*

With many large tasks facing the busy pastor including preaching and helping people in need, he has little time to think about Christian education. For besides these two full time jobs he has a myriad of other little things to do that cluster about him like flies on a jelly jar, not the least of which is the production of that weekly bulletin.

Then there is the Sunday school superintendent on whose shoulders rests most of the work of education done in our congregations. Does he have time to think about the meaning of it all? Probably not, although both he and his pastor ought to give more attention to the course their educational program is taking.

Nor does the Sunday school teacher ever think about Christian education. While he works on the front lines of the teaching program, he may never have asked what it is all about. For all too often the teacher has remembered that when he was first called to teach he was told that it would "all be in the quarterly" and so has never looked further.

But all of these folks and all Christian workers need to take a closer look at this thing called Christian education. The Teaching Ministry of the Church by James D. Smart* gives all of us this opportunity.

In brief form this author gives us a history of the Christian education movement and a clear statement of the reason for teaching. But his main purpose is to start a revival in Christian education. He wants a Christian education that is built on the great teachings about Jesus Christ, particularly the doctrine of justification by faith.

While not all of us would agree with the author in his statement of the Christian faith that ought to undergird our teaching programs we would all agree when he says:

"Jesus' plan for the salvation of the world was that there might be men and women in whom he would live and, because he lived in them, God would be alive in them in the power of His Spirit, and God would continue through them to invade the life of the world and to conquer it for his Kingdom .... So the church is fashioned into a fellowship wholly at God's disposal and offers itself as a body to Jesus Christ to be used by Him in the fulfillment of His redemptive purpose."

The Church then is important in the program of proclaiming the gospel, for through it Christ intends to work. The work of Christian education is a work to make people ready for this task.

For Christians to be able to be channels of God's revelation they need to be more than "ordinary Christians" who have been produced by those types of Christian education programs that intended only to give people a Christian character. This calls for a renewal of emphasis on the doctrine of justification by faith. Certainly, this doctrine has never been forgotten by our church. But unless we remember that the Church is God's human partner in the work of revealing Christ to the world, it is easy to assume that the purpose of the Sunday school is just to make "good" Christian people.

It is not. The task of Christian education is to produce a church of Christian evangelists who can go out to meet the pagans of this world and give a reason for their faith, and by the grace of God, win them. Any smaller concept of Christian education does not deserve to be called Christian.

This reminder of the importance of the Church is also a reminder of the importance of Christian education. Because the church has a high responsibility the church has to give an increasing amount of attention to Christian education.

No longer can the Church depend on the Sunday school alone to do its teaching. In fact, it may be that Christian education has strayed from its true aim because the Church has not understood its role in God's plan.

To produce the kind of church in which each member is an evangelist the author suggests that four areas be part of the teaching program. First there must be a teaching of the Scriptures so that people may understand the revelation of God, meet Christ, and understand the nature of the church. Second comes worship which initiates the believer into the life of the church so that he feels a part of the church's response to God. Next the fellowship of the church prepares the Christian and makes him a part of the union of those who have been redeemed.

Last of all he speaks of a study of the history of the church, which is the church's memory of itself. Because we have ignored the history of the church in ages past, we have begun anew in each generation in building the church and have not profited by the experiences of other Christians. This too, is needed in the Christian evangelist's equipment.

Through Thorough Education

Then, many of our public high schools with their secular orientation do not provide us with an all around basic education as defined above. We must have thorough religious education in order to achieve our objectives. This applies not only to future teachers and ministers, it means as many of us as possible. We must all be able to labor in the vineyard. Our church schools and colleges are significant means of attaining our goal. Judging by our standard of living we can afford them, indeed we can well expand them.

Gospel Radio in Japan

It will interest some of our readers to know that radio work has also become an arm of service on the mission fields, including our own. We quote Esther Patkau describing what our missionaries in Japan are doing with radio. They now have only one fifteen minute period per week, yet even that little time has already counted for Christ.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

"Tis the Lord alone who deserves all the praise for the way in which His Word has been made known during the last three months again. Last September at our annual conference the responsibility of the radio correspondence was placed into my hands. Since that time in October when the first "Light of the World" gospel program was broadcasted over the local radio station I have spent many precious hours in this work already. The program is prepared in Tokyo by the Pacific Orient Broadcasting Company, recorded on tape and then sent to the local station where it is brought on Saturday morning with our local address given. Various pamphlets and a free Bible study correspondence course have been advertised on these programs. To all those who write in to us, we send a New Testament free of charge. (It is a popular edition which is nineteen cents.) Each one also receives a personal letter. If there are questions, they are answered by a personal letter. During the winter months, Mr. Hidaka, the former interpreter, helped in answering this mail, but in April he left for the college in Tokyo. After prayerful consideration, Mr. Hatano, a member of the church here but an out-of-town student at the universtiy in the city of Miyazaki, consented to be the helper. It was a thrill to watch him become more and more interested in the individuals and their problems as they wrote in asking for spiritual help. The one contact is a watch shop in a village outside of the city. Recently when he was in the city on business he stopped at the house here for an interview. He has been witnessing to his friends in his district. Occasionally some of them come to his house in the morning to listen to the program. In one letter he said he wanted to do his best to make the gospel known to as many as possible. After having visited with us here, he had gone to see one of his friends taking his New Testament with him. The friend had become interested. Would we send him this book too? His younger sister had married, but he is deeply concerned about her spiritual condition. Would we send her some Christian literature and a "way to Jesus guide book." Another of his acquaintances is a patient at the TB sanitorium. The patients there had begun to listen to the program too. Would we send this lady a New Testament also? It is a thrill to see how great a witness this man is already even though this knowledge of the Scriptures is limited; nor do I as yet know whether he is a believer in Christ.

Just recently a young woman who does the cooking and the house cleaning in the dormitory for twenty-five workers at a certain shop here in town had accidentally turned on the radio in the morning and heard part of the message and the address. She had had contact with Christianity before, but now separated from her husband, and separated from her children because of work, she made a definite note of the address and instead of writing she came in person for an interview. After several hours spent over the Word of God she bid Christ enter into her heart (Revelations 3:30) and take care of the loneliness in her heart and of her many problems. That evening when she left for home she carried with her a small New Testament, and she remarked that she would show it to the people in the dormitory and tell them what she had learned. Last night she called on the telephone and thanked us for the opportunity of having heard the message of a Savior who comforts. She is not only reading the New Testament for herself but is daily reading it aloud while the workers listen to her. Witnessing for her new found Friend! The radio is paying dividends already.

Often when we mention the Light of the World program to someone, they inform us that they are listening to it weekly. The Lord knows into how many homes and hearts this message is reaching, and some day heaven will reveal the results of the many who have received Him. For next year if possible we would like to make arrangements for a half-hour program. Fifteen minutes a week is very short."—Esther Patkau

Hungry Japan

Not necessarily for physical bread, though to be sure there are very many people in Japan who do not have enough to eat. But the hunger here referred to is "to know." This eagerness to know reaches also into the spiritual. You as readers of our church periodicals have read about the Bible classes our missionaries have conducted in Japan from the very beginning of our work there in 1950. Such classes are still being conducted and still bear precious fruit. Here is a paragraph of one of Brother Ferd Ediger's reports:

"We are finding it a great joy to watch how the Lord is opening new doors here in this new venture for Him. I felt that it was the Lord's will that the house in which we are living should not be used for Bible classes and church services and for that reason have been waiting for an opening to get into the house of a believer or interested party. There were enough people interested in an English Bible class so that they secured a conference room from the City Office and we are meeting there now every Saturday evening with an average of fifteen attending. This class, I believe, will prove worthy in stirring up and creating interest in Christianity as several of the members of the class are already attending the Sunday morning services which are in Japanese (though still not fluent)."

Mennonite Youth

You'll Never Be the Same

Read about an unusual college student some time ago. He brought to his dean a registration card listing the oddest combination of courses the school could offer.

Upon closer inspection the curriculum master detected an odd pattern in the classes the young man wished to take. None of them met before ten o'clock in the morning and all could be reached by climbing no more than one flight of stairs.

Such painless education is coveted by many and found by none. Physical effort and mental agony are on the price tags borne by all kinds of education whether secured from a college, high school, or Sunday school.

Classrooms expose students to more pain and agony than a surgical operating room.

For I am wondering if anything has ever been learned without a compensating amount of labor, sacrifice, and pain. And that pain includes injury to pride, the most painful of all.

I notice the hard time that the disciples had learning from Jesus. He was the best teacher, but they were normal students.

What a torturing experience it was for them to learn the truth about God, and the truth about themselves. A number of times they thought they had learned the right answers, only to have our Lord come back to tell them it was all wrong.

When at last they thought they were on the right track the whole experiment blew up in their faces. Jesus was crucified; an agonizing experience for the disciples. But out of it they learned the truth.

This learning like all learning is painful; painful because it compels change. It forces us to change of mind and life.

So that is the reason most people like to sleep late and take it easy. And that's why some students squeeze through some colleges and schools without learning. They are afraid to learn because they are afraid to change their minds and lives.

You're going to school this year, somewhere, whether in college or high school where education is formal because you have teachers and books to help you; or in the larger school of life where learning is informal but hard because you have fewer kind guides.

So I'll say good-bye for now, for I won't see you again. You'll never be the same. Next week or next spring you'll be a changed person.

HOW TO FLUNK IN COLLEGE

Apparently Vergil S. Fogdall, dean of students at Lewis and Clark College, has observed with keen insight a large number of freshmen and sophomores. For he brings to light the fruit of his insight in an article called, "How to Fail a Course in College" which is published in Outlook Publishers' current Going to College Handbook. He admits that in compiling this list he has plagiarized from a colleague who in turn copied them from uncountable sources making the rounds of college campuses.

Among Fogdall's tongue-in-cheek suggestions for scholars are:

Enter the course as late as possible. By changing your mind about your curriculum after school starts, you should be able to avoid classes until the second or third week.

Do not bother with a textbook.

Have a few friends handy during the study period, so you can chat when the lecture becomes dull.

If you must study, try to lump it all together and get it over with. The most suitable time would be the last week of school.

Keep your study table interesting. Place photographs, magazines, goldfish bowls, games and other recreational devices all around you while studying.

Never interrupt your reading by checking on what you have learned. Recitation is not very pleasant anyhow, since it shows up your deficiencies.

Remind yourself frequently how dull the course is. Never lose sight of the fact that you really wanted to sign up for something else.

Review only the night before examination and confine your efforts to trying to guess what the teacher will ask.

Stay up all night before important examinations. You can spend the first half of the evening discussing your determination to "cram" and the latter half drinking coffee.

Write your examination rapidly. Glance at the question and then put down your first impression.

When out on the campus, forget the facts learned in class. Don't let academic work get mixed up with your daily life.

Ignore dictionaries. You could never learn all the words contained in one anyhow.

Absence from class is quite all right. If a friend invites you to go to Honolulu or the Bahamas for a month or so, go ahead. You can always make up the work.

Never turn in papers or other assignments on time. No prof has a right to boss you around. This is a free country, isn't it?

Remember that success in life is your main aim and never let extraneous matters such as grades, interfere with this objective.

Jesus Christ or Davy Crockett

One cannot help but wonder if the populace of present-day America, "the Christian nation of the world," were personally confronted with a charge similar to the one Joshua set before Israel whether the choice would result in "Jesus Christ" or "Davy Crockett."

The Davy Crockett craze has so completely overwhelmed our country that lawyers throughout the nation are feuding over Davy Crockett trademarks, store clerks go about their daily routines donned in coonskin caps, and children in one daily vacation Bible school, among which were included some of our own Middle District Conference young people, reportedly began singing "Davy Crockett" in class one morning instead of the appointed chorus. Over 20,000 people thronged the streets of Cincinnati, Ohio, one evening merely to get a glimpse of Fes Parker, Hollywood's "Davy Crockett."

Who was Davy Crockett? This idol of our nation was a crude Tennessee frontiersman who fought Indians and grew up by hiring out to neighbors and not by killing bears. Later in his life he was elected to Congress, and the best accounts of his life say he spent most of his time in Washington saloons telling tall stories. The Crockett Almanacs which depict his life are filled with coarse stories and raw jokes. This is the type of individual being idolized by Americans today.

We like to boast about our many material advancements and discoveries. True, we have made many worthwhile and beneficial achievements, among which are a host of miracle vaccines and cures. However, millions today are succumbing to the deadliest disease of all, sin. People are disregarding Jesus Christ, the "Balm of Gilead," and instead they are seeking economic gains. They are placing their trust in hydrogen bombs, and jet planes instead of God. "First things" are becoming secondary as men seemingly prefer Crockett and materialism to Christ and the spiritual. Sad to say, we are no better than the sin-sick Israelites of Joshua's era.

When confronted with the charge of Joshua 24:15, can you answer along with Joshua, "but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord"?

SO MUCH FOR THE FIRST SIX MONTHS

The churches of the Conference are to be commended for the way in which they have supported the work of the Conference in the first six months of 1955. Although the total was considerably short of the budget, yet the steady flow of contributions week after week exceeded contributions a year ago for the same period by almost $38,000.

Meet the Presidents

Omar Voran, Western District Young People's Fellowship

Serving the Western District Young People's Fellowship is Omar Voran, a member of the Bethany Church, Kingman, Kan. Omar is married and works as accountant for the Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Bethel Home for the Aged in Newton, Kan. At the present time he lives in North Newton and takes part in the work of the Bethel College Church.

Co-workers with Omar in the work of the Western District are Virgil Flickinger, Inman, Kansas, and Mary Moyer Duerksen, Deer Creek, Oklahoma, both schoolteachers. Virgil serves as vice-president and Mary as secretary-treasurer.

Peter S. Bartel, Bethel College physics instructor, represents this district fellowship to the General Conference Young People's Union. Harley J. Stucky, professor of history at Bethel College, serves the group as spiritual advisor.

The Western District Fellowship is emphasizing evangelism this year with the use of a special film called "Four to Go." The inspiring message of this film helps young people to re-evaluate their witness for Christ. It is being used in many of the churches of the district.

Another large effort of this youth group is the summer program of retreats. Camp Mennoscah, near Murdock, Kansas, the district's retreat grounds had a full schedule of programs for all ages this summer.

Encouraging gains have been made by the youth organization in fulfilling its aim of promoting active youth organizations in local churches where consecrated Christian young people serve their Lord.

ALBERTA YOUTH FACE THE WORLD

The twelfth annual retreat sponsored by the Alberta Youth Organization met on the campus of Menno Bible Insitute in Didsbury, Alberta, from July 28 to 31. One hundred and seventy-five young people centered their attention on the theme, "Facing the World with Christ."

Bill Gering, YPU youth worker, directed the Bible classes; David Neufeld, recently returned from Mennonite Central Committee service in Germany, led the Service and Christian Living classes; Paul Dyck, prospective missionary to India, discussed the work of missions; and Bill Kruger, Delmany, Saskatchewan, held the interest of all the young people in mass choir practices.

Discussion periods following the talks provided an interesting time. Many problems and questions were clarified. Also popular were the recreation periods with opportunity to take part in softball, volleyball, and lawn croquet.

The closing day of the retreat featured special prayers offered for our people who live behind the Iron Curtain.

MCC news & notes

ACTIVITY AT MENNO HEIM

Menno Heim, the MCC center in Berlin, served 1162 meals to refugees from the East Zone during the month of July. These people come to Menno Heim for a week or a week end to enjoy the Christian fellowship there.

The first two weeks in July were also Bible school time for children from the East Zone. Twenty-two children boarded at Menno Heim for these two weeks while attending the Bible school. The next two weeks children from West Berlin came to Bible school. They, however, went back and forth every morning and evening.

Rosa Kim from Buhler, Kan., who is working at Menno Heim writes: "This has been the largest number of meals served during one month since I arrived in Berlin a year ago. If it wouldn't be for the MCC food, we just could not do it. So we want to thank the many donors of food and clothing . . . ."

UNDERPRIVILEGED CHILDREN AT CAMP BENNETT

Four girls, Joyce Musselman, Orrtanna, Pa.; Arleta Miller, Archbold, Ohio; Eleanor Guth, Flanagan, Ill.; and Caroline Moser, Beaver Falls, N. Y., participated in the summer Voluntary Service unit at Camp Bennett, Brookville, Md., as counselors, Bible school teachers and recreational leaders. Run by the Central Union Mission in Washington, D. C., this is a nondenominational camp for underprivileged or "pre-delinquent" children of Washington. The children come for two weeks at a time.

These girls describe one family of children there: "Gregory, who celebrated his fifth birthday in camp, Paul, about 11, and Barbara, 13. Their mother deserted and the father married an alcoholic. This is a district court case; the children will stay in camp until school starts.

"Little Gregory had so few clothes that he was forced to wear the same shirt and short pants for almost two weeks. One morning his counselor went to the storage room where the forgotten clothes from the previous camps were kept. There she found two T shirts, a pair of shorts, and two pair of underpants. When she dressed little Greg in his new clothes the boy proudly smoothed out all the wrinkles and then ran to his brother and sister to show them the wonderful clothes.

"Paul had a bullying attitude at the start of camp. But now that he wants to follow Jesus his old habits are slowly changing.

"Our director told the children that we counselors are like their mothers while at camp. Later that day Barbara observed to her counselor: 'You are like our mothers so you shouldn't love us.' Near the end of her stay in camp she added, 'Please adopt me; I need a mother.'

"We counselors want to give these children love and guidance in return for the parental love and care we have received. And we are happy to tell them of their loving Shepherd who does not leave them at the end of two weeks."

NEW MEMBERS OF PAX UNITS

Wayne Epp and Orville Schmidt, members of the Mennonite Singers from Bethel College who toured Europe this summer, joined the ranks of PAX men at Frankfurt, Germany, on August 20. After a short period of orientation there, they will be assigned to one of the four construction units at Bielefeld, Wedel, Engenbach, or Backnang.

Wayne, son of Brother and Sister Henry Epp, is a member of the Bethesda Mennonite Church at Henderson, Neb. He spent two years at Bethel College before entering PAX service. Orville is the son of Brother and Sister Samuel J. Schmidt and a member of the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren Church at Marion, S. D. He received his degree from Bethel College this past June.

MARTIN DUERKSEN'S ARRIVE IN U.S.

Brother and Sister Martin Duerksen of Buenos Aires, Argentina, arrived in New York City, August 17. Following two weeks at the MCC headquarters in Akron, they will visit Mennonite churches in U. S. and Canada.

When the "S. S. Volendam" took the first load of World War II refugees to South America in 1947, about 150 stayed in Buenos Aires instead of going on to the Chaco in Paraguay. Since then friends and relatives have joined them until the group of Mennonites in Buenos Aires now numbers about 650.

Since 1950 Brother and Sister Duerksen have been in charge of the MCC Argentina program which is concerned with the spiritual ministry to these Mennonites in Buenos Aires. He is pastor of the Mennonite Church there, and serves as contact man for the various MCC interests in South America.

The Duerksen's themselves migrated from Russia to Colony Fernheim in Paraguay in 1929. Following theological training in Buenos Aires, Brother Duerksen taught school until joining the MCC in 1950.

It is a thrilling experience for parents to explain the Bible truths to their children and thus guide them to accepting Christ as their Savior. Religion is more caught than taught and where but in the home can children catch religion. It is in the atmosphere, the attitudes, conversation, and in the way families act toward each other that this spirit appears. Parents can share with their children in periods of family worship the source of their confidence and love. The religion pure and undefiled will be a vital force in the lives of the next generation.

Into the Beyond

ROY B. BERKEY, Goshen, Indiana, was born July 5, 1901, and died July 22, 1955, as the result of falling from a roof while working with a construction crew. He was a member of the Silver Street Mennonite Church, Goshen, Indiana.

PETER A. AMSTUTZ, retired merchant and banker of Pandora, Ohio, and member of the Grace Church, Pandora, was born February 9, 1868, and died August 4, 1955. He was one of the founders of the Grace Church, and a Sunday school teacher for over forty years.

—Carlock Church, Carlock, Ill.: July 2, Glenn Wagner, who is associated with the Pocket Testament League, brought us the evening message and showed pictures. July 31, Dr. and Mrs. John Zook brought the morning message. They are enroute to Belgium for a year of language study and will then be working with Dr. Schwartz in Africa. July 31, evening, a panel discussion was sponsored by the ex-CPS committee. The discussion was built around Christian love and peace. The churches of Congerville, North Danvers, and Normal, joined us in this service. The last mission study for the year was given at the semi-annual meeting of the WCS in July. The semi-annual offering was also received. The greater portion of the day was spent in sewing for relief and the African hospital. Twenty-nine Christmas bundles were received and distributed. A youth rally will be held at our church Sunday, August 28.—Corr.

—Herold Church, Bessie, Okla.: On July 18, Jacob Penner passed away, ten days after a second operation at Wichita, Kan. The funeral was held on July 23, at the Grace Hill Church and internment at the cemetery there. Our pastor and family were on vacation for one month. Among those who brought messages on Sundays during the absence of Pastor Tschetter were P. J. Boehr and Richard Boehr of Enid. Missionaries who were with us were Mrs. John F. Hiebert and children on June 26. The evening of Aug 2, the Aron Jantzens of Bethesda Leper Home, Champa, India, were with us. Mrs. Jantzen also spoke to our Mission Society the next day. H. T. Neufeld and Glenn Esh spoke to us in the interest of MCC Disaster Relief work in the area around Cheyenne and Leedy. The evening of July 3 the Mission Society gave a program for our adopted missionaries for a four month term. On Sunday, July 17, there was a special collection to purchase beeves for relief canning. July 20, we had our Sunday school picnic at Hydro Youth Camp. The next week the young people's retreat was held there. Leo Buller had the misfortune to lose half of his right index finger while baling hay.—Mrs. Margaret Horn, Corr.

—New Hopedale Church, Meno, Okla.: On July 27, a farewell service was given in our fellowship hall for Rev. Arnold Epp and his family, who moved to Newton, Kan., Aug. 2. July 31 Rev. Epp gave his farewell message to our congregation. We have been saddened by their leaving but we wish them God's blessing in their new church. A group of our young people attended our young people's retreat at Hydro the week of July 25-30. The ladies of our church are making linen kits for the Blackwell tornado victims, while a group of men are going to Blackwell each Friday to render service to the tornado victims. Sunday, Aug. 7, we observed "India Day" with the missionaries Aron Jantzens as our speakers. Inspirational talks given by both Rev. and Mrs. Jantzen and a film and slides gave us more firsthand information of our field in India. Thursday afternoon, Aug. 11, the men met at the church to mow and clean the cemetery and church grounds while the ladies met to quilt.—Corr.

—Silver Street Church, Goshen, Ind.: Six of our young people attended retreats at Camp Friedenswald this summer. Ray Suter and Bruce McKibben attended the Junior Retreat; Sue McKibben, Joyce and Jim Larimer, the Senior Retreat; and Tom Yoder, the Pre-Junior Retreat. Our pastor, Daniel Graber, was the dean of the Pre-Junior Retreat. Several guest speakers were in our church recently. On July 17, John W. Miller, professor of Old Testament at Goshen College, brought the morning message. August 7, Rev. J. J. Esau spoke to us in both the morning and evening services. Rev. Esau is our conference evangelist. In the worship service on August 21, William Klassen brought the message. Mr. Klassen was the pastor at Silver Street last year while he was attending Goshen Seminary. He is now enrolled at Princeton Theological Seminary. On this same Sunday, Pastor Graber preached in his home church, the Eicher Emmanuel Mennonite Church, near Wayland, Iowa. The Graber's spent their vacation with his parents in Iowa, August 15-22. Pastor Daniel Graber attended the Study Conference on the Believers' Church which was held at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago, August 23-25. He represented the Central Conference as a delegate appointed by the executive committee.—Corr.

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN EDUCATION?

Christian teaching is much bigger than the Sunday school, though it continues as the central and single biggest educational activity. Not incidentally it touches more people with a wider age spread than anything else in church life, and as ever reigns first as the effective avenue of evangelism—both as to numbers and to the securing of commitment to Christ culminating explicitly in church membership.

But youth work, vacation church school, camp and conference work, missionary education, social education and action, stewardship education, young adult group work, aspects of organized men's and women's work, weekday religious education, weekday nurseries, children's and youth's choirs, family and church night programs, and especially parent work and family life are all in the field today known as Christian education. It is in full surge and, with corporate worship, heralds a revitalized day for Protestantism. —Ralph N. Mould

The right instruction of youth is a matter in which Christ and all the world is concerned. Luther

To educate a man in mind and not in morals is to educate a menace to society. Theodore Roosevelt

PONDER THIS

"We want the 'climate' of our colleges, as well as the curricular offerings, to be most conductive to the growth and development of such leaders as will make the greatest contribution to the strengthening and extension of the church. This is the essential reason for our separate existence, and the only way in which we can justify the church's faith in us. How necessary it is, therefore, that the entire staff administrative and teaching be whole souled and active in the achievement of the institution's objectives.

"It is a time when the church needs to claim the best intellects among her youth to lead the way in a new venture for Christ. In a very real manner the future of world civilization depends upon whether the young people of America or the youth of Russia will win, not on fields of battle, but in the areas of intelligence and moral courage. Our Christian young people simply have to out-think, to out-live, to out-love, and to out-plan the communist youth of the world. Unless we can make the world more Christian, it will become inevitably more communistic."

A PLEA

for Christian Education

The rumor has somehow gained currency that Christian education is not quite as dignified a discipline as theology, language study, or homiletics. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

As Christ prepared to ascend to the Father, He commissioned His followers to make disciples of all nations, teaching them to observe all of His commands. It should be clear from this that the ministry of teaching ranks high in importance, for how will the heathen learn the commands of Christ unless they are taught? And how will this teaching be effective unless there are teachers? And how will teachers develop techniques of communication unless there are schools to train them? Teaching, you see, is an art, not a science. It must be developed with the same skill and artistry as the calling to the preaching ministry.

Not all recognize this, however. Since the preaching ministry has a certain outward thrill to it—for who does not tingle with pleasure when men repent and are saved?—it is easy for Christian workers to become so involved in the work of preaching that they sense no need for promoting sound educational efforts in the church. Large budgets are allotted for the ministry of preaching and evangelizing, but very little for the ministry of education. And even in instances where splendid Sunday school buildings are provided, little systematic effort is made to work out a Christian philosophy of education. The teachers are handed a manual and then told to go home and study it. What constitutes good teaching, and how they are to go about being good teachers, they are not told.

I am convinced that Sunday school teachers and Christian education directors do not receive the full measure of credit they deserve. Without their faithful, conscientious efforts, the church could not carry out the spirit of the Great Commission with even her present effectiveness.

"In the divided and distracted world of this mid century, the tough and crucial battles are being fought in that realm where all solemn issues of history are decided—man's own mind. Not on smoke-choked Asiatic blackheads, but on leaf covered campuses and in the classrooms filled with children's excited babble will the only meaningful questions finally be answered: Can humanity ever achieve wisdom enough to cease preying upon itself? Do the citizens of Western Democracy have the intellectual and moral stamina to fight back? Does America, as champion of the West, have the brain-perception keen enough and conviction firm enough to match its brawn?"

—Editorial in "Life," October 16, 1950

What Can Christian Education Do?

Take the church back to the method used by Jesus and the early Christian church.

Double the church's membership in the next decade.

Through conservation reduce the need for reclamation and multiply a hundred fold the effective outcome of funds and effort devoted to church work.

Vitalize and give dynamic force to the spiritual life of the church by building religion firmly into the everyday character and experience of people.

Provide for the church an intelligent and loyal membership instructed in the Bible and trained for Christian living.

Make it possible for the church to take the offensive for the spiritual regeneration of the world.

George Herbert Betts

FAITH AND EDUCATION

The peril of our civilization has quickened educational activity. The old "phoney" philosophy of escalator progress went into the dust bin with the coming of World War II. The church was forced to redefine what on earth it was doing. If the church had a faith, exactly what was it?—and speak it out—be the church! Get free from these entangling alliances with a materialistic too-easy culture, and rediscover the Gospel—"look to the rock from which you were hewn, and to the quarry from which you were digged." As old, thin assumptions evaporated there came a profound spiritual searching for the grounds of faith, for the basis and structuring of faith.

—Speech by Ralph N. Mould

You Tell on Yourself

You tell on yourself by the friends you seek,
By the very manner in which you speak,
By the way you employ your leisure time,
By the use you make of dollar and dime,

You tell what you are by the things you wear,
By the spirit in which you burdens bear,
By the kinds of things at which you laugh,
By the records you play on the phonograph,

You tell what you are by the way you walk,
By the things of which you delight to talk,
By the manner in which you bear defeat,
By so simple a thing as how you eat;

By the books you choose from the well-filled shelf,
In these ways and more, you tell on yourself,
So there's really no particle of sense,
In an effort to keep up False Pretense.

"What is my proportionate share of the 1955 budget of the General Conference?" This question is not easy to answer. But if every "earner" in the Conference will pay $1 a week for the work of the General Conference, we will end the year with a good report.

BELIEVERS' CHURCH STUDY CONFERENCE

Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago was a busy place the days of August 23 to 25. From Pennsylvania to California and across Canada representatives of the General Conference churches gathered for a serious study of the Church, both past and present, and its practices, trends, and future work.

The mere recital of the subjects treated gives something of the scope and work of the Conference: The Statement of Our Task in This Conference; The Church in the Bible; From the Apostolic Church to the Reformation; The Anabaptist-Mennonites and the Biblical Church; The General Conference Mennonites and the Biblical Church; Standards and Practices in Admitting Members; Discipline in the General Conference; Guiding Principles from the New Testament and Our Anabaptist - Mennonite Experience; Patterns of Responsibility and Authority in Our Congregations; The Congregation, the District, and the General Conference; Our Concept of Church on the Mission Field; The General Conference and Inter-Mennonite Relations; Responsibilities of Mennonites in the Larger Christian Church; Values and Problems of the Lay and the Supported Ministry; Emphases Needed for Strengthening Our Biblical Church Life and Mission; Practices and Trends in Mennonite Congregations.

The Conference was well-planned, and much work went into the writing up of the papers. Each delegate was given a book with all the papers on all the above subjects in printed form. This was of great value in following the speaker and in the discussions and questions that followed.

The study groups following the presentation of about two papers proved most valuable. Here in seven groups of fifteen to twenty each, with the printed articles in hand, each subject was carefully considered and discussed in a fine spirit of serious effort to discern the truth or fallacies of opinions expressed. These group discussions were usually of an hour or an hour and a half in length, and proved very stimulating and helpful.

The spirit of fellowship manifested was in itself of untold worth. The fact that church leaders from all parts of the country and with many different backgrounds and various shades of opinions could sit down together and in a spirit of tolerence and love discuss the various problems presented, was in itself an example of what a believers' church could be.

Near the close of the conference the Findings and Statement Committee brought their report in an effort to gather together the real essence of the conference. The closing message on "My Vision for the General Conference Mennonite Church" by S. F. Pannabecker challenged the group to go forward into more consecrated service.

Watch the coming issues of The Mennonite for a more detailed report of this conference, which no doubt, will go down in our history as an outstanding meeting.

LOOKING AHEAD TO '56

In the first week of December the Boards will meet to plan the work of the Conference for next year. The big question already is "What work shall we undertake to do, and what shall we leave for someone else or some other time?" "Shall we go forward, or not?" In part the answer may be found in the offering plates of churches on those Sundays designated for a General Conference cause.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

THE FORGOTTEN ADULTS

A good number of years ago the Sunday school, after a long and bitter struggle, won for itself a place in the church. In the last several decades the youth of the church have had to go through a similar struggle in order to be recognized as an essential and vital part of the church. By now Youth have a secure place in our society. In fact it has been very popular to have an active youth organization, and a church that could boast a good youth organization received a certain amount of prestige. But I am wondering, have we forgotten the adults?

Generally speaking we have made three large classifications: children, youth, and adults. The first group we have divided into Kindergarten, Primary, Junior, Intermediate, and Senior. The second is often divided into High School and College age groups But we have not divided the adults into different groups, and if they have been divided at all it has been into men's and women's groups.

We now need to concentrate on meeting the needs of adults. Not all have the same needs because not all are facing the same problems. For the sake of meeting the needs of adults we need to divide them into at least three major groups as follows:

The Younger Adult faces marriage, adjustment to family life, homemaking, establishing a home, new responsibilities as parents, choosing a suitable life's vocation, making a living for a growing family, learning use of adult freedom, and accepting responsibilities in church and society.

The Middle-aged Adult faces greater problems in marriage or marrying again, they must often live with aged parents or parent, need to cope with adolescent children, find that they have new blocks of free time on their hands as children leave home, must accept maximum responsibilities in church and community and in business. Often men face the necessity of changing to less strenuous occupations and must live on smaller incomes.

The Older Adult faces the loss of marriage partner, problem of marrying again, has ever decreasing number of family and friend connections, and faces dependence on his children. They face forced retirement, loss of sources of income, loss of physical energy and capacity, and life in a society that has greatly changed its set of values since they were young.

We cannot hope to meet each group's specific needs by having them all in one group, nor by separating the men from the women, nor by having them divided into proper classes in Sunday school. If we should try to meet their needs in Sunday school we would need a closely graded or a group graded set of material rather than the International Sunday School lessons.

Better than to do it in Sunday school would be to create in the church program a place for Adult Education. Just think of what could be accomplished. Today a newly married couple can expect to live together for 45 years. If they would attend one 2 hour class a week during that time they would receive an education comparable to that of College and Seminary—or an A. B. and a B. D. and would have started on a Master of Theology by that time. Many would live long enough to get a Ph. D.! This illustration may not be realistic but it does illustrate the vast resources that still remain untouched by the church.

The needs of adults are just as crucial as those of youth and childhood. We owe it to them to speak to their needs also.

THE MODERN EXILES

In our Sunday school lesson we studied the plight of the people of the Southern Kingdom. They found themselves captives in Babylon. Here in this strange land, away from Zion, the holy city, away from the temple and away from the promised land, they were asked to sing the songs of Zion. But how could they sing their songs of joy and of victory in this strange land where they were spied upon by others, where they were under political pressure designed to make them lose their identity and where they were expected to worship strange idols?

Several wars, heavy industrialization and increasing urbanization has created what we might call a Modern Exile. Members of the church have become separated from the fellowship in a hundred different ways. Some have been transplanted to new communities where their denomination is not represented and where the pressures toward conformity are very real. Others are exiled through the type of work they do—travel, working long hours, changing shifts every few weeks, so that it is actually possible to live next to the church building and yet be unable to share in the worship services.

Add to this the students at universities, the new immigrants, the I-W boys, nurses in training, and those in the armed forces and you have a host of people who are exiles in their own land. But we still expect that they will be able to sing the songs of joy and victory.

What can we do to help the modern exile to be

The Extension Work of the Sunday School

SYLVAN LEHMAN*

Is one hour a week sufficient to do the best work in Christian education? With the best teachers available, and the best courses obtainable can we say that is ample? In addition to one hour in the Sunday school, one hour in the worship service, one hour in the evening evangelistic service, and perhaps an hour in the midweek prayer meeting still leaves one hundred sixty-four for other things. Responsibility lies within the church school to advance the cause of Christ in every way possible.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

The need for Christian education is evident on every hand. Someone has said, "Where there is no vision the people perish. Where there is no passion the church perishes even though it be full to the doors. A vision without a task makes a visionary. A task without vision is drudgery. A vision with a task makes a missionary."

The purpose of the Sunday school then is to teach the Word of God to the largest possible number of children and adults. Every teacher should faithfully present the claims of Christ as Savior; endeavor to lead the scholar to personal commitment to Christ as Savior and Lord; and then, comes the responsibility to nurture in the faith those who are born again.

Without a doubt the Sunday school is the hope of our land today. If the Sunday school fails, the church and its ministry will be seriously affected. The secularization of our public schools makes the Sunday school all the more imperative. For a large number of children and young people this is the best avenue for reaching them for Christ and the church.

IS THERE A NEED FOR EXTENSION?

Without apology we make bold the statement, that within our Conference schools, the need of extension is imperative. I believe the first step is to present the claims of Christ to those regularly attending. Some of those in turn can be used for house to house visitation, trying to enlist others in the cause of Christ. After all, boys and girls, men and women, can be won to Christ only upon hearing the Word of God. "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God," Rom. 10:17. In many areas house to house visitation is carried on by faithful workers and results are astounding. Some one has suggested that one pupil a month for a class is not difficult to achieve. Such growth, though slight would double many a Sunday school in one year's time. Such a plan has been followed by various schools with good success. In every community with few exceptions, there are many families not now attending any school. Every unchurched family is a possibility upon invitation to hear the Word of God.

Different communities certainly vary as to the total need. However, statistics reveal that in our fair land twenty-seven million under the age of twenty-one receive no Christian training and ten thousand villages have no church building. Many die each week without Christ and without hope.

In more recent years, the daily vacation Bible school has become increasingly effective in concentrated positive teaching of the Bible. Children attending daily vacation Bible school receive in a few weeks as much and more teaching than normally in Sunday school during a year. Particularly, in cities and fundamental circles Child Evangelism has proven effective in winning children to Christ. Usually, the Sunday school is responsible to carry out these extra activities.

EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL CAN WIDEN ITS USEFULNESS

Increase in the Sunday school is possible in practically every community. Whenever the attendance is increased, the church greatly benefits accordingly. The surest way to build up the church is to improve the Sunday school. In fact church life is built around the church school, while improved attendance will mean increase in opportunity for service in Christian education. Every school can enlarge its borders provided there is a will to work.

Another area largely neglected by our schools is outposts. Such areas as trailer camps, new housing areas, slum areas in cities, or perhaps unchurched areas. Some denominations strongly urge outposts with great effectiveness. Trends today are to extend with branch establishments. For instance, one of our local banks is today building a new branch in the west and east respectively. That will tend to increase business and cause consciousness of ever widening services. What is true in a commercial way can be true in a spiritual way.

Some years ago, one of our local churches started an outpost, promoting a Sunday school with success. By and by the work began to dwindle due to lack of consecrated leadership and willingness to sacrifice time and effort. Outposts or extension work require much effort in prayer, consecrated leadership and above all, love for Christ and souls. Do our schools have the consecrated leadership, devotion to the task, and zeal to proclaim the Word in outpost areas? May many of our Christian leaders answer in the affirmative.

To fulfill our responsibility as Sunday schools we must advance in every possible way. The complacency and self-satisfied position some of our schools hold is not in keeping with the great commission of our Lord. Do we believe that increase is possible? It requires faith to build and faith requires willingness. Let us remember that in practically every community there are plenty of people—boys and girls, young people and adults not attending regularly any school. Let us remember that a portion of the unchurched is our particular responsibility.

Prison Artist Paints 200th Christ Smile

The convict-artist in the Florida State Prison, who for years has painted portraits of Christ smiling, completed his 200th painting a few days ago. It is the first of four requested by churches of various denominations in Phoenix City, Alabama, to further the rebirth of Christian zeal in the former "Sin City," and the remarkable increase in church attendance there.

Perhaps you have heard part of the story about the old alcoholic at Raiford who, after many evenings of praying for Divine guidance, began painting portraits of Christ with a soft smile of encouragement.

The inmate, once a respected artist, now serving life for four convictions of paying for liquor with worthless checks, says he wants to devote the rest of his life to painting Christ with a kind and cheerful smile, to express the inner joy he feels at having found his way to the Church.

It was only natural that word would leak out at Raiford about the old lifer's efforts. Letters have poured into Superintendent L. F. Chapman's office requesting details.

An art museum at Jacksonville offered to exhibit the paintings for three weeks. The superintendent discussed the letters with the artist and it was decided that the paintings were to be given to Alcoholics Anonymous to exhibit and then distribute as they saw fit. It was agreed, also, that the artist's name would not be revealed. He is known as the Old-timer at the prison. All of this occurred four years ago.

Turning down all offers to sell his portraits, many for substantial amounts, he has given 200 without cost to churches of many denominations, prayer groups, missions, convents, and worthy individuals all over the world. He has a growing list of over 6,000 requests, but steadfastly he refuses to accept pay for the oil paintings. He furnishes all his own materials from a modest income and from the sale of occasional water-color scenes when his funds run low.

Says Warden Chapman, about the result these paintings are accomplishing outside Raiford's high fences: "The mounting flood of mail which comes here to Raiford from people all over the world who have heard about the Old-timer or have seen his paintings, is evidence of the truly great contribution this man is making toward advancing the cause of Christianity. And I attribute our own rising rate of attendance at religious services in no small measure to his work."

A further concern of the Committee on Evangelism is to urge our congregations and Sunday schools to appoint local committees on evangelism. By this is meant appointment of several persons on a local committee upon whom the responsibility rests for guidance and support of local evangelism. Upon every school rests the obligation to win as many as possible for Christ and the church. Through this committee interested persons can work and expend their energy unitedly and with results that are gratifying.

The number on the committee would depend somewhat on the size of the local school or congregation. How they are selected and length of office depends on the local setup. Such a committee would lend guidance for evangelistic meetings, personal visitation, in fact, assist in any worthwhile endeavor. Certainly, the underlying responsibility would be to pray for the pastor and evangelistic effort; during "the Week of Witness" the local committee could work out the details. Special projects, such as tract distribution, newspaper evangelism, encouraging Sunday school work in neglected areas, trailer camp evangelism are suggested. The Committee on Evangelism will gladly assist any school or congregation for the local setup.

In all our efforts for Christ and the extension of His work, He must have the pre-eminence. In all our schools let us attempt to win as many as possible for Christ while there is opportunity. Let us give the gospel message faithfully to our scholars, and through personal contacts; let us extend our influence to outposts in Sunday schools, trailer camps with the gospel message. Let us do our best for Him and trust the results with Him.

Concerning Eternal Security

BOYD E. BONEBRAKE*

Usually, in the doctrine of eternal security the parallel is drawn between the twentieth century Christian who falls into deep sin and the Christian of Paul's day or the believer of the Old Testament period. The Bible does show the inconsistent lives of these people. And they appear to be still regarded as believers.

David's case is usually cited as one of God's saints who deeply sinned but nevertheless is thought to have been (even at the time of the transgression) still covered by God's electing grace.

We must stop a moment, however, and mention that the doctrine of eternal security is determined and buttressed by the total biblical position of the individual. As I see it, one who believes this must also hold a rigid form of election and/or predestination. God's sovereignty must also be of such a nature that it determines the minute details of the universe as well as the goal or ultimate purpose.

Another example used as a parellel for the Christian today is that of the Corinthian believer who fell into gross immorality (1 Cor. 5:1-5). If we believed this doctrine, we would hold that the individual was also under God's electing grace at the time. This could of course be questioned on various grounds, but we will accept it and the former one concerning David for the sake of the discussion.

From these and many more examples (Lot, Abram, Peter) the conclusion is drawn that the Christian of today, if truly saved, may go through experiences of the same extreme nature and still remain under God's electing grace. I must be fair; the fact is stated emphatically by the eternal security believers that the Christian in such deep sin is out of fellowship with God and will undoubtedly lose rewards at the last day.

But the final statement is still stubbornly held: this individual is still "saved," still under God's electing grace—even though death might step in before repentance could be begun.

I believe the mistake made is in the unqualified application of the believer's situation of that to ours of today.

When God redeems, He stoops and lifts. The Old Testament drama gives us a picture of a loving Father who stoops down to His struggling children and slowly but patiently leads them up and up to the time when they and the world would be more ready for the greater revelation of God-Christ.

In this stooping and lifting, we believe God must have accommodated himself in some way to man. How else could they follow unless He revealed himself in their thought forms and to their way of life? He began where they were. No, He did not necessarily condone where they were. But He began there, intent upon leading them unto Christ.

Our heavenly Father undoubtedly excuses where it is justifiable in view of the situation. Earthly fathers do; would not He do as much? But we do know that where there is knowledge of truth and justice, and that knowledge is not practiced, indictment follows. In that case there is no excuse.

David and the young Corinthian believer were men of their times. They had some light, yes. But we would all agree that their backgrounds (especially that of the Corinthian just out of non-Jewish heathendom) and their knowledge were not comparable to ours today. If the grossness of their sin was mitigated in any way by God's grace, one factor would be the partial excusableness of the situation. It does take generations of Christian people to produce mature and stalwart believers.

Do you and I, Christian people with our heritage and the total Christian movement of twenty centuries behind us, presume upon God to excuse us in the same manner? I hope not!

God stooped to lift in those days. We know He is still stooping to also receive us. But if we are as Christian as we would want, we must recognize that the stoop God makes to us must be much less than then.

The Christian of today must of necessity be a better Christian than his counterpart of the first century. He must be more Christlike, that is closer to God. If this is not so, the gospel in its cumulative effects of nineteen hundred years is essentially of little worth.

You and I affirm that the gospel does redeem. Moreover, we believe that its cumulative effects are even greater in the individual and society. Therefore we must realize that even though David and our believer from Corinth may have been eternally secure at all times (though I am prone to doubt it) we certainly have no excuse to rest in that doctrine.

The most charitable that I can be is to simply refer to it as an anachronism. Let's drop it and be totally Christian!

The Christian Community

While we were conversing with an agricultural director on the recent severe dust storms in southern Manitoba, he suddenly remarked, "The preachers should have something to say about it!" We are of the opinion that this director had a point which deserves our careful attention.

The church frequently has failed to speak the Christian answer to social, economic, and political situations. Although the Mennonite Church has made an attempt in one area—war and nonresistance—in most other areas it has failed.

That is perhaps one reason why so many of our communities, even though they are dotted with churches where the gospel is preached with power and children go to Sunday school, are really not Christian. A non-Christian community is one where the business of the community is carried on in a non-Christian way.

THE STORY OF JESUS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS by Dena Korfker, illustrated by Lou Mahacek, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Zondervan, $1.95.

Dena Korfker has brought for children from eight to twelve a rather complete summary of the life of Jesus. Her book covers especially well the loving deeds and astonishing miracles of Christ. Jesus' life is not taken chronologically, but events are grouped into his boyhood, the miracles, teachings, etc. Boys and girls will enjoy this book themselves for the language is clear and simple. The crucifixion is told on a level juniors can understand.

One might wish the art illustrations equalled the manuscript. The two-color drawings of Jesus and His friends lack feeling and depth of character, something which children can understand. The facial sketches are superficial and empty. Occasionally one would also question authenticity of background. In one scene the shepherd children appear too modern.

Into the book the author has woven a bit of imagination, which is almost necessary for an expanded story of this length for the most part it is in keeping biblically and geographically with the story.

When Jesus was twelve, the author still speaks of Him as "Baby Jesus"; Jesus does not have time to eat the food prepared for Him by Peter's mother-in-law after He has healed her and at the shore after Jesus' resurrection, Peter counted the 153 big fish he had caught. There are some details an adult might question but which will not bother children.

In the teachings of Jesus, one misses for example, mention of His teachings on love or loving one's enemies. Included, on the other hand, is the story of the woman at the well, more symbolic and difficult for children to grasp.

How Christian are our communities? The government must come and warn the Christian farmer to conserve his soil. Lodges, clubs, organizations, and agencies must take over the welfare work, if it is to be done. The recreational programs for our young people and children are subjected to sub-Christian standards. Social workers, many with humanitarian motive only, must enter our districts to solve our moral and social problems.

The gospel as it is preached on Sunday must bear relevance to the situations we face from Monday to Saturday. Where the church fails to face the ethical issues of its day, it fails. Because it neglects to give the Christian answer to many of our society and community problems, we are developing so few and such weak Christian communities.

As the regenerated heart of man must guide the hands and feet and mind in Christian action and attitude, and as the family altar must be the wellspring of Christian family living, so the church in the community must guide the church membership, the brotherhood in a consistent Christian witness in the community.

Flashes of Thought

The Heat of the Day

Walter Gering

I knew what it was the moment I heard it. It could be only one thing. I felt sorry for the man; he was in a hurry. We were in the midst of the harvest season; everywhere the sound of the tractor could be heard. The long awaited time for the ingathering had come and everyone was anxious to get started. No one blamed them for that; after all, why not make the most of the time before rainy days set in delaying the harvest?

It was one of those sultry, humid days in which the pavement in front of the church literally vibrated with heat waves. All forenoon the sun had been beating down upon the earth relentlessly. There was no denying the fact that we were in for a hot day by noon.

Then suddenly there came that loud explosive bang, a sound of escaping air and the screeching of brakes. There was no mistaking that sound. It was a blowout. There in front of the church stood a large trailer, filled with harvested grain on the way to market. Now it stood motionless while two men walked around the trailer examining the damage. There was nothing left but to unhitch the trailer and go for help. The tire was ruined.

But why should that tire give way like that? All forenoon the traffic had continued on the highway. Passenger cars, semi-trailers, heavy freight trucks had been speeding along. They too were in a hurry traveling the same road. Why did not they have the same experience?

The answer is evident. These were no times to be driving tires unfit for such pressure. The load of grain was exceptionally heavy, the heat of the pavement was terrific. No tire with a weakness in it could stand the pace of such a test. Under normal conditions with a light load and cool weather undoubtedly the tire might have been good for many a mile. But these were not normal days. The strain was too much. This was no time to be taking chances.

These are not normal days for any of us. The hurried pace with which we are traveling through life, the heavy load of responsibility placed upon us, the heat of the day—all these added together create unusual strain upon body, mind, and soul. These are no times to be taking chances with evident weaknesses, hoping that the strain will not be too great. These are days in which we need to heed the admonitions of the apostle: "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might. Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil," Eph. 6:10-11.

Are We Awake to the Importance of the Printed Page?

In our day of radio and television the printed page is still very influential. On our mission fields more and more people are becoming literate. Japan is almost 100 per cent literate. India and Africa are pushing ahead fast so that the common folks shall be able to read. Missions have from the very beginning conducted schools so that boys and girls can learn to read.

Now we are faced with the question: What shall they read after they have learned to read? We may answer: "The Bible." True, to be sure. But all people who can read, so often pick up other reading material too, especially if it is attractive to the eye. Communism provides such reading material which is attractive to the eye. On our own Mennonite mission field we are in the beginning stages in waking up to this need for good attractive literature. Here is a paragraph from Miss Esther Patkau, one of our missionaries in Japan on this subject.

"We have felt the need to get evangelical literature into the hands of this reading nation. One area in which we thus far have been able to help is by having a supply of Bibles, New Testaments, and hymnbooks on hand so that Christians or inquirers could purchase a copy when they desired to do so. We have also had loan libraries in the various stations but there have been times when we have been asked about evangelical literature that someone wanted to buy. With that came a vision that if we could have a bookstore, we would have another avenue of making the message of Christ known in this area. With no capital to start with, Leonore and I invested some personal funds to purchase a small amount of evangelical literature and a few odds and ends like bookmarks, picture cards, plaques, etc. Then with permission of the mission group we opened one of our rooms to become the Oyodo Christian Bookstore. (Oyodo is the name of this area in which we live.) The bookstore has been in operation since May, but it has not been advertised to the public except to our church groups and to our contacts. Now since there has been a slight turnover already, we have added more books as the funds are available. Already some of the missionaries have found the bookstore to be an advantage; some of the Christians have benefited by it. We hope to discuss this bookstore more fully at our annual conference this fall. Being on the literature committee, I have thus far taken the responsibility of the ordering, etc. We have to be careful in this country that we do not pick up everything that is called Christian, because much of the literature though called Christian is not quite according to the Word of God. It has been a pleasure to be serving in this capacity also."

Fruits of the Field

Here are a few brief paragraphs taken from the April-June reports of our missionaries in Japan. Let us remember to give thanks for such fruits of our labors which our missionaries do on our behalf and in obedience to Christ.

Paragraphs from Brother Voran's letter: "Most of April was taken up in directing the opening of the school. It was difficult in the beginning to make the teachers understand what we meant by a Christian program. The Christian kindergartens or church kindergartens in Japan do not carry a regular program of Christian teaching. They have prayer in the morning and then Sunday school on Sunday with Saturday a holiday. The children actually pay tuition to come to Sunday school. However we did not want to start a school that way and believed that a steady Bible based teaching would be the most effective. The teachers did not believe that you could make the Bible simple enough to keep the interest of the student every day of the week. The songs too are mostly Christian songs which the children sing. However we insisted that we wanted just such a Christian program and helped them get started. We have a wealth of material in English which is not available in Japanese and the teachers had trouble thinking how to use the Bible story and handwork. But the Holy Spirit has given them a real vision. We can never praise the Lord enough for His Holy presence at all times. The teachers have a new found joy in teaching these little ones. The Bible is becoming a new book to them too. The children are taking this teaching into their homes and it is bearing fruit. Some mothers have already reported that their children have told them not to fight and tell lies because Jesus doesn't like it. People are saying that the children trained in our school are already much different than those in the city day nursery. The credit goes to the Lord. He has truly led the teachers into a vital relation with himself and they are feeling the new responsibility of their little charges. We truly praise Him for the kindergarten and pray that we may at all times be faithful in teaching only the Word of Truth so that the fruit will remain for all time. The building was dedicated on Sunday, May 15, which was also the closing day of Aburatsu evangelistic meetings. Quite a number of the missionaries were present with us and the church group gave us a royal feast for the noon meal.

"Easter Sunday we held our first baptismal service in Aburatsu (about 10 miles distant from Nichiman). Twenty-one candidates publicly confessed Christ as their own personal Savior from sin by water baptism on this day. Three others joined the church that day also so that the Aburatsu Mennonite Christ Church (doesn't sound so good in English but it fits real well in Japanese—Aburatsu Mennaito Kirisuto Kyokai) now has twenty-four members. Brother Ferd Ediger assisted in this service.

"It has truly been a joy to work with these people and to see so many come out for Christ in just one

Christ in Industry, Also in Our Mission Field

The paragraphs that follow are gleaned from a report from one of our missionaries in Japan, Brother Verney Unruh. Why should not Christ use industry for His cause among men? This venture in Japan should meet with our sympathy; and it deserves our intercession.

Here is what Brother Unruh writes:

"Through the quarter the services have continued regularly from week to week. June 5 was the high point when we had another baptismal service. Matsumoto, one of the young men who helped start the brotherhood received baptism upon his confession of faith in Christ. Following the service we ate together and had a fellowship meeting in the afternoon. We hope to have these fellowship meetings once a month.

"The most significant development in our work is the founding of the Kirishima Brotherhood. Last quarter I mentioned the two young men who are interested in starting a Christian business. In May we went to the Omi Brotherhood which is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year. This was a big help in getting a vision for the brotherhood down here in Kyushu. The purpose of the brotherhood is to operate a business according to Christian principles and use the profits for evangelism and other kingdom work.

"For the present the main industry is making bamboo chopsticks. Bamboo is very plentiful here in southern Kyushu and can be used for many things so in the future it is hoped the the industry can expand. Also, the Brotherhood may branch out into making cinder and cement blocks. The man who has been working for the mission for nearly three years (a Miyakonojo man) has become a Christian and is interested in becoming part of the Brotherhood. He has built the houses for Boschmans and Edigers and is building a kindergarten at present so has good experience.

"As to the use of profits this has only been discussed in general terms but these have been mentioned as possibilities—tent evangelism, supporting an evangelist, a church building, a kindergarten, a Christian community center, a school for rural young people who could come and study during slack seasons. Well, these may not be realized for years to come but it gives you an idea of a vision of the Brotherhood. May it be used to God's glory."

year's time. We will be beginning our next instruction class in July or August and are expecting at least twenty more to attend and to stand out for Christ."

"He Must Increase"

Our missionaries in Japan have early in their experience in mission work a marvelous opportunity to practice John the Baptist's statement on the human level. It is no less than marvelous how our Lord so soon raises up leaders in our Christian church in Japan. In many of our mission fields we have to work and wait for decades before such leaders arise. Yes, our missionaries in Japan have the wonderful joy of a missionary that they (the missionaries) can so to say stand behind the curtain, and the Japanese Christian brother and sister is in the limelight in the place of leadership.

Here follows a brief paragraph from a report by our missionary Brother Bernard Thiessen on this point:

"The first part of April we waved goodbye to Hidaka San and three young men from Miyakonojo as they left for Japan Christian College in Tokyo. Hidaka San had been very faithful in interpreting for us whenever we needed him. He had been the life of the church leading most of the meetings, arranging for programs, dealing with problems and so forth. As he left it seemed the church would collapse but again the Lord showed to us that no one person is indispensable. God raised up other leaders and the church activities carry on as usual. We miss him but praise the Lord that he is able to attend school where our young men received Christian training."

A Missionary Nurse's "Work" in Japan

Japan has a fairly complete medical system for all the islands. Yet a Christian nurse finds her place where she can serve in the name of Christ. Besides what our missionary nurse, Miss Anna Dyck, mentions in the paragraph her opportunity is also to inspire sanitation in Japan medical practice, and in helping our missionary families when sickness strikes.

"Regarding out-of-class activities—I have discontinued the medical students' class due to their examinations. I hope the medical people in Kyushu will be as friendly and gracious as these I have had contact with here. I have appreciated their kindness so much and have always felt welcome whenever I came with any requests regarding illness among the missionaries. Almost every station reports some nurses among the missionaries. Almost every station reports some nurses among those who have opened to the Word of God, and I do feel it will be a real challenge to work among them when I get to Kyushu. I am continuing with the Wednesday evening Bible class for our Christian group. I have enjoyed it so much and sometimes almost regret that there will be but a few more weeks."

A "Stubborn" Tool

On all our mission fields our missionaries must learn to speak God's Word in the language of the people among whom they are sent to work. Below is a short paragraph of one of our new missionaries in Japan, Brother Peter Derksen, in which he gives us a further glimpse of the task of getting that "tool" in their control.

"You may be tempted to become bored as you read the reports from so many of us who are struggling with different languages, but to us it is, nevertheless, a very real and vital matter. As the director of the language school has stated at different times, we cannot be effective witnesses of Christ to these people, unless we gain a thorough grasp of their language. Though at times this goal seems almost unachievable, the Lord again and again gives new strength and joy."

Brother Derksen shares also a joy with us. As all our missionaries in Japan have experienced, Japanese youth are eager for Bible study. Through such studies, though usually only one period a week, fine fruits have been garnered. Here is Brother Derksen's experience. "Another note of praise which is the salvation of a soul. I have had the privilege of teaching a weekly Bible class at Kobe University. Several of the students have shown great interest, but none had so far taken the step of faith and decided for Christ. Then on July 5, we had our last class before the summer vacation. The Holy Spirit was working in our midst when I asked whether anyone wanted to decide for Christ right there and then, Toura San, who had been one of the most skeptical ones in the beginning, raised his hand. After the class I dealt with him personally and he placed his faith in Jesus Christ as his personal Savior. Praise the Lord and pray for Toura San!"

Evangelism According to Plan

Mission work is not a hit or miss affair. Careful planning yields permanent fruit. Below is a paragraph telling something of the thought, the planning, and the preparation that is essential in mission work.

"Mission organization takes considerable time. In the evangelism committee we have made arrangements for summer camps. There will be two—the first from August 3-5, the second from August 6-8. Plans are mapped out for four evangelistic campaigns to be held during the summer. In the property committee our main work is the supervision of the building of the Ediger's house. Verney Unruh is doing good work in supervising and on several occasions I made the trip to Tomitaka with the committee. With the hope of having them completed earlier than last year the publicity committee's biggest project at the present is the calendars."

Sacrifices in Mission Work

The missionary home where babies are born and grow up is a wonderful testimony of Christian mission work on mission fields. But the little ones in the missionary home do not know how to protect themselves from danger. Little ones naturally do not see danger. Below is a paragraph from a report by our missionary nurse, Anna Dyck of Japan, where she tells how our little children of missionaries are in danger, because parents obey Christ's directive in going to the highways and byways to urge people to come in.

"The beginning of June I missed several weeks of school when I went to Kyushu to help out at the Thiessen's when baby Royce was born. After getting back and getting caught up (although I tried to study some while I was down there) the little tots here began to break out with measles. It all started (we believe) when several little scavenger children with runny noses and watery eyes came to the service one Sunday morning with their mothers and the children here played with them. We didn't realize at the time that their symptoms could be the forerunner of measles.

"You might wonder how come these children were at the service. We invited a group of these scavengers or garbage collectors as they are better known in for a meal one Sunday evening and invited them to the services. I was not the instigator so will leave it to someone else to explain more in detail. Anyway since the outbreak the children here are in mortal fear of Dr. Miyaki and myself—partly because of the needles involved and partly because of the shiny metal tongue blade Dr. Miyaki uses."

Christ's Servants Know No Social Barriers

Our missionaries try to follow Christ in befriending the lowest and the highest in social ranks; the despised and honored; the poor and the rich; the ignorant and the educated. Below are two short paragraphs from one of our newest missionaries in Japan, Brother Robert Ramseyer. He gives us a glimpse of this range of the missionary's service from scavengers to University students.

"One high light of this quarter was the Sunday evening when we invited a group of scavengers, who live in huts a few blocks from us, in for supper. After supper Yamada San spoke to them and since that time a number of them have been coming for Sunday morning worship services. None of them have yet made decisions, but they are seeking.

"Work has continued with the weekly Bible class at Kobe University, the monthly class at Toa Gaigo Gakuin and the monthly preaching in the garage."

Music Unites

HAROLD THIESSEN*

For six years the Elkhart Symphony Orchestra has been bringing fine music to this Indiana community. Under the continual leadership of George Gaska, the son of Polish immigrant parents, members of the orchestra come from the "Band City" and from neighboring communities. Its sixty players have found a ready reception in Elkhart and have taken a tour to Ohio.

Each year four concerts have been presented to the public. Some of these were broadcast over the local radio station.

Then remembering that there is a time for sorrow, and a time for joy; a time for work and a time for play; a time for reflection, and a time for song, a "pops" concert is presented in the spring of the year. This has been patterned after the grandfather of all "pops" concerts in Boston.

Tables are set out in the auditorium and light refreshments served during the program. Informality is in the atmosphere as the orchestra plays each year music on a different theme such as traveling or the Austria of Johann Strauss.

The concert is partly humorous, but with its serious moments. Program notes are printed in booklets with advertisements placed by the local businessmen. Some of these have joking suggestions such as these: "Drive carefully or the next load of flowers we deliver may be for you"; "We fax flits"; "We don't want your business, just your money"; "Half price on broken mirrors and torn wall paper"; "Why buy gasoline when Standard will burn just as well and lay down a better smoke screen."

Last year the theme of this concert was "One World." It meant to express that while nations are at odds in many ways, they are united in the language of music. So music from many nations, France, England, Ireland, Ukraine, Poland, Sweden, and the United States found a place on the program.

In planning the program Mr. Gaska asked me to present a poem which would reflect the theme of the unity of mankind as expressed by music. As I developed this idea I decided to recite such a poem to the background of Bach's "Air for the G String" played by the orchestra.

The poem is a simple affirmation of the fact that God in His divine wisdom found it purposeful to create in man a spark of mutual understanding that could be expressed through music. This one man can share with another even though they be poles apart politically and socially.

This then is the poem, "A Symphony of Unity."

A Symphony of Unity

They told me
The world was lost;
Hopelessly divided and torn apart
By the passions of cruel men;
By evil men who spoke alien tongues,
Who would never understand
One another's wants.

I looked out
On the world around
And saw men of many nations and climes,
Speaking many strange languages.
With manners and customs of many kinds;
Opinions and beliefs,
Principles and doctrines.

And I said,
"Yes, it is true,
Man is hopelessly divided and torn apart
By a generation of cruel men.
By evil men who can only speak evil
Of one another
And another's wants."
But then I heard
On a still night

A great symphony of instruments playing,
With delicate scales and rhythms,
With sweeping, massive chords and harmonies,
A moving hymn,
And a quiet cadence.

I knew what it was—
A Bach chorale.
And it spoke to me a word of kindness,
A thought of comfort and encouragement.
I knew that men everywhere could hear it—
And hearing, understand
Its moving message.

It could have been
Any other chorus,
Or any other composer's creative masterpiece.
A Gregorian chant, a Tallis madrigal,
A Handel oratorio, a Beethoven symphony,
Or Aaron Copland,
Or Shostakovitch.

The notes we know,
And knowing, comprehend.
Whether they come from Germany or France,
Or China or Israel, Poland or Greece,
Or Scotland or Italy, Russia or Sweden,
England, Hungary,
Or the Americas.

They speak as one—
A universal language:
A grand tone poem with a melodious leit-motif
Of Unity close-binding all the tribes of men;
Of harmony beneath the surface of clattering dissonance.
Man's oneness
With fellowman.

And over all—
The God of all.
Eternal Father—called by many names.
He has made of one blood all the nations.
One race—the living Human Race.
One universal lineage
Under Almighty God.

Meet the Presidents

David M. Hillegas
Eastern District YPU

President of the Eastern District Young People's Union is David M. Hillegas of Quakertown, Pa. In addition to leading the union, he is also one of the deacons of his congregation, Bethany Church of Quakertown. Here he also serves as advisor to the youth groups, sings in the choir, and teaches a Sunday school class. Married and the father of three children, he is employed as a mechanical engineer with a steam plant equipment manufacturing company. Dave got his training for this job by attending Drexel Institute of Technology.

The Eastern District union is staffed by a large group of officers who assist the president in his work. Among them are Edward B. Tice, Dublin, who serves as vice-president; Kermit Nester, Emmaus, who is the treasurer; and Shirley Moyer, Pipersville, the YPU'S youth editor. Ed is a graduate of Bluffton College, a member of the Deep Run Church, Bedminster, and teacher of seventh grade in Blooming Glen. Kermit who works in an electrical fixture factory is president of his youth fellowship and an assistant Sunday school superintendent. Shirley supplies news of the YPU to the Eastern District's "Messenger" as well as news of her community for the Mennonite Weekly Review. She works as a secretary for an electrical contractor.

And secretaries are what the Eastern District has aplenty. Paul Musselman is the union's recording secretary, and is employed in the office of a shirt factory. He is also treasurer of the Zion Sunday school in Souderton. Corresponding secretary is Jane Herstine, an active member of the Flatland Church near Quakertown. Evelyn Mumbauer, also of Quakertown, serves as the group's Mission Secretary. While still attending high school she also works as a nurses' aid in the local hospital.

Claude Boyer, Bedminster, serves as the group's pastor-counselor. Other members of the executive committee are Mrs. Samuel Sprunger, Coopersburg, junior superintendent; Nancy Seasholtz, Lansdale, assistant; Mrs. Horace Awkland, intermediate superintendent; and Mrs. John Sprunger, assistant, both of Quakertown.

During the year this group intends to revise its constitution so that they can more effectively apply the three area emphasis of the youth fellowship plan. They will be sponsoring a double convention in the fall at which the young people's group and the senior Christian Endeavor will meet simultaneously.

Some of the other district activities include a

GOING WITH GERING

"English or Deutsch, da kann ich flent reden Aber dass Low German was ihr talked tun Das missen Ihr mir translaten."

This was my answer to the Canadians who were wondering if I could speak German. My July in Alberta and Saskatchewan is now history but it is an experience far from forgotten. There were parades and celebrations, but not in my honor. These commemorated the 50th birthdays of the two provinces.

My most lasting memory will be of my contacts with the Conference of Canadian Mennonites, three youth retreats, several local churches, and a Voluntary Service unit. Everywhere I found young people interested in youth programs and activities which gave me a deeper appreciation of Mennonite youth in our General Conference. I must say, "I feel I have learned much more than I have given."

Each retreat had discussion groups following the main messages. A question box panel gave retreaters opportunity to have personal questions answered. The Lord certainly blessed us as we worshiped, studied, discussed, and played together. Various decisions made for greater loyalty and service in the Lord's Kingdom have become a vital part of our lives. The broader approach to problems will offer more satisfactory answers. Canadian Mennonite youth have a vision of work in the total church program and they are pursuing this vision.

To my Canadian friends I would like to say, "Thank you, youth leaders and committees, for giving me the opportunity of working with you. I was glad you shared your borscht, plume moos, and faspa; and my heart was deeply warmed by your sincere efforts in your many projects. May this be only the starter for greater things which you will do with your youth farm, retreats, mission outposts, and Bible schools. Your country does not yet bubble forth all the worldly competition found in the States. Make the most of this opportunity and be assured of our desire for unity in understanding and work and we continue together to press on toward the mark."

William Gering

What wings are to a bird, love is to us. They seem to add weight to the body: in reality, however, they elevate it into the air. In like manner the yoke of love, when imposed upon our sensuous nature, not only does not weigh it down, but lifts the spirit with the senses to heavenly things.

John of Goch, 15th century German mystic

Christmas Carol sing, services at the Eastern District Conference and the Home for the Aged, rallies at some of the churches geographically removed from the center of the district, an annual banquet, and various social activities such as outdoor hymn sings and wiener roasts, and skating parties.

PENCIL POINTS

Jesus never wrote a book.

Didn't He know about the power of the press?

According to the eighth chapter of John He wrote some words in the sand. But no book.

It takes a long time to put yourself down on paper. So perhaps because time was limited Jesus wrote no books, but He taught disciples. Jesus invested His message not on paper but in people.

He wanted to multiply the real thing and not make talk about it. So we note in Luke 9 that the twelve disciples were sent out to win others.

Later in Luke 10 we find that seventy more were sent out to win still more. It seems that the twelve must have won five or six each on this first mission. If there had been time for another mission 420 would have gone out bringing 2500 back.

Here's a pattern that suggests that each disciple has an obligation to bear Christ to others; the Christ that lives within the disciple, and not the Christ written in a book. This is the thing Christ expected of His disciples; disciples who are no different from the young people of today.

For the twelve needed an intensive period of training and discipline from Christ, and even so they learned slowly. In fact, they never stopped learning. But even while they were learning Jesus sent them out to find others.

Jesus has no desire to put himself down on paper. Jesus wants to write himself in the hearts and lives of people.

And He depends on you to transfer Him to at least five more.

That's the point.

EASTERN MENNONITES RESPOND TO FLOOD DISASTER

Mennonites for the Franconia Conference of the Mennonite Church and the Eastern District of the General Conference began on Monday, August 22, to help in the cleanup work following the floods along the Delaware River. Offers of help also came from southwestern Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, and Lancaster County.

About 120 men turned out on Monday, and there have been over 100 going every day since.

Some of the Mennonite plumbers have been able to use their pumping equipment to good advantage in cleaning out the houses. Most of the work is handwork—removing the debris and cleaning up the dirt and filth deposited by the receding waters.

The Franconia Conference plans to organize further to continue aid to this needy area. Although they are planning to give some financial aid, the greatest need is for manpower.

FRENCH MENNONITES EXPRESS WILLINGNESS TO HELP

At their annual AFM General Assembly meeting on August 21, the French Mennonites expressed their concern over the terrible floods in Eastern United States. Pierre Widmer proposed that the French put a certain sum at the disposition of the American Mennonites to help them meet this emergency as a gesture of brotherly concern.

SCHOOL OF NURSING OPENS IN FORMOSA

A school of nursing for the MCC hospital in Hualien, Taiwan, opened during the month of July. Four girls are enrolled in the first half of the year's class. Two others are already on the waiting list for the next half of the year. They hope to have room for them by January.

The Joint Committee on Rural Rehabilitation, a branch of the Economic Cooperation Administration, has earmarked funds for a new nurses' home. This same committee assisted in the expenses of the hospital itself which was erected the latter part of 1954.

The hospital staff, under the direction of Dr. Roland Brown, Freeman, S. D., and Bessie Plant, R.N., Didsbury, Alta., plans to give training for a regular registered nurse degree. Previously, one class of "practical nurses" were trained here.

The medical program in Formosa has three aspects: the 35-bed hospital which serves the tribes people around Hualien, the mobile clinic, and three eye clinics which serve the mountain tribes.

MATRON FOR FRANKFURT CENTER

Mary Friesen of Vancouver, B.C., sailed August 25 on the S.S. Ryndam for a two year term as matron of the Frankfurt MCC center.

Working with the Mennonite Central Committee is not a new experience for her. From 1948 to 1951 she volunteered her services as secretary in the MCC office at Asuncion, Paraguay. This past year she did secretarial work at the Waterloo, Ont., MCC office.

Sister Friesen attended the Steinbach, Man., Bible College. She received her secretarial training at the business college in Chiliwack, B.C., and worked in offices at Vancouver, B.C., before and after her MCC term. She is the daughter of Bro. and Sister Cornelius M. Friesen of Vancouver, members of the Mennonite Brethren Church there.

Recently he permitted prints to be made of four paintings to meet the thousands of requests for copies. But he will continue to give the original oils to churches without charge. They are unsigned, and he insists on withholding his identity.

"I don't want my name used because I am not seeking personal acclaim," he explains. "I don't want people to talk about the painter of Christ smiling, I want them to talk about Christ."

victorious in his faith? Certainly we cannot just sit back and wait and hope for things to change. We need to dig in where we are and work as though things will never be different. Jeremiah told the exiles of his day to settle down and farm the land. This is good advice.

More important, however, is the fact that we must get at the core, the inner essence of our faith. We must be able to determine what is integral to the gospel and what things are merely cultural accretions and not essential to it. Though circumstances may force us to alter our customs, our organizations, our language and many other things yet the gospel is not chained to these things and remains the same. Thus we need to become clear on where we can permit change without undermining our faith.

In our spiritual isolation of today we need to emphasize the need of a deep personal communion with God. Only then will we have the strength and the vitality of conviction to be able to witness in the world today.

A pillar of strength that we have largely neglected is the family. The family needs to become the church schoolhouse again, where the stories of the Bible are taught and interpreted in word and deed. Since it has been so largely neglected we do not know how to do this any more and so we will have to find ways of assisting one another to fulfill our parental responsibilities.

If the family has been neglected what about the small fellowship? At places attempts have been made to resurrect it again in the cell group but this gives an appearance of exclusiveness rather than inclusiveness. What we need is spiritual fellowship that is spontaneous wherever the believers meet. The reason we do not have it today is that we have lost the art of speaking about spiritual things in our conversations. We reserve such items for Sunday when we will have washed our minds of the things that are down to earth. It is so easy to speak about cars and tractors and about our work but we need to make these moments count for the Lord. I believe it is possible by the power of God to convert the "gab session" into a spiritual fellowship. Without such a spiritual and intimate fellowship the work simply cannot prosper.

We have so centered our spiritual nourishment and fellowship around the church worship service and Sunday school that it has kept us from using other means to nourishing our spiritual lives. As the worship service and Sunday school are deined the modern exile we need to turn again to the family and the small fellowship for help and strength. Who knows but that out of such fellowship God will call the leaders of tomorrow, and bring new life to the Church.

Bearing Fruit

Christians are urged to bear much fruit. Our fruit-bearing glorifies our Father and proves that we are disciples of Christ.

What kind of fruit are we to bear? Formerly I had misunderstood its nature. If you had asked me to look for fruit on a branch, I would have looked for good deeds done in the name of Christ and for people won to Christ.

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. It is impossible for us to bear this fruit by ourselves. We bear only by abiding in Christ.

Periodically the Keeper of the Vineyard seems to hurt us by cutting off our beautiful leaves and curling tendrils. He does this only to help us bear more love, joy, peace, patience, and all other succulent fruits of His Spirit.

CONFERENCE ON BELIEVERS' CHURCH

The recent conference on the Believers' Church held in Chicago, directed attention to the need of more careful thought and study in our church life and activity. There is a wide difference of practice among our churches in dealing with issues and problems that may arise. Only two will be mentioned here.

One problem dealt with is, how may the church be autonomous and yet be co-operative with Conference and other churches? In how far can a local church do as it pleases without any outside suggestions, and at the same time work harmoniously with other churches of Conference? What value for the local church have decisions and resolutions of General or District Conferences?

It is constantly said that no conference wishes to dictate to the individual churches. They have congregational rule and government. But how seriously should the suggestions of a deliberative large conference be taken? Here Christian charity and sanctified common sense should enter. Since there is but one head of the church—Jesus Christ—all churches should seek to obey the Head and work together in Christian harmony. Churches should welcome suggestions and guiding principles from a larger body. Co-operation without sacrificing the right of individual government can be accomplished in the spirit of Christ. More needs to be said and done along this line.

Another matter for careful consideration is the question of church discipline. How far should a church discipline its erring members? Here too, there is a wide divergence of practice. Many churches exercise practically no discipline, yet such discipline is clearly taught in the Bible.

The member who goes wrong needs to be loved back into the fold. Sin cannot be condoned, but neither can it be ignored and allowed free hand in the membership. The church should be kept pure while at the same time kept redemptive. The church is a "group of sinners striving to become a body of saints." Individuals who fall into sin must be helped, not merely cast out. Yet certain standards must be preserved even at the cost of excommunicating unrepentant members. Here, too, we need further study and guidance.

BACK TO SCHOOL

As this reaches the readers, practically all schools will be in full operation. Many parents may breathe a sigh of relief as their active children will now be under the guidance of a teacher through the day. Others will greatly miss those who may have left home to attend college. Teachers will be using all their ingenuity to keep the children occupied and really mastering the necessary courses.

There should be a close co-operation between the parent and teacher. Here we may find two extremes—both wrong. On the one hand, parents may pay no attention to what is being done in school and take less interest in their children's progress and welfare than they do in their livestock. They never visit the school, never learn to know the teacher, and shrug off all responsibility for their child's mental development.

On the other hand, some parents will be constantly checking and criticizing the teacher and the school system. They will openly find fault with anything they do not agree with and so undermine the child's confidence in the teacher. Being quick to criticize and condemn, their child is an easy victim of frustration.

Let's stay by the sane middle course. We need to keep a sympathetic interest in the child's work and progress, be friendly and co-operative with the teacher, and show our appreciation for her efforts. The home and school cannot be rivals or antagonists, but need to work together in fine harmony for the proper development and improvement of the child. Each needs the other. Parents and teachers are in the same great work, that of leading out the latent possibilities and development of the child.

FOR YOUR PASTOR

The first volume of the new Mennonite Encyclopedia has just come off the press. A brief glance through its pages surprises one with its scope and thoroughness. It is to be a four volume work, the other three volumes following later. Subjects of interest or in some way connected with Mennoniteism around the world are here treated. There will be ten thousand articles and two thousand biographies. This first volume will be available to the public November 1.

What a wealth of information and important reference material is here available for every one interested in church history as it relates to Mennonites. Many will want to avail themselves of the opportunity of owning this set. It will be an asset to any library, church or private.

But the pastor in particular needs this work for his library. Here is where church groups or organizations can prove themselves real friends of their pastor. The cost per volume is $10.00 or $33.75 for the set of four. Many pastors may find this difficult to fit into their limited budget. But the laymen groups can stop and show their pastor their appreciation and encouragement. Why not arrange to buy this set for your minister? Order the whole set and have the first set in his hands as soon as available. He will be deeply grateful for your thoughtfulness and will be encouraged and strengthened in his work. It would make a wonderful gift for any minister; if not immediately, then at least as a Christmas gift.

Think it over, laymen. Your minister needs good tools for his work just as well as does the farmer and carpenter and mechanic. Here are tools that will be a great help to him. You can get a group interested and arrange for the purchase of this set for him. Write the Publication Office for details.

The Hidden Treasure; The Precious Pearl

C. H. FRIESEN*

In Matthew 13, seven of our Lord's parables, under guidance of the Holy Spirit, are grouped together, in which our age, the so-called Christian era, is unveiled. In expounding the first two, does the Lord not give direction how to deal with the rest? We occidentals, in the course of almost two thousand years, have covered up scriptural sayings and prophecies with so many preconceptions and traditions, have obscured our vision and understanding to such an extent that it is almost impossible to get the true meaning. This caused a German theologian to pray, "Dear Lord, grant that I may read Thy Word as a child, as if reading it the first time." How significant!

Why is it that perhaps most of our theologians are so reluctant to deviate from a prescribed rut set by tradition? Is it not an established fact for us occidental Protestants, that to read the Bible with an unbiased mind is almost an impossibility?

Among the seven parables, the two—the Hidden Treasure and the Pearl of Great Price—stand out as real gems. In a nutshell, they contain the entire redemptive work of the Lord.

1. In the parable of the treasure, who is the man who found the treasure? Generally a treasure is found by chance. Certainly not in this case. The "man" can be no one else but our Lord and Savior. He knew of its existence and to acquire it He sold everything He had; though in the form of God . . . was made in the likeness of man (Phil. 2:5-8). He stripped himself of the glory He had with the Father. With His own precious blood He bought not only the treasure but the field in which it was hidden. According to the Lord's own interpretation "the field is the world." For some reason He left the treasure in the field where it was because it also had become His property.

But of what might the treasure be a symbol? Is it not Israel to whom the Lord said at Mount Sinai, "If you will obey my voice indeed, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people?" (Ex. 19:5, Ps. 135:4). But why is the treasure left in the field—the world? Israel did not meet up with God's condition, "if you will obey," and thus was scattered among all nations all over the world. In spite of this severe judgment, Israel remained His "peculiar treasure." When His time comes He will lift it—gather Israel from among all nations. Scripture abounds in promises of restoration as a nation and re-establishment of her kingdom with Christ Jesus as their King on the throne of David reigning over Israel at the capital of Jerusalem and over all the nations of the earth. Read Isa. 2:1-5; 11:1-9; Jer. 33:14-17; Ezek. 36:16-38; 37:24-28; Luke 1:31-33.

2. There is some similarity between the two parables of the Treasure and the Pearl. In both, "the man" and "the merchant man" strive at things which are so valuable and desirous in their eyes, that they sell everything in order to have the means to purchase them. It is quite obvious that both "the man" and "the merchant man" are the same—our dear Lord Christ Jesus.

We have seen what "the treasure" stands for, what might be the "pearl of great price"? Is it not the Church of Christ, the Ekklesia, as we find her in the epistles described in her position, glory, and final consummation? Who is not overwhelmed of her unique position in this dispensation, reading only the first chapter to the Ephesians; being "chosen before the foundation of the world," (vs. 4), "in whom also after ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." Furthermore, "which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of the glory" (vs. 13, 14); "and gave him (Christ) to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all." (vs. 22, 23). It is obvious that this is the precious pearl which Jesus bought with a price.

Every one who by faith in the Lord Jesus has passed from death to life is indwelt by the Holy Spirit and thus a member of the body of Christ, and one in Him. And that in spite of being split up in so many groups. No affiliation with any denomination is sufficient. The only condition, without any additional supplements, to become a member of the body of Christ is, "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." By believing, the Holy Spirit creates a new life of which He takes possession. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwelleth within you?" (I Cor. 3:16) It is a very serious question whether the Holy Spirit dwells within one or not. "Now if any man has not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." (Rom. 8:16).

The very man is just as much outside the church of Christ as the Gentile to whom we send our missionaries. "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and have not charity—(the Holy Spirit)—it profiteth me nothing." (I Cor. 13:3). What deplorable confusion in regard to the Ekklesia, and what ignorance about the Holy Spirit is prevalent even in our own circles.

When comparing our Christian life with that depicted in the Epistles there is hardly any resemblance left, and still we are constantly departing farther and farther from the Apostolic conception of the church. We have forgotten that " our conversation is in heaven." "Even when we (Gentile and Jew) were dead in sins, God hath quickened us together with Christ in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." (Eph. 2:5, 6; cf. Col. 3:1-3) Furthermore, by the Holy Spirit the church is made one "with Christ the head of the body, the church." "So we being many, are one body in Christ and every one members one of another. Having then gifts differing accord-

Dad and the Church

How can Dad help the church? And how can the church help Dad? These two questions are equally important, and never more so than at the present time. As one minister declared recently to a visitor, "When Dad is interested in the church, its importance increases a hundredfold in the home."

What the minister declared is matched by an opinion expressed by an attractive gray-haired lady who has visited in "literally hundreds of homes." She declared with real enthusiasm: "Regardless of the furnishings of the home, when Dad, as well as Mom, is behind the church, it is a rich home. I would go so far as to say that Dad is the plus factor in the home-church relationship."

Far be it from the present writer to offer gratuitous advice to fathers. Probably they get enough of that, anyway. Yes, fathers have their hands full at the present time, paying the bills, making a living, and just trying to be a good dad.

Even with this on the record, it appears to many church workers that in some cases the church is not exactly a live and vital matter to fathers. It may well be, as some fathers protest, this deficiency is not their own doing. Yet the fact is, seasoned workers are saying that Dad is needed to help bring the church into the home, and to help further the values for which the church stands.

Agree or disagree with the contention that sometimes Dad "slips up" in the matter of church. What Dad can do for the church, and what the church can do for him is of paramount importance in this era. Let it never be forgotten that the Christian home often is like an island in an alien and angry sea, swept by waves that generate from the casual living practices that we see everywhere around us.

Dad can help the church because he does have high leadership in the home, even if he scarcely seems to exercise this prestige of his. A sociologist explained: "Dad is the male of the family. He supplies the answers from his own experience. He goes out into the world and makes a living. He is looked up to, respected. His opinions, attitudes, and actions often determine those of his children."

Also, Dad can help the church by completing the partnership between home and church. Often he can do this more effectively than Mom. But church workers report many instances in which it is Mom, not Dad, who really is alert to the privilege of Church. The point is: She can not do it alone! On the other hand, experience shows many a Dad who is a tireless worker for the church. Indeed, seeing whole families coming to church is a thrilling and moving experience.

Dad through his church activities shows the importance of God and Christ in his daily living. It is Dad's acceptance of Christ in his own life and by learning about Christ in the church that he shows the spiritual implications of fatherhood. These implications are what a dad needs to ponder and weigh and take into his life.

For the home, the church is the one institution that seeks to help, and this help is done in an absolutely unique way. The unique mission of the church is to forward the teachings of One who gave His life for us. He said to bring the little children to Him.

If Dad has any doubt about the functions of the church, the reason for its being, he should get out his Bible and read the letter to the Colossians, especially the third chapter where Paul reviews the dismal story of the casual Colossians. After Dad thinks about these Colossians, he might note particularly these words of the apostle: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord" (Colossians 3:16).

The question finally comes down to this one point of emphasis: Dad can set a powerful and persuasive example in his daily Christian living. It is this example, growing out of Dad's realization of the spiritual side of fatherhood, that is far more important than just being the proverbial "good provider."

When Dad in his daily living puts the church and its values into "top priority" rating, the church achieves a great significance in Dad's home. Example is so strong it is almost beyond belief. All of us have been gently amused at the way a little boy imitates his father's walk. We can understand this. But we need to realize children also take on the spiritual traits and attitudes of their parents.

Consequently, when Dad studies his Sunday school lesson, goes to church, studies his Bible, plans and carries out his contribution to the church budget, when he conducts family prayers, when he shows by his daily living he is a spiritually alert father—he furthers enormously the partnership between church and home.

What is the difference between an "average" home and one that is a joy to behold? Experience reveals that most often it's a churchgoing Dad who counts!

Freedom, Church, State, and Civilian Service

A. STAUFFER CURRY*

The first amendment to the constitution guarantees "freedom of religion." The first clause reads: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This is an expression of the spirit of the colonial fathers, many of whom came to these shores to "worship God according to the dictates of their conscience." In many circles today a phase of this concept is described as the "separation of church and state." In our country all churches are to be free, and we are not to have state churches or "officially recognized" —or "unrecognized" religious bodies... by the state.

This concept, along with other constitutional concepts of freedom, in relation to men with scruples against military service has been the subject of many discussions and some writings. It may serve the purpose of clarity to look at a few matters related to the recognition of objectors to military service in the last several decades.

There is presently a clear disposition on the part of government to continue recognition of objectors on religious grounds. Most congressmen and administrative officials believe that to make them serve in the armed forces, against their religious beliefs, would violate "freedom of religion." Law schools seem to have done a good job in impressing upon their students the importance of this principle. Few officials, if any, agree with the religious objector; but many will go to considerable lengths to preserve his right so to believe. But this recognition of conscience has taken, and continues to take, constant reminders to government by religious leaders and others of the meaning of the first amendment in this respect.

This recognition is embodied in certain paragraphs of the Selective Service law, which after defining classification and appeal procedures, states that recognized objectors shall be ordered to work "contributing to the maintenance of the national health, safety, or interest." The House-Senate conference report on the bill stated there shall be "no national work camps," thus repudiating the CPS concept of World War II. Civilian Public Service grew out of the law stating that objectors shall be assigned to "work of national importance under civilian direction."

The current civilian work program eliminates a strong criticism against the churches, especially prevalent during World War II, that the "peace" churches were violating the concept of "separation of church and state." It was charged that they became the "arm" of Selective Service in administering CPS. It was charged that orders originating with Selective Service were relayed to men by the churches. The first amendment was violated, said the critics, when the government made church agencies directly subject to their orders and when churches, according to critics, allowed their freedom of action to be regulated by government directives under the conscription law.

Regardless of the pros and cons of this dispute, the issue has been largely eliminated under the present law. Churches do not administer a CPS program and the churches serve purely an advisory function, if any at all. It is true that some churches "employ" objectors now, but the arrangements are vastly different from World War II. Then the churches administered the work program, subject to orders from Selective Service, for all objectors in civilian work. This applied whether the objectors wanted to work for and under the churches or not; whether the churches, in turn, desired the services of the men or not. Now, however, the objector only works for and under the church if he wants to. There is no compulsion to work for the church and he may choose non-church service, independent of any church agency. At the same time, the churches are not compelled to "take" all, or any, objectors into their program. They can accept and reject 1-O men and work with them according to their needs. Voluntary employment arrangements are agreed upon by the man and the church agency. All the government does is state whether or not any given type of work with a church fulfills the requirements of the law. If not, the church simply does not employ the man and he looks elsewhere for work fulfilling the definition of the law. This separation of church and state seems much more complete now.

This separation, of course, means that churches are not nearly in as close touch with their men as during World War II. Travelling pastors, for example, cannot visit a civilian work camp and automatically have access to their objectors as in World War II. The question is debated in some circles if "separation of church and state" in this regard has not brought about "separation of objectors from the churches." It may be similar to the question in the religious education field as to whether "separation of public education and religion" has not sometimes tended to bring about the "separation of pupils from religion" almost entirely. In other words, does "freedom of religion" sometimes encourage "freedom from religion"? The responsibility of the churches, it seems to me, is to preserve "freedom of religion" and also prevent "freedom from religion" in this respect.

II

For years the government of the United States had trouble enforcing a military conscription law. Only during World War I did the military conscription principle become firmly established, after the courts repeatedly upheld the right of the government to STORIES FROM OTHER LANDS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. Compiled and edited by Al Bryant; illustrated by Fiore Mastri, 189 pages, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Zondervan, $2.50.

David was visiting his good friend Mwanga at another mission station. Mwanga's African friends had never seen a white boy and rollicked with laughter. They thought he looked like a fish. After Mwanga covered David's face with jungle berry juice, his dark-skinned friends happily accepted David—until the sun grew hot and the berry juice dripped from David's perspiring face. They laughed again, but this time as friends, for they thought he looked much like a zebra. As David went home with a clean-scrubbed white face, there were many friendly good-byes.

On Christmas Eve everyone was to bring a gift to the mission. Leonard and his crippled sister, Angela, wondered how they could afford one. Gaston, the rich boy, surely would bring one. Then Leonard hit upon the idea of making a little bell for the mission door. Each day he worked hard so Angela might have a gift to bring. But to their dismay, when the gifts were brought on Christmas Eve, Gaston brought a bell too, made of pure gold! To the delight of the children, however, Angela's bell was chosen to hang over the mission door because of its beautiful clear tone. Gaston's bell, which made only a dull thud, they decided would make beautiful candle sticks for the altar.

Hans was a bell ringer in their little church, just as his father had been. The afternoon of Christmas Eve when Hans climbed the long ladder to repair the rope, he found a sparrow sitting on her nest! If he rang the bell, surely the nest would be destroyed. Even though some grownups were skeptical of his story, Hans was willing to walk through the village on a cold snowy night to call the people to church, just so he might protect his new friend. During the service, when it was very quiet, they heard a chirping sound. They knew the little sparrows had hatched and Hans' story was really true.

Al Bryant has edited these and many more mission stories about Toshiko, Po Kah, Cheeko, and other children with wonderful, strange-sounding names. They are compiled into a book that will interest children from seven through eleven years. Many of the stories are interesting, though sometimes one wishes for more "local color" to give each a distinct geographical setting.

The stories carry a strong Christian message. Nearly every story incorporates in some way the message of salvation, though it sometimes seems injected or forced. Throughout the book there is an

Flashes of Thought

A Flight Through the Air

Walter Gering

I could hardly believe my ears; yet I knew that he was a man of character, not given to exaggeration. But it was such a perfect example that it seemed fantastic. Could it be that it was this very kind of experience which brought on the words of the writer?

You see, they had been watching those little canaries for some time. The nest was near the window where it could be observed without frightening the mother as she cared for her little flock. Four babies were nestled in the tree, peeking out from underneath the wings of the mother. Sheltered as they were from the world into which they had come they contentedly gazed about. How long would it take before they would launch out into life? No one knew; only time would tell.

Then came the day; the expected happened. One by one the little creatures went out into the world. But the manner in which they went was amazing. Pushing the little one out upon the edge of the nest the mother canary slipped underneath the edge and hung motionless in the air while the infant slipped down upon her back. Then there was the journey off to the bush nearby, baby canary nestled upon the back of the mother. There the fledgling was released upon the branch of the bush. The first initial flight had been made.

One by one the young fliers were taken from the nest to a nearby branch. The time had come for them to stretch their wings and to explore the vast expanse of the heavens open before them.

But not before the lesson had been completed. There suddenly came a quivering call from the young for help. Like a flash the mother sped to the rescue. Flitting underneath she gave herself to her young as a means of escape. Slipping down upon her back the baby canary was swiftly carried out of danger. Out from the foliage came a slinking cat, her prey snatched from her presence.

Was it this that the writer had in mind when he wrote: "The Eternal God is thy Refuge and underneath are the Everlasting Arms of God"? I do not know; possibly he too, experienced such a sight. But certainly these little creatures were a marvelous demonstration of God's providential care for His children, redeemed through the blood of the Cross. His everlasting arms, constantly underneath, never fail to uphold His own. Like the little canaries we too may nestle unafraid in His bosom, confident that He will see us through the flight of life as we wing our way upward to the heavenly home.

The Ma

One of the most sordid and seamy stories of the Bible has to do with one of the well-known patriarchs of the Old Testament. It might be better for us to forget about it entirely except that it is an eloquent portrayal of an important truth. Sometimes truth must be presented vividly and sharply before we grasp its full significance. The story has to do with Noah, of whom this was said: "Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God." Because he walked with God, he was able to see more clearly than anyone else the significance of the time in which he was living. He was alert to what God was saying, and what is more, he did something about it. The account of the flood and the ark which he built is well known to everyone. Now after the ark rested again on dry land, and the crisis of the flood and all that went with it, was clearly over, Noah, the man who had walked with God, whose career had been one of great spiritual leadership—Noah did an unexpected thing. He got drunk. Dead drunk!

The first of his sons who saw him in that pitiful condition went immediately out of the tent to tell others. The other two sons became the only redeeming feature in this sad story. What they did when they saw their father was so beautifully tender, so lovingly considerate, that their act deserves to be remembered for all time to come. This is what the book of Genesis tells us. They took a garment, and with their own faces averted that even they might not have to look upon the degeneracy of their father, they covered him with the garment and quietly left the tent. This is what Edgar DeWitt Jones has so aptly called the "Mantle of Charity."

The mantle of charity has come to represent the act of tenderness and consideration of the two sons toward the moral failure of their father. It has come to mean the charitable attitude toward the human frailities of others. It does not mean condoning or glossing over sin. Let us get that straight. It does not mean becoming callous or indifferent to moral evil. It is rather the stout refusal to give publicity to the moral failures of others, to refuse to judge with insufficient knowledge of the facts, and the willingness to give to others the benefit of the doubt. This, I maintain, is a most important quality in great living.

1. Consider first of all, that the mantle of charity represents the spirit in which we wish to be dealt with by others. Perhaps we can see the importance of what we are saying if we begin with that fact first. We may not readily see the point of surrounding the weaknesses and frailties of others with the mantle of charity, or learning to think of others at their best until we consider how very much we need that for our own lives from those who live around us. How many times have we been helped by those who have thrown the mantle of charity about our failures and mistakes? How many times has a situation been made easier for us because others have given us the benefit of the doubt and believed only the best about us?

When Paul, who was then called Saul, was stricken with blindness on his way to Damascus, he was told to go to the street called Straight in that same city and inquire for one named Ananias. Now Ananias had heard about this Saul of Tarsus, how bitterly he had been persecuting the followers of Jesus, how he had breathed out threatenings and slaughter against them. So if Ananias at their first meeting in Damascus had looked at Saul with suspicion and misgiving, it would not have been hard to understand why. But do you remember what he said to Saul as soon as they stood face to face? Ananias put out his hand and said, "Brother Saul." That is the mantle of charity.

So we can see the importance of what we are saying by the simple application of the golden rule, "What ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." We have it again every time we pray the Lord's Prayer, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."

2. Now consider in the second place, that the mantle of charity creates a greater measure of unity and understanding in human relations. For this reason, too, we consider this spirit an important quality in great living. There can be little doubt in anyone's mind that the major human problem, whether on the local level or the world level, has to do with the relationship of people and groups to each other. What is it that divides people? What is it that drives a wedge between them, pushing them farther and farther apart? Is it not that people and groups do not fully understand each other? They magnify both the sins of others and the virtues in themselves. They judge others by much more exacting standards than they apply to themselves.

Take it as a safe rule of thumb, that you cannot really understand another person without throwing around his life the mantle of charity, without thinking of him at his best. There are those who do the opposite. They think of people at their worst. In their cynicism they say every man is a rascal until he proves himself to be otherwise. They look for faults, for points of disagreement. And they find them where no one else can find them. But this does not contribute to the understanding of people. No, the man who really understands people is the man who has learned to see the best in people, who throws about their recognized faults and failures the mantle of charity.

The failure to see the best in people is what creates misunderstanding in human relations, and drives people apart. Sin must be faced and recognized. But the mantle of charity will be the saving ingredient in many a home, or church, or community. It cements relations together, because it sees people through different eyes. If you begin at once to think of the people living around you at their best, then you will understand them as you never did before, and you will create unity and understanding in your relationships.

Charity

3. Consider in the third place that the mantle of charity is a redemptive attitude contributing to spiritual growth. Like the quality of mercy, it blesses him who gives and him who receives. If we are always critical of people, if we have trained our eyes to see only their weaknesses and not their possibilities, if we take keen delight in magnifying and spreading abroad their frailties, it will most certainly have a debasing and corrupting effect on our own spiritual lives. Booker T. Washington once said, "You cannot keep a man in the ditch without staying there with him." In judging others, we judge ourselves. In condemning others, we condemn ourselves. In becoming talebearers and gossip mongers, we say more about ourselves than we say about others.

But the other side is also true: in learning to think of others at their best, in making frequent use of the mantle of charity, we reveal the atmosphere in which we live and move and have our being. It was said of Queen Mary that once an ambassador was visiting at Buckingham Palace and was making very derogatory remarks about the poor. Finally the queen said with a smile, "As the poor are not here to defend themselves, let us leave them out of our conversation." Living in such an attitude of charity toward all mankind cannot help but have a redemptive effect upon the lives of others. Inescapably, it brings out the best in people. The two possible attitudes toward human frailty about which we have been speaking all along, come together in striking contrast in an incident recorded in the Gospel of John. The scribes and Pharisees brought to Jesus a woman who had been taken in adultery. "Now," say the scribes and Pharisees, "the Law of Moses said she shall be stoned. What do you say?" Ministers often get questions like that from people whose minds are already made up, and who ask not for new light, but in order to trap them. But Jesus was equal to the situation, and after long and studied silence in which he wrote in the sand, he said, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." Soon the self-condemned accusers all left, and Jesus was alone with the woman. Looking at her, He asked, "Hath no man condemned thee?" "No man, Lord." "Neither do I condemn thee." There you have the two attitudes: the attitude of the Pharisees, harsh, cruel, destructive; and the attitude of Jesus, loving, understanding, redemptive. Did Jesus approve of her adultery? Not for a moment. Did she ever sin in this way again? I dare say no. Jesus had the capacity to see the best in people and to bring it out of them. In the long run, the mantle of charity does that. It contributes to spiritual growth.

4. Finally, consider, the mantle of charity is essentially a manifestation of the Christian spirit. This surely follows from the incident in the life of Jesus to which we have just referred. It is the crowning fact which makes this an important quality of great living. The mantle of charity thrown about the weaknesses and frailties of others is an expression of great living because it is in keeping with the spirit of the Christian life. And Christian living, whatever it may come to mean, is always great living. A Christian is one in whose life the love of Christ has taken complete and full possession. This love is directed not only Godward, but also manward. The love of Christ in one's heart is not consistent with talebearing and gossip mongering. Listen to Moffatt's translation of a verse in I Corinthians 13: ". . . love is never glad when others go wrong, love is gladdened by goodness, always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient."

There is no greater reason for marking this down as a quality of great living than to point out that this is the way Jesus lived. For so He did. All through His life and ministry He met people who fell down low. Never once did He minimize the seriousness of sin, or gloss over a single evil act. Yet, how gently He draped the mantle of charity about the sins and frailties of people. He could be stern and harsh if need required. He could pronounce woes upon those who stubbornly refused to repent and receive the new life. But when at last He hung upon the cross, after men had done their worst to Him, He cried, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." Strange, is it not, that we are so ready and willing to copy Jesus in His sternness and not in His tenderness! But the distinctive thing about Jesus was His tenderness, His love that will not let us go, His mercy that does not gloss over, but redeems and makes over again.

So we return to the sons of Noah and the attitude which they took to their father's degeneracy and sin. While it wounded their hearts, no doubt, they were unwilling to make cheap publicity out of it. But with averted faces, they draped him with the mantle of charity. Here we see a quality of great living. For this represents the spirit in which we wish to be dealt with by others; it creates a greater measure of understanding and unity in human relations; it is a redemptive attitude contributing to spiritual growth; and it is essentially a manifestation of the Christian spirit. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

A New Missionary Faces Japan

Below are a few short paragraphs from one of our new missionaries in Japan, Miss Martha Giesbrecht, where she tells of language "nuts" that have to be cracked, and also of the process of getting close to the soul of Japan.

Here is what Martha writes:

"During this time I have thought of the benefit of the gift of tongues in order to learn the difficult Japanese language. All of us know that it requires toil and sometimes tears to acquire skill in this language. I am thankful for those who are endowed with a greater natural ability of language study but I know that I have a long, long way to go in order to be really effective in the use of it.

"In Karuizawa this summer I am planning to study the Japanese Bible and learn to do personal work in Japanese, since our textbook in school hardly touches on religious study.

"Then Ann and I are eagerly looking forward to work on the field. We know that God is already preparing hearts in the place we shall work. Our living quarters are still not fixed but Verney Unruh is looking for a place to rent. I think there are definite advantages in living in a Japanese house in order to get closer to the people. That has been my desire and since the building fund is low, we will have the privilege of living in a Japanese house.

"This time here in Kobe has been a preparation for the field outside of language study also. We have been able to study the Japanese people, their way of life, their way of thinking, their problems. It has helped us to learn better approaches to their greatest need—their spiritual need. We have also rejoiced in seeing Christians grow in grace. I believe we missionaries have much to learn from the way they gather for an evening and discuss only the things of the Lord, various problems; then bringing it all to Him in prayer."

ing to the grace that is given to us." (Rom. 12:5, 6; cf. 12:1-12).

That is the Pearl so precious to our Lord Jesus that He bought it with a price. To Him it is beautiful, glorious, and sublime. At His coming "He shall present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," (Eph. 5:27). We as Mennonites have failed to permit Him to kindle into a blazing flame the love which the Holy Ghost has shed abroad in our hearts, so as to love and embrace all the members of the body of Christ as brethren, in spite of differences. Of these the Lord will take care. "Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called into one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. 4:3-6).

conscript men. Early in our history some attempts at military conscription were held unconstitutional. Even today many persons hold that conscription in any form is unconstitutional, whether for military or civilian work purposes. On these grounds numerous men refused orders into civilian work during World War II; a tiny group holds this position today. Some who hold this position, and/or the belief that any conscription is morally wrong, feel that even registration is participating in it and should be refused. In consequences, many non-registrants have gone to prison.

III

Another constitutional principle which some critics of CPS claim was violated is stated in the Thirteenth Amendment. It states in part, "neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime . . . shall exist within the United States. . . ." Because the men frequently worked for only $2.50 per month, in addition to food and a bed, critics of CPS claimed the situation was one of "slave labor." Because some CPS men were forced to work against their will, some critics leveled charges of "involuntary servitude." Selective Service itself developed considerable sensitivity on the point of wages and is currently highly in favor of "prevailing wages" for the type of work performed by an objector. Labor unions across the country helped to keep that sensitivity alive by various types of resolutions etc., on the work program. Some uninformed persons made a literal deduction, on the basis of the language of the Thirteenth Amendment, and concluded the objectors in CPS actually were criminals being punished by forced labor! Because the churches were so closely involved in the World War II program, these criticisms were brought directly against them, as well as against the government.

Now the basis for these criticisms is somewhat removed. Even if there were no wages, the churches would be free of criticism because they do not administer the program. But, except for some reductions in rate in a few states, the "prevailing wage" principle is followed. To a considerable degree objectors receive "equal pay for equal work." (It should be noted that only very low-paying jobs, such as mental hospital attendant, are usually open to objectors. Reports of high wages for objectors are usually in error.) And the churches are not required to supervise a man's life 24 hours each day and in the process issue furloughs, passes, etc., as they did during World War II. If the man performs adequate full-time work, and the employing agency so certifies to Selective Service, he is regarded as fulfilling the legal requirements.

It is profitable to think upon these problems. But of much greater importance is to preach, teach, and work for peace and brotherhood in such an effective way that wars will end and our country as a whole will not feel the need for any type of conscription, for either military or civilian service.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Maynard Shelly, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas

Seven Hundred Dollar Work Day

On July 18 the joint young people's fellowship of five Kansas churches sponsored a work day that netted over $700 for the Missionary Education Fund of the Young People's Union.

In search of a worthy project the young people of the Emmaus and Grace Hill Churches of Whitewater; First Church, Burns; Zion Church, Elbing; and Walton Church, Walton, selected the project of contributing to the Missionary Education Fund. Through this fund Jake Duerksen of Paraguay is receiving his training. The Duerksen's have been attending school during the past winter and summer in our colleges and will go to our seminary this fall. They plan to remain in the States until the early part of 1956 when they will leave again for their home country.

July 18 was selected as the work day and with the cooperation of the churches the day was spent in doing all types of jobs. Those who had steady jobs throughout the summer gave their day's wages for this cause. Almost everyone was able to take an active part and give to this mission cause.

The enthusiasm ran high as these funds were brought in on the day of dedication, July 24. The amount received was over $700. As this was given in the name of Christ we know that it will bring forth fruit.

This Young People's Fellowship was organized in the fall of 1953 under the leadership of C. J. Dyck. The group has been meeting every month or every other month as the church and school schedules permit. Meetings consist of a worship hour and a social hour which are closed by the singing of the hymn, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." The Young People's Fellowship is conducted in the five above named churches, rotating every meeting.

In our young people of our churches we see as Julias Hare has stated, "Unless a tree has borne blossoms in spring, you will vainly look for fruit on it in autumn."

—Gerhard Peters

PENCIL POINTS

Missionary on furlough; that's what one boy reported as his life's goal.

To be welcomed as a kind of hero, to be listened to with anticipation, and to be entertained and honored on a few occasions seems to have been the kind of rewarding life this fellow wanted.

We haven't seen any returned missionary whose lot we coveted, for it is indeed a rigorous and demanding role. But a missionary has other rewards besides a furlough.

As is the experience of all who labor for God whatever their occupation, so a missionary is rewarded because he can feel he has served in a worthwhile way. Things may or may not have been accomplished, but at least God's will has been done.

To be short and to the point we must say that there's no furlough or any other kind of a reward until you have performed a missionary task.

Program Helps for September

Mission As a Vocation

God Is Calling You

PROGRAM No. 1

A. Devotions

1. Hymns: (From the Mennonite Hymnary) 340, 331, 190
2. Scripture Reading: Isaiah 6:1-9a, Romans 10: 4-17, Mark 16:14-20
3. Prayer

The hymns suggested can be interspersed throughout the program. Choose one of the three Scripture passages suggested.

B. Question and Answer

Have the leader ask about 6 or 8 persons in the youth meeting, (ask each individually) these questions:

1. What vocation do you plan to follow?
2. Why? Give specific reasons.

C. Personal Testimony

If there is a young person in your fellowship who plans to be a missionary ask him to tell how he got his call and why he chose missions as his life work.

D. Outline for a Talk, "Discerning God's Will"

George Mueller, who was a great man of God and especially known as a man of prayer, found these suggestions helpful in finding out what God's will was for him in a specific matter.

1. Surrender your will.
    a. By being willing to be led on this matter.
    b. By being willing to do the Lord's will, whatever it may be.
2. Do not depend upon feelings.
    a. Dependence upon one's feelings may lead to great delusions.
    b. Discerning God's will is based upon fact more than upon feeling.
3. Seek the Spirit's will through God's Word, the Bible.
    a. God's leading is always in conformity to His Word, the Bible.
    b. Place your faith in the Holy Spirit's ability and desire to lead you into God's truth. He is waiting and willing to do that very thing.
4. Note providential circumstances.
    a. Such as sickness, death, people's influence upon your life, financial status, and disappointments or successes in attaining personal goals.
    b. These often reveal God's will in connection with your Bible study and leading of the Holy Spirit.
5. Pray.
    a. Ask God to reveal clearly His will to you.
    b. God's will is usually revealed to us through prayer.
6. Wait.
    a. After prayer, Bible study, and reflection, you come to a fairly clear idea as to what you should do.
    b. If your mind is at peace after two or three more petitions, then you can proceed accordingly.

E. A Missionary Challenge

If there is a missionary or a missionary candidate in your community, ask him to speak on the topic, "God Is Calling You to Be a Missionary." If not, then ask your pastor or Sunday school teacher to speak on this topic.

F. Personal Decision

Close your service with an opportunity for a decision. This can take the following forms:

1. A period of silent prayer preceded by an invitation to accept God's call.
2. A decision signified by raising of the hand.
3. An invitation to confirm your decision by writing a letter to the Board of Missions, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

ABOUT THE PROGRAM HELPS

This is the third in the series of program helps on vocations. "God Is Calling You" and "God Is Working in India" present two programs challenging us to consider missions as our vocation.

These helps were prepared by one who knows our youth work and who himself has answered the call to missions. Kenneth Bauman, who was our YPU president for six years, is now serving in India.

Leola Schultz, Christian Service Chairman

God Is Working in India

PROGRAM No. 2

A. Devotions

1. Hymns: (From the Mennonite Hymnary) 325, 193
2. Scripture Reading: John 14:8-18
3. Prayer

B. Completing the Map

1. Make a large map of our mission field in India, on paper or on the blackboard, which is copied after the one found in this program help. Mark and name the main mission stations but do not put in the missionaries' names nor the types of work done on the mission stations.
2. Hand out slips with the names of the missionaries and also the slips with the type of mission work done on each station to every member present.

Examples:

Missionary slip
Miss Melva Lehman
Korba, M. P.
Teacher

Mission work slip
Leprosarium
Champa, M. P.

3. Starting with Korba ask those who have these missionaries' names to come and tack or write them on the map under the word "Korba." Then call for the mission work slips for Korba. Follow the same procedure for the other mission stations. Then ask which missionaries are missing, where they are and what they are doing.

Answer:

Miss Martha Burkhalter, Teacher, Union Biblical Seminary, Yeotmal, M. P.
Miss Lorraine Schroeder, Teacher, Woodstock High School, Mussoorie, U. P.
Miss Leona Cressman, Matron, Woodstock High School, Mussoorie, U. P.

4. Suggestions:
    a. If you want to make this a contest, divide the group into two or more divisions. Give a point for every slip put under the correct mission station, but do not put the name of the mission station on the slips.
    b. You may want to make this a travelogue entitled, "Traveling with the Andrew Shellys' and Harry Detwiler in India." After the slips have been placed at the correct mission station then read what Harry Detwiler or the Andrew Shellys' had to say about the work there. Their articles will be found in The Mennonite (Highlights of Missionary Observations, February 8, 1955) or Mennonite Weekly Review (January 13, 27; February 3 issues).

C. Projects

1. You may ask your pastor whether you could

post your map of the India mission field on the church bulletin board for a week or two.

2. You can hand back the "missionary slips" to the young people and ask them to write the missionary a letter. Be sure that you have the addresses on the slips.
3. You may want the offering to go to one of the following causes:
   a. Youth workshops and retreats in India
   b. Youth literature in India
   c. The Indian Young People's Project: to send one of their young people to the World Conference of Mennonites in Germany.

These contributions may be sent to the Board of Missions, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Mina Erian Mina, student from Cairo, Egypt, and graduate of Bethel College in the class of 1955, has recently written of "wonderful things" happening to him this summer—events which have lead him to work with Dr. Frank C. Laubach in his work of teaching the people of the world to read and write.

To quote from Mina's letter to Willis Rich of the college: "While working at the Y.M.C.A. Association grounds at Estes Park, Colorado, last summer the most wonderful thing happened to me. Dr. Frank C. Laubach was the main speaker at a conference and I had the privilege of meeting him and his family. He got to know me very well and took great interest in me and my background. He offered me a scholarship to study in summer school at Chautauqua, New York.

"I accepted and studied there for a period of six weeks his great methods of 'teaching illiterates how to read and write.' Dr. Laubach and I have worked together on making a chart in the Arabic language and I really consider it a great honor to be working with such a great man. I hope to be assisting him in the future in his mission work among the underprivileged illiterates of the world."

Mina, a popular student at Bethel, was especially active in dramatics and public speaking. He is now at Hartford, Conn., where he will engage in clinical speech and phonic training after which he will spend a year at Syracuse University.

Frank C. Laubach, missionary and world literacy expert, will be the speaker for the Mennonite Life Tenth Anniversary dinner and program, at 6 p.m., Oct. 12 in the dining hall of Bethel College, according to an announcement from the office of President D. C. Wedel.

Since 1935 Dr. Laubach has devoted his life to preparing literacy charts for the illiterate three-fifths of the world. He has been responsible for producing charts in 251 languages and dialects, in 85 countries. Author of "The Silent Billion Speak," and several devotional books, Dr. Laubach lectures and writes constantly in promoting the cause of literacy. In 1952 he was employed by the Point Four Program of the United States to help the Indian Government. In 1954 he joined World Literacy, Inc., and is now giving it his full time.

With the October issue, Mennonite Life, a quarterly illustrated magazine depicting the life of Mennonites the world over, will have completed ten years of publication. The first issue appeared January, 1946. Reflecting current interests were such articles as "The Returning Civilian Public Service Man," and "Destruction and Reconstruction of Mennonite Churches in Holland."

A member of the original magazine planning committee in 1945, Cornelius Krahn, associate professor of church history at Bethel College, was chosen editor of the new magazine, which position he still occupies. In the fall of 1947 he was joined by John F. Schmidt, who continues as assistant in editorial and circulation work.

As stated in the first issue, it is still the purpose of Mennonite Life to promote the best in the religious, social, and economic phases of Mennonite culture. Each issue of 48 pages is profusely illustrated and carries articles by Mennonite and other writers from all over the world. Various issues have been devoted to special subjects such as Mennonites in Paraguay, Mennonites in Mexico, etc.

Mennonite Life has never accepted advertising, giving its readers maximum value for the subscription price of $2.00 which has never been raised. The anniversary dinner will give opportunity for people interested in the production of such a magazine to further improve it. All who are interested in the presentation and promotion of a unique religious culture are invited to this anniversary dinner. For reservations write at once to Mennonite Life, North Newton, Kansas.

SUMMER VS AS A "NORMAL PATIENT"

The VS'ers who serve as "normal control patients" at the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Maryland, participate in the medical research on incurable diseases. They take various tests—special diets, drug injections, specified exercises—to determine the effects on the normal body. The results of these tests are assimilated, plotted, and compared with similar data on regular patients. These comparisons are used in the development of cures.

Connie Swagger is one of the many leukemia patients at the National Institutes of Health. He is the type of child that crawls into your heart and stays there. It is impossible to explain the anguish of helplessness, the longing to help cure the body of such a little child.

"As of now, science can only lengthen his life span, perhaps a few days, a few months, a year. Within this allotted time, science is continually fighting to beat death, to find a cure for an incurable.

"We who are 'normal patients' know that we are playing a vital part in this struggle—whether it is the fight against cancer, heart disease, mental illness, or leukemia. . . . As I think of the patients here at the National Institutes of Health, and especially of Dickie, I thank God for the opportunity to be a part of this tremendous research program."

"Although immediate results may not always be seen, sometimes they can. A patient friend down the hall has just gone home and is going to be able to walk again as a result of drugs developed here."

GRATITUDE OF KOREANS

The owner of the MCC headquarters house in Taegu, Korea, is visiting the US. While acknowledging a rent payment, he also wrote: "I like to express my hearty gratitude for the gracious relief work in Korea, the war-torn nation, through your Korean relief unit. Before I left Korea I saw what and how Lee and the ladies worked among our people. We were very much impressed through their humble spirit and friendly mind. . . . I admire also very much your noble spirit to live according to what the Bible teaches. . . . We Koreans need your preaching as well as your relief work. I like to see Mennonite Church in Korea in near future. I hope and believe that your gracious relief work in present time in Korea will be good preparation as well as foundation for your future mission work in the spiritually thirsty land . . . I wish to visit your headquarters in Akron before I leave this country. . . . Paul S. Myung."

SECRETARY FOR ASUNCION OFFICE

Pauline Jahnke, North Newton, Kan., left by airflight Sept. 3, for Asuncion, Paraguay, where she will serve as secretary in the MCC office there. This is her second term; she served in the same office from 1951 to 1953. Since then Pauline has worked at the Mennonite Book Store in Newton, Kan. Previously she held other secretarial positions and was dean of women at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College in Winnipeg, Can. She is a graduate of Bethel College, North Newton, Kan. Pauline is the daughter of Brother and Sister G. F. Jahnke, Olds., Alta.

NSBRO EXECUTIVE SECRETARY RESIGNS

A. Stauffer Curry, executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors for the past six years, has resigned that post effective September 1 to take up work in the headquarters office of the Church of the Brethren, Elgin, Illinois. Edgar Metzler, formerly Associate Secretary of NSBRO, will become Acting Executive Secretary for several months. The NSBRO represents the peace churches in seeking ways and means to serve persons who cannot conscientiously bear arms.

Bethel Deaconess Hospital School of Nursing

Commencement exercises for the 1955 graduating class of the Bethel Deaconess Hospital School of Nursing were held on Friday evening, September 2, at 8 p.m., in the First Mennonite Church of Newton.

Dr. Erland Waltner, professor of Bible at Bethel College, North Newton, gave the commencement address. The diplomas were presented to the new graduates by H. J. Andres, hospital administrator; Sister Hilda Mueller, director of the school, presented the school pins. The president of the medical staff, Dr. H. R. Schmidt, spoke on behalf of the medical profession.

This year the school has a total enrollment of 65 students coming from many states, and alumnae of the school are located in Canada and several foreign countries as well. The graduates are: Vera Mae Duerksen, Washington, D.C.; Helen Esther Kline, Perkasie, Pennslyvania; Justina Neufeld, Butterfield, Minnesota; Lois Jean Powlison, Los Angeles, California; Thelma Joyce Wollman, Freeman, South Dakota; Lillian Zerbe, Lustre, Montana; Martha Louise Epp and Louvina Mae Regier, Whitewater; Doris Louise Horst and Kenny Lee Schlender, Newton; June Lois Krehbiel, Halstead, Rowbina Nightingale, Peabody; Emma Jane Nyce, Pretty Prairie; Anna Belle Plenert, Hillsboro; Joan Margaret Schrag, Kingman; Esther Lorena Unruh, Galva.

The Bethel Deaconess Hospital School of Nursing enjoys a fine reputation, and each year many more applications are received than can be accepted. Sister Hilda, director, lists the following points as specific aims of the school: (1) to teach nurses to give expert bedside care; (2) to help nurses to obtain the necessary knowledge to serve the sick competently and with understanding and kindness; (3) to prepare nurses to take their part in the promotion of health and the prevention of disease; (4) to prepare nurses to meet the challenge of ever-increasing opportunities in serving the health needs of the community; (5) to provide this teaching in an environment that will develop Christian life and character; (6) to give special consideration and encouragement to applicants who are preparing for some definite field for Christian service.

Saying "Grace"

That charming English essayist, Charles Lamb, wonders why we have "grace before meal" but do not have a grace for "setting out upon a pleasant walk, for a moonlight ramble, for a friendly meeting or a solved problem." He asks why we have no "grace before books," for books are often our spiritual food.

Well, why not? I have appreciated the custom of those who have a "grace before going on a trip." I am sure all of us have experienced a genuine surge of thanksgiving for having completed some difficult, important piece of work. Why not "return thanks" right then, even if it is three o'clock in the afternoon? Why not "ask a blessing" after a garden has been planted, or a field sowed?

"I own that I am disposed to say grace upon twenty other occasions in the course of the day besides my dinner."

Another Associate Editor

David Schroeder, former pastor of the Bethel Church of Winnipeg, and student at Mennonite Biblical Seminary, Chicago, Ill., has been added to the roster of associate editors for The Mennonite.

As an associate editor, he will serve as a special contributor to The Mennonite, writing a page of editorials once or twice a year in addition to filling special assignments and keeping alert to material for The Mennonite. With the other associate editors he will serve as an advisor to the editor. This group meets about twice a year for a study of policies and ways of improving the paper.

Schroeder received his high school education in Altona, and then spent four years at Mennonite Brethren Bible College in Winnipeg, Manitoba, from which he was graduated in 1949 and also from Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, in 1951.

Previous to entering Bible college, he did his alternate service work at St. Boniface Hospital in St. Boniface, Manitoba. He has also served as director of the Mennonite Central Committee's Western Canadian Branch office for two years.

In his home church, Bethel Mission Mennonite in Winnipeg, Brother Schroeder has been an active member having served as youth leader, then as deacon, and finally as the pastor.

He has served as president of the Canadian Youth Organization and as service chairman of the Young People's Union.

OUR VISION FOR THE CHURCH

In the report of the conference on the Believers' Church, the closing portion deals with one speaker's vision of what the General Conference Mennonite Church should be like. The nine points emphasized could well form the basis for a study group discussion in the various churches.

We need some definite vision of what the Church should be like or we make little progress. Perhaps it would be well for each church board or council to take the time and effort to map out for their own particular church just what they wish that church to be and do in the next five, ten, or even twenty-five years.

In the points mentioned in the report we note that the church must not try to bypass the hard and difficult, but accept the full teachings of Jesus, difficult as they may seem at times to adapt to modern life. There must be a distinction between the world and the church. This applies not merely to a few leaders, but "all persons at all times and at all places are equally responsible to the demands of God upon His church." We have made too great a distinction between "laymen" and "leader." There must be a sense of fellowship in which all share both the sufferings and rejoicings. Discipline has its place in such a fellowship, but always it must be kept redemptive.

The statement about ministers—how alike and how different—is well put. There must be a unity in Christ, yet each serving according to the gifts given him. There needs to be a "variety of expression and a variety of understanding."

The wealth of material of this study conference that is now available in booklet form should be used by each local church for further study and sharing, that all may have a proper sense of vision for the future church.

THE FALL OF THE YEAR

Each season has its particular high points and advantages, whether it be spring with all its bursting into new life, or winter bleak and cold. Each season has its particular enthusiasts who claim that their favorite season is the most outstanding.

The fall of the year has many points in its favor. It is the time for the final ingathering of the season; the fruits are gathered and stored, the gardens give us their final gifts. It is the time when summer's heat gives way to the delightful cool of autumn; a time when leaves turn to gorgeous shades of color in their final farewell. Skies are clear and bright, the lawns take a rest. The longer evenings afford more time for reading; the nights are cool and comfortable. Preparations are made by nature and man for the robust winter ahead and there is a coziness and friendliness manifest.

So may it be in the fall of life. May there be a mellowness and maturity, a rich period of fruitage and serene peace surrounding us as we pass beyond the intense busy-ness of life's summer.

MENNONITE DISASTER SERVICE

The editor has before him a copy of the constitution of the newly-created Mennonite Disaster Service, Eastern Ohio Division. It designates that the purpose of the organization will be "to give prompt assistance to those in need because of a serious emergency . . . and to help to rehabilitate the disaster victims. This service is to be given 'In the Name of Christ' and in harmony with the principles of the Mennonite Central Committee."

One cannot help but wonder how it is that a service so important and helpful should only so recently take organized form. Are we just awakening to the possibilities of this kind of Christian service? Whatever and whoever has brought on this general organization among us across the nation, it is an excellent way of witnessing to the love we profess for all mankind.

Already in areas where such disaster service has been rendered, a strong testimony has been left with the people of the region. At first somewhat suspicious of motive, the people have quickly changed to an attitude of appreciation and praise for the work that has been done "In the Name of Christ." One of the hardest hit tornado areas this summer, that of Udall, Kansas, has received much aid from the Disaster Unit of that area. Likewise in the flooded areas in the east. The Red Cross and other organized forms of service are giving fine co-operation and recognition to the work done and open the way for members of a Unit to begin work at once.

This form of genuine Christian practical service should be rendered wherever needed, and all communities of Mennonites should be organized into such units, ready to serve at a moment's notice.

RALLY DAY

It is the custom in many churches to have a special Rally Day in the fall of the year to rally the forces of the church—particularly the Sunday school—back into more active attendance and participation. No doubt such special days and efforts have their good effects.

Many churches count the autumn season as the real beginning of the Church Year. New and enlarged plans are made for the work of the church and its departments. The pastor and his co-workers outline in rather definite form what they hope to accomplish in the year ahead. Sunday schools have their promotion day and their day of renewed interest and effort.

May each church be revived and united in a body for the common tasks that confront it. May each individual come to the assistance of those directly responsible for the planning and outlining of the work ahead. The pastor cannot carry the responsibility alone; each member should rally to his assistance and all together unite for a deeper and more active church life.

An Understanding Heart

Scripture: 1 Kings 3:5-15; Prov. 4:6-9

In Solomon's dream he heard the Lord ask him what he most desired. Solomon made a wise choice when he said, "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart." To be useful, an education must be of the heart as well as of the mind. It must touch a human cord, it must affect your feelings and your attitudes as well as your store of knowledge and the acquisition of skills if it is to justify the hopes of your parents and others who have sacrificed for you.

Despite great scientific advances, there has been no comparable advance in human understanding, in the quality of heart which makes it possible for people to get along with each other. We know how to build mammoth factories with intricate machines and assembly lines, but many times these lie idle because labor and capital fail to understand each other. We build supersonic jet planes which make it possible to reach the farthest corner of the world in a few hours, yet the world lies divided into two camps and much of it is inaccessible to us because of lack of understanding. We have discovered, liberated, and controlled the power in the atom, yet because we are unable to control human feelings and emotions we are fearful of it. We can turn a steel shaft to an accuracy of 1/1000ths of an inch, yet we cannot mold two lives together in a workable marriage union, and we face the highest divorce rate of any nation and perhaps of any period. We build magnificent church buildings with sound amplifiers, radiant heat, and all of the latest mechanical gadgets, but through misunderstandings we break up into more than two hundred different denominations, and even ecumenical movements divide into warring camps, all in the name of the Prince of Peace, who prayed that we might be one.

It seems clear that the great need of our day is to learn to understand people, a sympathetic understanding, an understanding heart. We need to understand their motives, their desires, and their needs. We need to understand the tools which can be used in bringing about agreement between individuals. "With all thy getting, get understanding."

Such understanding is based upon knowledge. First of all it is based upon a knowledge of God's will for men, and of the underlying principles with which he created man. The underlying principle of Christianity is love. This is not romantic or sentimental love. It is that deep concern for one's fellowmen, without respect to race, creed, or condition, shown by the Good Samaritan on the road to Jericho. It is the love which shows itself in following—not legalistically, but out of a deep concern—that principle which Jesus stated, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." It is the type of love discussed by Paul in the 13th chapter of I Corinthians, shown by such things as patience, kindness, rejoicing in the right, and by the absence of rudeness, arrogance, jealousy, boastfulness, selfishness, irritability, resentfulness, and the like. It is the kind of love that "bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things endures all things." That kind of love is the first step in achieving the understanding heart. Without that love you may be just a cold, selfish, domineering, uncompromising scholar contributing nothing, with all your self-vaunted wisdom, to human understanding and happiness.

Do not assume that the understanding heart is one which condones evil, which fails to differentiate between the good and the bad. Jesus dined with publicans and sinners not because He was without a conscience concerning their sin, but because He wanted to understand them and win them. "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

To be of an understanding heart takes a largeness of personality that is developed through the love which comes from Christ's spirit within us. The one who has Christian largeness of soul, a loving and understanding heart, is intolerant of evil and does his best to overcome it, but he realizes that while he hates the sin he must love and understand the sinner so that he might win him.

Understanding also requires some knowledge of the nature of man. What are man's fundamental needs, and how is he likely to respond if those fundamental needs are thwarted? Why does he act the way he does under certain conditions? Will the normal human being respond more readily to coercion or to kindness, to fear or to confidence and trust? Many cases of serious misunderstanding can be traced to an almost complete lack of knowledge of how people are likely to respond. Jesus knew how men reacted and how best to approach them, but to a large extent we disregard his methods. He knew that it would be better in the long run to love our enemies, to return blessing for cursing, that the "soft answer turneth away wrath." If in the schoolroom, the home, the church, the community, and in international relations we could but understand the fundamental nature of human reactions, if we would find it possible to put ourselves in the place of another, a long step would be taken in the direction of understanding.

Even with all of the knowledge which we can secure concerning the nature of individuals and how they respond, the motives which impel them to act, and the conditions under which they live, the will to understand is still of paramount importance. The ability and the desire to put ourselves in the place of another are determining factors in the development of an understanding heart.

An understanding heart is one of the greatest needs of our day in every activity involving human relationships. It is especially noticeable, however, in some areas, a few of which we would like to mention. First of all, it is important in the home.

President, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio

Psychologists now tell us that much of a child's personality is determined by his environment before he ever starts to school. Yet we so often fail to understand the emotional needs of the child, his need for love, consideration, and understanding. Physically he lives in a world of giants. He wants love and security and recognition in that world. He needs a chance to develop his ability to make decisions, at the same time being guarded against making too serious mistakes in those decisions. The adolescent is striving to become mature and independent, while at the same time he wants the security of the home. We so often either give him complete freedom, forgetting his need for continued guidance, or we dominate him, thus making it impossible for him to develop self-respect and the ability to make his own decisions in life. We need an understanding heart with respect to our children, in order that they might develop into mature, integrated, happy personalities.

We need greater understanding in the church, not only on the part of the minister but also on the part of every church member. We need that understanding with respect to conscientiously held differences of opinion. There are few quarrels more tragic than the church quarrel, largely because it is so inconsistent with the thing for which the church stands. If any organization should represent the loving understanding of Christ himself, it is the church. Yet far too often we have dogmatism and bitterness instead. An understanding heart does not mean lack of conviction, but it does mean a loving attempt to understand the viewpoints of those who differ from us. Here again we must put ourselves in the place of those with whom we disagree..

We need an understanding heart in the church with respect to the sinner or the backslider. So often we merely condemn, without much thought to really lifting through love. We are so ready to spread the news when a brother makes a misstep, but so reluctant to go to him, not so much with condemnation as with a real desire to be of help on the long road back. The misdeed cannot be overlooked, but the duty of the church is to help a brother back on his feet rather than to trample upon him when he has fallen. We need an understanding heart with respect to the sinner and the backslider.

The church must have an understanding heart in its mission work. Too often we go to a mission area with a feeling of superiority in all respects, thinking that we should bring them not only our Christ but also our culture and our appreciation for the superior position of the white race. While it is essential that we bring them the salvation of Christ, it is also essential that we understand their viewpoint and their position, that we have an understanding and loving heart in relation to them. Just as Jesus associated with sinners so that he might reach them, so we too should strive to understand. If he had gone to them with an air of superiority they would not have become his friends. They were his friends and he won them because he understood them and loved them.

We need an understanding heart with relation to the unfortunate and the sorrowful. Men and women are burdened with many frustrations and troubles. Everyone is in need of an understanding friend. Members of the church ought to be such friends. Artificiality is easily detected and is largely ineffective. We need a sympathy for others which grows out of a heart of Christian love and a real desire to understand. That is what constitutes real Christian sympathy.

As mentioned previously, an understanding heart is much needed in international relations. Without such understanding it is doubtful whether all of our organizations to prevent war can finally be successful. Each nation considers its culture superior to every other. Instead of understanding we substitute ready-made attitudes or racial or national superiority, stereotyping of other groups, and too readily accept the worst that the propagandists have to tell us about other nations. We need not only accurate knowledge concerning others, but also a will to understand.

An understanding heart is the plus quality in the life of an individual. It does not replace knowledge and factual information, neither is it produced by them, though they contribute to it. Understanding is a matter of attitude, purpose, and will, as well as of mind. It comes from a real desire to see things from the other person's viewpoint, to understand not only what the other person does but why he does it, and then approach him with an attitude of love.

This attitude of love of others and the desire to understand them comes from full and complete acceptance of the spirit of Christ within us. In writing to the Galatians, Paul spoke of the fruit of the Spirit as love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. These are exactly the elements that go into the development of the understanding heart. Their opposites—those things that work against understanding—enmity, strife, jealousy, anger, selfishness, dissension, and a party spirit, he spoke of as the works of the flesh. May we accept Christ fully, not merely His theology, nor only His ethics. These can both become destructive to understanding if wrongly applied. Let us accept the whole gospel of Jesus Christ, earnestly seeking His spirit to rule in our hearts and lives.

Let us pray for an understanding heart as the most valuable gift which can be given to us. God will give us the love which is a prerequisite to its attainment if we will but earnestly seek it. But while love is at the base of understanding, it will also take continued effort on our part, effort to know how men react, how they think, what motivates them, their frustrations and their troubles. We must strive to learn to know men as they are, to put ourselves in their place, to see how we would feel under similiar circumstances. Such understanding is to be sought prayerfully and energetically. It is not something which we achieve all at once, but we can grow in understanding and in love.

May we continue to grow in Christian grace, may the spirit of Christ take full possession of our lives, so that we may receive that great gift of "an understanding heart." "With all thy getting get understanding."

Glimpses Behind the Iron Curtain

Walter and Martha Dyck

For thousands of Mennonites throughout the world there is a special meaning and hope in the words of our Lord: "There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known," Matthew 10:26.

During these past weeks we have been entering homes in which conversation quite naturally begins with loved ones who "must still be alive." "No news is good news."

"No news" could also be bad news—but not to those whose longing and tender hearts continue to beat in hope. For another generation this longing will not be laid to rest. Time and time again, as we went on our way, we have commented to each other, "Hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts." And love never fails, but it "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

A no more heart-touching chapter could ever be written into the annals of Mennonite history than the one covering emotional longings and tensions coming as a result of the "Falling of the Iron Curtain." One more intriguing, and fraught with still more human interest, would be one depicting "Glimpses Behind the Iron Curtain" and the hopes that are thus revived.

We are thankful for present easing of the cold war between the Western powers and Russia. With this cooling of tension, bits of news are seeping through. Each letter might be from a loved one. And when one comes, the news spreads a heightening interest in the particular "dorf" and colony, also the conviction that some other husband, wife, son, or daughter may still be alive. We have been priviledged to witness the arrival of several such letters recently. But we have also seen the renewed disappointment when the "mail day"—which in some of the colonies is only once a week—passes with "still no news."

We would like to share three little glimpses which we have had recently.

In Neuland we were being taken from Neu-Halbstadt to Cortitza. The "Oberschultze" of the village had come to get us for a day of house calls and an evening service. On the same wagon we met Mrs. E., who, with her three children, is battling alone against the odds of pioneer life. This morning she had come in to get some more poison for ant control. They seemed particularly devasting on her side of the village street.

Our conversation with her centered in a letter—the first news of her husband in ten years—that had just come from a sister-in-law in Germany. It told that he was living with a brother in Russia, and that he had recently been converted. Now she was anxiously awaiting that letter which the sister-in-law had promised to send her.

In Volendam, in "Dorf 4," shortly before an evening meeting, we came to visit in a home in which Mrs. J., her son, and her parents were living together. In the light of a kerosene lamp we read the pocket-worn letter from her husband—the first news in ten and one-half years. It began with the words, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth," Col. 3:2. The letter radiated a strong confidence in an eventual reunion.

Of special interest was the coincidence—or was it an answer of a prayer—that this letter was dated on the day this son had yielded his heart to the Lord in one of the evangelistic services being conducted in the colony by Brother A. G. Neufeld. The letter reminded them of how the childlike prayers of this son (then no more than ten years old) had brought the father out of prison once before. The letter ended with tender greetings to his wife, to his son, and to the parents-in-law. He knew their Paraguay address. But why had the letter been carried into Canada instead of having been sent directly, they could not understand.

In Friesland we were making some calls in Village No. 7. We found Mrs. W. in possession of a letter from Canada, which told that a picture had been included. This picture also had "Peter W. of Einlage" on it. She knew this was her son. If only they might make a copy of this picture for her, also tell her more of what else they had heard about her son.

So much seems to be clear: There are still those in Russia who continue in a steadfast faith in God. There are those who believe in prayer and whose prayers are being answered. There are those who are being converted and are turning to God in repentance.

There are husbands in Russia—and wives, too—who are longing and praying for a reunion with their partners. Some, as we have also found in Paraguay, have, no doubt, given up hope and have remarried. For those who have been unable to wait, these glimpses are causing a mounting anxiety, lest that partner, whom they had—after ten long years—given up for dead, should still be waiting faithfully. It is a continuing battle between loneliness—"it is not good for man (nor woman) to be alone"—and faithfulness—"the twain shall be one flesh." Neither position is an easy one. The church will continue to either evade or begin to wrestle more energetically with this problem.

Someone will someday need to write a Mennonite counterpart to "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the story depicting the pathos, the unfulfilled yearnings of families who waited and waited in vain. But the Lord can also lead that there may be many more happy sequals in this story.

"The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Are we praying for the unfolding of God's providence which may lead to many more reunions in Canada, Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay—or even in Russia?

Is Missionary Work Worthwhile?

George Hail, our Cheyenne brother, has been called home. We had hoped that he would develop into a real leader in the church. However, the Lord's thoughts are not our thoughts.

George was baptized only two and one-half years ago at the age of 50 years. Until then he had followed the Indian religion, and especially the peyote worship. Then he became ill. Physicians could not determine the cause of his sickness. He used Indian medicine men, but of course, that did not help. Then he decided to become a Christian. He soon recovered and in due time was baptized. His wife and three daughters had been baptized before.

They were happy in their Christian faith. George said many times, "I feel good since I am baptized, it makes me feel so happy when I am in church." He took over the janitor work and took pride in having things look attractive, and was helpful in the services in many ways. The fact that his sons took little interest in the church gave him much concern.

This summer he became ill again and was hospitalized for a number of weeks. Then he was permitted to come home for a week. He was happy to be home where the members of his family could sing and pray with him. He also invited the Christians to his house repeatedly to have prayer meetings there. The Lord somehow revealed it to him that he would not recover and he told his family not to grieve after he was gone for he was going to be with the Lord.

During the last night before his death, members of the family as well as others watched by his bedside. He frequently asked them to sing and pray. At two o'clock, as he often did that, he asked the time. (As it was hard for him to speak George used the sign language mostly.) Then he counted on his fingers to seven. What did he mean? He wanted to indicate that he would be called away at seven o'clock in the morning. At seven o'clock the youngest daughter came with the Bible to read and pray. Then they sang the chorus:

> I have decided to follow Jesus, no turning back, > no turning back. If none go with me, yet still
> I'll follow, no turning back, no turning back.

The sick man joined in the singing of the song. But before it was ended he gave the following signs: Stop, I am tired, this is the end. And with that the body went to sleep peacefully and the spirit returned to Him who gave it.

This peaceful death made a deep impression on all that witnessed it, and we hope it will not be without effect with all that hear of it. Is there anything in all the world that will give a person such confidence in the face of death, besides faith in Christ our Savior?

Is missionary work worthwhile? A thousand times, yes. This may have been an extraordinary way for a person to die. However, there are many, many others in our mission fields who have found forgiveness of their sins and everlasting life through faith in Him.

Flashes of Thought

In Wonder and Awe

Walter Gering

I do not blame them; I would not have believed it myself. But it was true; I had seen it with my own eyes. For the first time in my life I was able to see. To be sure, I had enjoyed good vision all these years, but never anything like this. In one brief moment the whole universe was enlarged and I was amazed at the sight. How often I had looked at the same thing, yet had seen so little.

It was midnight; the world about us had come to rest. Only here and there could be heard the sound of some night bird. A neighboring dog, aroused at our arrival announced his protest as he wildly barked. Soon even that died away and once again we were in silence, gazing into the starry heavens.

It was when he inserted the stronger lens into the eye piece of the telescope that my eyes were really opened. For some time we had been scanning the brilliant display above us. It was the time of the year in which traces of flaming meteors could be seen streaking across the sky. The usual familiar constellations could be seen and I listened as he told of their wonders; the number of stars in the group, the light years represented in their distance from us, the traditional mythological stories. It was all so fascinating.

But the supreme moment came when he placed that powerful lens into the eye piece. We had moved our location until we could see to the very edge of the eastern horizon. There was that wondrous sight of the moon as it appeared in all of its glory. This we must see through the stronger lens. With the instrument focused upon it, I was invited to look. The sight was one that thrilled my soul. In that one moment the whole universe seemed to be transformed. There were those deep craters so plainly visible; those long ranges of mountains, shaded areas which are called the plains, the jagged edges at the end of the points. It was a thrilling sight. They would not believe when I tried to tell them later what I had seen. But it was there . . . I saw it! The words of the Psalmist took on new meaning.

> When I consider Thy heavens . . .
> What is man that Thou art mindful of him
> And the son of man that Thou visitest him?

The Study Conferenc

MA

Seeking a clearer focus on the Christian concept of the church, delegates of the General Conference Mennonite Church met in a special study conference, August 23 to 25 in Chicago. The study of these 130 delegates from the seven districts of the General Conference Mennonite Church brought them to the conviction that closer attention needs to be given to reviving the brotherhood concept of the church.

"Sinners Saved by Grace"

Setting the mood for the study of the church which was to be carried on in the light of Scripture was a paper presented by Erland Waltner, associate professor of Bible and Christian education at Bethel College, North Newton, Kansas, on "The Church in the Bible." The church was identified as the fellowship of "sinners saved by grace" who are at the same time also "the saints striving after holiness." The church is a disciplined brotherhood earnestly seeking to be pure.

The conference delegates affirmed that the church is primarily people, not buildings. Though buildings and organizations may be needed in the church, the church is primarily organism, not organization. It centers in a local visible congregation, though it is also universal. It is primarily fellowship rather than institution, a togetherness and sharing rather than ecclesiasticism and a participation in a common faith and a common life.

Church of the Great Commission

Another dimension in the understanding of the church is the fact that it is a community. It is a community not only of those who worship God and learn of Christ, but it is a community that witnesses and serves. This group proclaims in word and deed the unsearchable riches of the Lord Jesus Christ and His full salvation.

Thus the church might be called the church of the Great Commission. It is the "embodiment of the risen Christ," being in the world but not of the world yet sent into the world as God's own society to do God's special work.

The Lost Vision

Supplying background on the history of the early church and also on the history of the Anabaptist-Mennonite movement were two other studies. The first was "From the Apostolic Church to the Reformation" given by P. J. Schaefer, principal of Mennonite Collegiate Institute, Gretna, Manitoba, and second was "The Anabaptist-Mennonite and the Biblical Church" by Cornelius Krahn, associate professor of church history at Bethel College. The Mennonite Church developed from the Anabaptist movement which was the fourth great expression of the Reformation.

It was the conviction of the delegates that the Anabaptists had rediscovered the New Testament believers' church after it had been lost by the medieval church. The Anabaptists became a vigorous and dynamic biblical church giving special expression through its witnessing and evangelizing power. But like the primitive church, it lost its vitality partially through oppressive persecution and also through the spread of materialism, increase in prosperity, the relaxation in morals, and the trend toward rigid institutional forms.

This made the delegates especially aware of the fact that from each high vision there follows a pattern of decline. Resolution was expressed that a constant re-examination and repentance and rededication is the necessary exercise of the church if it is to remain in the will of God.

ALY*

The other seventeen papers studied during the course of the three-day conference at Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago were aimed at helping the pattern of the brotherhood or believers' church to emerge from an institution in which its presence has become ill-defined. Such a revival must begin in the local congregation with a rigorous self-examination of its allegiance to the lordship of Christ, placing Christ central in the life of the brotherhood. A study of Scripture needs to be made to seek God's will and the practice of a discipline which is redemptive needs to be recovered.

A Beginning in Christian Experience

The term "believers' church" suggests that there is a special emphasis on a person's Christian experience. Study of this was begun with a paper, "Standards and Practices in Admitting Members," read by John B. Graber, pastor of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church, Downey, California. A person's entrance into the church begins with a conscious acceptance of Christ as personal Savior and Lord, which is evidenced in an intimate and vital relationship to the person of Christ and which issues a saintly conduct out of which the believer can speak with conviction so he accepts the authority of the work of God and willingly studies it. He is further willing to participate in the fellowship of the church and live a life of separation from the world witnessing openly of his experiences with Christ.

Discipline and a Repentant Brotherhood

The practice of scriptural discipline was seen to be a necessary characteristic of a brotherhood church. It was recognized that the traditional pattern of discipline had too often been negative, legalistic, harsh, and unloving and was thus not contributory to the repentance and restoration of sinners. Also obvious was the fact that the practice of discipline often fails because sins of the spirit and sins of human relationships are difficult to identify. An effective pattern of discipline must develop from within a context of a repentant brotherhood. This is a fellowship conditioned by prayer and Bible study and mutual sharing; and such a program must always operate in the setting of suffering love.

The study of discipline was begun with a paper by Cornelius J. Dyck, former pastor of the Zion Mennonite Church, Elbing, Kansas, on "Discipline in the General Conference." Following this paper as was the practice with all other papers, the study conference delegates took time to give further discussions and study to this paper and a number of separate discussion groups.

Other papers contributing to the above study of the background and meaning of the brotherhood church were given by Elmer Ediger, general secretary of the Board of Christian Service, on "Statement of Our Task in This Study Conference" and by E. G. Kaufman, Bethel College professor of religion and philosophy, on "The General Conference Mennonites and the Biblical Church."

Practical Implications

A number of practical concerns issued from the discussions at this conference. Since the General Conference Mennonite Church is an association of congregations in which the freedom of the individual congregation is cherished and since no authority is given to its conference body to legislate, it was felt that there was need for a closer relationship of congregations.

Such a congregation would depend on increased fellowship and educational experiences in which district conference field workers would offer leadership and counsel. It was felt that the study conference's pattern was helpful in achieving greater unity and better understanding of others and of the will of God.

A helpful exercise in understanding the nature of the church encouraged by the delegates would be a periodic study of the church's statements of faith. This would involve a continuous study of the Bible. The conference also felt that a further study of such problems as discipline, divorce and remarriage, Christian experience, nurture, and evangelism would also be helpful.

The conference gave special attention to such practical problems as church polity, mission work, inter-Mennonite relations, inter-denominational relations, the ministry, and church life. These studies were developed through presentations made by Donovan E. Smucker, associate professor of Biblical theology and Christian ethics at Mennonite Biblical Seminary; R. L. Hartzler, field secretary for the Central Conference; Lloyd L. Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College; P. R. Harder, secretary of the Canadian District Conference; Andrew R. Shelly, Friesen, president of Canadian Mennonite Bible College, Winnipeg, Manitoba; A. H. Schultz, Gospel Mennonite Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; and Elmer Friesen, pastor of the Grace Mennonite Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania.

Vision of the Believers' Church

The conference sessions were closed with an address by S. F. Pannabecker, president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, who spoke on "My Vision for the General Conference Mennonite Church." He saw the Mennonite Church as one which is prepared in a new way for the application of its old faith to current conditions.

It would be a church which has an appreciation for its historic foundations. Its faith is not based on physical descent, custom, or even on doctrine but on that life that made the biblical Anabaptists true followers of Christ. Such a church has a loyalty and zeal that wills to lose its life that it might be saved.

Pannabecker's vision of the future General Conference Church indicated nine different phases.

1) A church that does not avoid the acceptance of standards that are apparently impossible of attainment, such as the "hard sayings" of Jesus including the Sermon on the Mount.

2) It has a clear recognition of the miraculous nature of the Christian life, both in its inception and in its daily continuation.

3) It has a sense of distinction between the church and the world or between the believer's life and the self-life.

4) This church has a basic understanding of the origin and existence of the church in the will of God.

5) The response of this church is in the belief that all persons at all times and at all places are equally and fully responsible to the demand of God upon His church. Each person is thus a herald of the kingdom.

6) In such a church the sense of fellowship receives greater emphasis and its deepest understanding. When one suffers all suffer. The task of one is the task of all. This fellowship has a discipline which includes teaching, training, and mutual admonition. Instead of being punitive, it becomes under the blessing of the Spirit, redemptive.

7) The ministers of this church must be alike in their zeal and consecration for Christ, but in no other quality need they be alike for each has varying gifts to offer in the service of Christ. Ministers need to be united in the spirit of exhibiting a variety of expressions and a variety of understanding. The ministry of a church needs to be adequately trained and needs to understand and support the Conference work and institutions.

8) Such a church needs to give adequate recognition to ecumenical relations. The Mennonite Church has a proper relation to the church as a whole.

9) A complete vision of the church does not see the believers' church as a perfect or completed fellowship. The Mennonite Church does not have a corner on truth but it has a corner of truth.

The conference delegates prepared a letter to be sent to each congregation of the General Conference. In this they called upon their fellow members to engage in a self-examination program which would include individuals and congregations in a spirit of willingness to yield to the leading of the Holy Spirit. They further encouraged a renewed and systematic study of the Scriptures to accept the demands which Christ makes upon His church. Finally, the group also encouraged each congregation to give careful consideration to the body of material which was studied by the group at this study conference.

A full report of the Study Conference on the Believers' Church including all papers as well as the findings, summaries of discussions, and other material which resulted from this study is available in booklet form. This will be published by the General Conference Mennonite Church, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, for $1.50 per copy.

Peace Through Power

MIDST ALL THE CONFUSION, anxiety and restlessness found among the people of our modern world, we find one common desire which describes their feelings. This one word heard on the lips of every race and tongue is "Peace."

For centuries, even before the birth of Christ, people wanted the satisfaction of knowing they were at peace with all their neighbor nations. But seemingly man has never experienced that security; at least not for any length of time.

The question that arises in my mind, and perhaps in yours also is "Why?" Why all this confusion? Why the bitter feelings? Why do people seemingly desire peace and yet think they will get it by fighting?

We know that peace cannot merely come by saying, "Now we're going to be peaceful."

It has to begin in the hearts and minds of the men and women of our nations. And then as this feeling is created in individuals, it needs to be organized and united, so as to become more concrete. The individual himself often cannot accomplish much, but where there is a group, earnestly united, there is a good chance of something being done, for "in unity there is strength."

I feel our country has made some praiseworthy efforts in the way of peaceful world organizations. Groups such as the PAX men who pay their passage to foreign countries, and then work for almost nothing to help build up the devastated areas, are doing much to prove that there are peace-loving people in our country.

Then, too, Brethren Volunteer Service is directing a program in which people give cattle to refugee families in war-torn countries. The CARE packages and similar projects help build a better and more peaceful world.

Lastly, I mention the efforts of the United Nations. True, some of their attempts have failed, but it indeed has proved to be a noble effort on the part of our nations toward bringing us closer together and showing that we can work together.

But is this the answer? Are man's ideas and accomplishments going to bring the desired results? A chorus states, "Christ is the answer to all of our problems."

True; but man has to realize this. He must realize his strength is not sufficient. He must realize the Higher Power is needed, a power greater than any bomb! And even though man may realize this, until he is willing to accept and seek this power, he will continue in his peaceless state.

It is within our own selves that we must first deal. Are you giving God His rightful place in your life? Are you grasping every opportunity for peaceful living in your home? This is our country, a free America. And we have every privilege to obtain peace in our hearts.

So let us face and accept the challenge of the hour by allowing Christ, the Prince of Peace to become Master of our souls.

PENCIL POINTS

"Well, I'm only going one way."

That's a bright remark I've never got around to using. Probably wouldn't have the nerve if the occasion presented itself.

For it is especially designed for the time when you are caught driving down a one way street in the wrong direction. Since such a transgression could bring me serious injury it is good that I have been frustrated until now.

But I did see someone making this serious mistake one day. Apparently he was a new man in town for he headed south on a street which was intended for northbound motorists only.

He had driven no more than ten yards before he met an angry wall of hostility. His fellow autoists honked, pedestrians stared, children hollered, dogs barked, and cats arched their backs at this hapless creature who ventured to go in a direction no one had tried before.

After a dozen frantic voices had brought him to a halt with, "Hey, this is a one way street," he might have used my clever rejoinder. But he was too confused and I was too far away.

Many, many folks are living careless lives so that the road of life seems like a one way street. It really isn't. But when some brave soul tries to follow Christ he is looked upon as violating the one way street law of the majority, because he is living the Christian life.

But he could proudly say, in fact, he ought to say, while others rush by in confused disorder, "I'm only going one way."

I could prove God statistically. Take the human body alone—the chance that all the functions of the individual would just happen is a statistical monstrosity.

IDEA OF THE MONTH

Hands at Work

The problem of raising money faces many youth groups. Offerings, of course, can be taken, but offerings are needed for many causes. And sometimes folks feel that their cash gifts are limited.

A method used by the Western District Young People's Fellowship was to sponsor a district-wide workday and work week. On the selected day members of the youth groups found jobs that needed to be done and then turned their earnings over to the local fellowship for the selected project.

One inter-church fellowship in Kansas followed through on the district's suggestion and raised over $700.00 for the Missionary Education Fund of the Young People's Union. The five churches that are members of this group are Emmaus, Grace Hill, Elbing, Burns, and Walton.

On their workday the youth group of the Eden Mennonite Church of Moundridge, Kansas, was able to raise $345.50 for the support of their district union. With the gifts received from other societies the Western District Fellowship received $548.46 for its work.

Most of these workday programs were held during the first week in June, the time suggested by the district fellowship. A simultaneous approach by all societies generates some friendly competition. But more important than that it gives a sense of fellowship because it is a program in which many young people are taking part at the same time.

Many of the folks who had regular jobs took the earnings for the day and contributed them to the project. Others took special jobs helping farmers, neighbors, and parents on a project of cleaning, building or doing some other thing that had long been neglected.

Important to the success of such a venture is the active interest of the leadership of the youth group. A pastor or sponsor might help to give some "push." The group should appoint someone to serve as an employment bureau. He could see that there are jobs for everyone.

In such a project you will find that there are many people who have jobs that need to be done. Some of them may be so small that no one had thought of hiring someone to do them. Perhaps they never got done because there were no willing hands to do them. A youth fellowship can supply the hands and promote the work of the church at the same time.

A fitting climax for such a project is a dedication service when each person places his offering on an altar table. The prayer of dedication helps to indicate that this work was done for God.

13 Young People Accept the Challenge

From northeastern Canada to Mississippi, from New York to California—13 Mennonite young people scattered out to begin Voluntary Service with MCC units on August 19.

Alison Deckert, Richey, Mont., and Helen Loewen, Gretna, Man., will teach with the Grenfell Associates in northeastern Canada. Paul and Maureen Friesen, Elbing, Kan., and Doris Zook, Strasburg, Pa., joined the migrant unit at Coalinga, Calif. Warren Goosen, Henderson, Neb., will direct recreation for the colored children at the Camp Landon, Gulfport, Miss., community project.

Delores Martin, Castorland, N. Y., will serve as a secretary at Boys Village, Smithville, Ohio; Norma Unruh, Hillsboro, Kan., as a secretary at Wiltwyck School for Delinquent Boys, Esopus, N.Y. Rosemary Claassen, Newton, Kan., joined the staff at the Baptist Children's Home at Bethesda, Md.

Two VS'ers will serve in the MCC mental hospitals: Helen Dietzel, Pigeon, Mich., will do psychiatric nursing at Prairie View, Newton, Kan., and Betty Jo Voran, Pretty Prairie, Kan., will serve as psychiatric aid at Brook Lane Farm near Hagerstown, Md.

Carl Kroeker, Merced, Calif., joined the group of I-W men serving as normal control patients at the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md. Helen Ens, Winkler, Man., will go to Mexico to teach school among the Mennonites near Cuauhtemoc, Chihuahua.

Following a three-week orientation school at MCC headquarters in Akron, Pa., a consecration service was held for these young people as they entered service. "VS is like a relay race," Gordon Dyck, assistant director of VS pointed out. "Those in VS before you have run their distance well. But now they hand the baton to you. Winning the race now depends on you! If you run half-heartedly, the man who picks up the baton after you will be behind. I dare you all by the help of God to broaden the gap between God's relay team and the team of our opponent."

These 13 young people have accepted the challenge.

"The Christian College will be, therefore, a community existing around a group of learners, both teachers and students, who confess Jesus Christ as their Savior and Lord. They are engaged in a serious search for the knowledge of God and His universe and His demand upon life. . . ."

BOOK NOTES

Barrel Full of Hints

TEEN-AGE ETIQUETTE by Grace Ramquist, 85 pp. Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan, 1953, $1.00.

Attention all teen-agers! Here is a small book at a low price with a barrel full of helps and hints for those "What do I do now?" times.

Grace Ramquist has wisely selected the most frequently faced problems of teen-agers and answered them in an easily read book for both boys and girls.

The book is divided into fourteen chapters, each one given to specific rules of etiquette. The author has not merely stated the rules for conduct, but she has also woven humorous true-to-life examples of poor conduct into the chapters.

Author of "Skits and Readings for Church and School," Miss Ramquist has presented a positive Christian message by blending related Scripture passages with the various subjects discussed in her book on etiquette. For example, "Good understanding giveth favour," Proverbs 13:15, introduces the chapter entitled These Necessary Niceties; and "A word spoken in due season, how good it is," Proverbs 15:23, the chapter on Talk Fests.

If you're one of those between twelve and twenty-year-olds and have the usual teen-age problems ranging from introductions to awkward hands, clumsy feet to telephone conversations, and even your first date, you'll discover your problems are answered in this easy-reference book.

MEN WANTED

New opportunities for a fellow to make good use of his two years of required service for his country continue to grow.

A list of I-W opportunities was sent to each pastor just recently. These sheets listed over forty institutions in 19 states and overseas that need workers right now.

At Denver, Colorado, where a large number of Mennonite men have done service and are still serving there are openings for orderlies, attendants, laboratory workers, and a carpenter, as well as volunteers for the Fitzsimmons's Nutritional Experiment.

Other places where there are jobs available are Evanston, Illinois; Topeka, Kansas; and Ann Arbor, Michigan. At all of these places a number of I-W's are already doing second-mile work as their alternative to military service.

Besides this the Congo Inland Mission needs ten dedicated men to assist in the maintenance and work of our mission stations in the Belgian Congo.

Information on these projects and many others and the places where to apply can be secured from your minister.

BOYS FARM DEDICATED

Brother E. J. Swalm, Duntroon, Ont., bishop in the Brethren in Christ Church, gave the dedicatory message at the opening of the Ailsa Craig Boys Farm on Sept. 10. Brother Edward Snyder, MCC director in Waterloo, Ont., accepted the keys to the buildings from the pastor of the Ailsa Craig Conservative Amish congregation.

The farm, established as a home and training school for homeless, neglected and delinquent boys was originally the dream of this congregation at Ailsa Craig. The farm was turned over to the MCC for further development and the MCC in turn has placed the main responsibility in the hands of the Conference of Historic Peace Churches.

Five boys have already been accepted at the farm; the eventual capacity will be 20. Brother Ave Schmitt, recently graduated from the Goshen College Biblical Seminary, Goshen, Ind., will be Acting Director of the Farm. This is the first home for delinquents which MCC has sponsored.

MEN NEEDED FOR GENERAL HOSPITAL UNIT

1-W men interested in hospital work have a rare opportunity to combine service with this interest in the Portland, Maine, General Hospital VS unit.

When the shortage of nurses became acute in the Portland Hospital, the administration decided that 1-W men could be trained quickly to learn some technical procedures thus releasing nurses for general floor duty. This fall there are openings here for four men: orderlies for accident, anesthesia, urology, and operating rooms.

Some 1-W's replace the registered nurses in the operating room after training in operating room procedures.

The unit at Portland lives in a three-story house with commodius living areas on the main floor and bedrooms on the second and third. There is also opportunity here for one or two 1-W wives to do the housekeeping for the unit.

In addition to work at the hospital, the 1-W men conduct Bible classes on Saturday for children in the neighborhood. This past spring a quartet toured Mennonite churches from Souderton, Pa., to Chicago, Ill. And the 1-W softball team won the city trophy for good sportsmanship.

If you are interested in service in this unit, you may contact the Voluntary Service Office at Akron, Pa., before the Nov. 1 orientation school.

GRANTED US CITIZENSHIP

Mrs. Evangeline Neuenschwander, Lebanon, Oregon, was naturalized as a US citizen on January 3, in Oregon. Sister Neuenschwander, a former MCC relief worker in Europe and Paraguay, was from Canada. Concerning her naturalization process she states: "I had a very fine examiner and also had no difficulties in court in taking my position as a conscientious objector."

Each case where a conscientious objector successfully completes naturalization adds to the precedents which mean so much in legal procedures.

FROM KOREA

Helen Tieszen, MCC worker on loan to Christian Children's Fund in Korea, helps to train personnel for work in native children's homes. Recently she helped to conduct her first three-week training course in child care for workers in Korean orphanages.

Forty-one students from 32 institutions were enrolled in this course held at Sae Dul Won, Pusan, one of the institutions supported by Christian Children's Fund. Helen reports that they tried first of all to help the students develop the basic attitudes of concern and love for the children. "Rules" for care are easily forgotten if there is no interest in the child. Each student was assigned one child at the Sae Dul Won Home for her observation on the playground, in the dining hall and in demonstration groups.

Some of the materials used in the demonstration groups had been developed by the Mennonite Vocational School for Orphans at Kyong San.

"Perhaps the most rewarding moment of the training course was a conversation overheard. In discussing the course several girls said they had never before learned what it really means to take an interest in the child. Previously their superintendents had returned from conferences and told them to take more interest in the children. 'But,' they said, 'we never understood what that meant.' "

This is the first of such training courses, but the workers hope to have others in the future.

Helen Tieszen is from Marion, S. D., and is a member of the General Conference Salem-Zion Church at Freeman, S. D.

There will be a new era in any person's life when he accepts the spiritual nature of money.

It is good to have money, and the things money can buy, and it is vital that we check up and make sure we have not lost the things that money can not buy.

First Church, Philadelphia, Pa.: One hundred and four children were reached through our daily vacation Bible school, which was held in August. Men-O-Lan Retreats, which were under the direction of Pastor Bedsworth, attracted many of our city folks. Our congregation is celebrating its 90th anniversary from October 16th to 23rd, with a week of special services, starting with Homecoming Sunday and ending with a banquet, Saturday night, and the following day, dedication of the major renovations, which include new rest room, new pews and carpet. Andrew Neuenschwander, former pastor of the church, will be the guest speaker. Friends and former members are invited to join in this week of fellowship and praise to God for His faithfulness. "Opportunities of Working Among the Colored People," was the topic discussed by Erwin Wedel and Pastor Bedsworth at the Quarterly Conference of our district. Laurence Burkhalter and Miss Ruth Bixel gave us a violin and organ recital in the St John church in behalf of the Mennonite Memorial Home. Dr. Walter Schutz preached for us Aug. 14. Aug. 27, 28, the YPU of Middle District had an Ohio-Indiana Retreat at Bluffton College campus. Theme: "Jesus Calls Youth." Attendance was good. Harry M. Detwiler gave us a talk and showed pictures of his trip to Japan and Formosa. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Crow, a daughter, Shiela Kay; to Mr. and Mrs. Donald Basinger a daughter, Debra Jean, and to Mr. and Mrs. Gene Suter, a daughter, Alice Jean. Andrew Shelly solicited our church for the Seminary. In August we had guest teachers for the adult and young people's Sunday school classes. Twenty-five of our young people attended retreat at Friedenswald. During July our church had weekly Bible study at the Mennonite Memorial Home. July 10 our church attended farewell services for Vernon Sprungers at the Ebenezer Church. Our pastor and Mrs. Bohn took their vacation trip in August to Kansas. We were well taken care of but are glad to see them back again.—Corr.

—First Church, Madrid, Neb.: On May 22, Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Huebert from the Mennonite Community Church, Fresno, California, were with us in our Sunday morning worship services. They were visiting with their children and close relatives and friends of this community. They speak most highly of the work of Peter J. Ediger who helped organize the church in Fresno, and is now their pastor. P. E. Janzens from Caldwell, Idaho, still members of this church, stopped over on May 22 to visit with her mother and friends of Madrid, enroute to Bethel College, North Newton, Kan., where their daughter Janice was graduating last spring. Daily vacation Bible school was held in our church from May 20 to June 3, and we were using Scripture Press material. The Methodist Church joined our group in the work and we had 65 pupils, divided into 4 classes. The teachers were Pastor Norman Dalke, Mrs. Marian Doerksen, Mrs. Connie Michels, and Richard Henderson. Rev. and Mrs. John Esau and son Johnny surprised us with a visit July 29 on their way to Omaha, where they are making their home now. They stayed with us over the week end visiting all the families of this church and had charge of the Sunday morning worship service. In the evening we have joint services with the M. B. church where Rev. Esau then served with an evangelistic message. Brother Jakob Duerksen of Paraguay, South America, was with us Friday, August 12, and in an evening service he told us about the work and condition of the Mennonite people in South America.—P. A. An Old Story— With a Brand New Ending

Gladys J. Peterson

New York police, called by neighbors, broke into a dreary tenement a few months ago to find a sad and sordid spectacle—one that is no longer news in slum-infested regions. A dilapidated stove stood in the single room with its jets dispensing death. Empty whisky bottles cluttered a dirty table. And on the rumpled bed slumped two motionless figures.

The woman, Virginia Morton, 42, was already dead, but police were able to revive Francis R. Noble, 39, who told them a story of two lives slipping toward destitution. They had lost their jobs, were unable to find new ones, had spent all their money, and were about to be put out of the drab tenement room. They had no place to go, no money, no hope, nothing to live for.

They drank themselves into a semi-stupor before making a suicide pact. He was to strangle her and then turn on the gas jets. He remembered that she agreed to this and told him to hurry and get it over with. When he awakened he found her dead and turned on the gas.

However, when he was brought to court amazing new edidence was introduced. An autopsy had revealed that Miss Morton had died of a heart attack. The body bore no signs of strangulation. Evidently Noble had never brought himself to commit the deed he thought he had done. He was released . . . a free man.

"I'm free! I'm free!" he wept as he made his way out of the courtroom and into the crowded street.

It was a new and unexpected ending to an old story. After thinking himself a murderer bound for prison, Francis Noble was now free. But WAS he free? The Bible tells us that "the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord . . . and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins," Proverbs 5:21-22. This means that no man is really free, for "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God," Romans 3:23.

However, the sinner is held by sin's cords only for as long as he wishes; for the moment he genuinely repents and receives Christ as Savior, the God Who sees all and knows all is ready to break the shackles and set him free. And if He "therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," John 8:36!

Francis Noble's drink-blurred memory was defective. God's memory is never defective; but to those who place their faith in the atoning sacrifices offered by His beloved Son He had promised "their sins and iniquities will I remember no more," Hebrews 10:17.

For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations.

The Reader Says—

A PLEA FOR FREEDOM OF INTERPRETATION

I am one who believes in a strange doctrine. Not so long ago I was told that it was dangerous. Does it mean that some of our church leaders want to dictate to me what I shall not believe?

God's Spirit dwells in me as He does in other Christians. Why can't some spiritual leaders trust me and others to be taught the meaning of the Bible by the indwelling Spirit?

I am one of those who holds to the doctrine called "Eternal Security." Before God I can say that there is no malice in my heart toward those who disagree or call it strange, dangerous, or something to be dropped.

My background, affiliation, and present place of service is all Mennonite. Please, may I continue to hold this view and still be a Mennonite? May I continue to draw comfort and incentive to holy living and service from Jesus' words that "No man can pluck them out of My Father's hands"?

Please, may I interpret the Bible as the Spirit teaches me without someone saying, "You shouldn't believe this"?

MILLIONS WILL READ THE BIBLE TOGETHER

Led by citizens of the United States, people in over forty countries will follow the 12th annual observance of World-wide Bible Reading, sponsored each year by the American Bible Society.

Starting Thanksgiving Day, November 24, and continuing through Christmas, thousands of families will be reading identical passages of Scripture from the greatest chapters in the Bible. Lists of the passages, in convenient bookmark form, are provided by the American Bible Society, free of charge, to all who will use them. Again this year the Society has prepared the passages in Braille so that sightless people may join with others in following the readings.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower, who is honorary chairman of a national sponsoring committee of laymen, has issued a strong endorsement of the observance, as follows:

"Please accept my best wishes for the greatest possible success for this year's World-wide Bible Reading Campaign, to take place between Thanksgiving and Christmas. In this period between the two holidays, when Americans give thanks for their blessings and renew their hopes for a just and lasting peace in the world, all of us, of whatever religious belief, may well turn to the Bible for guidance and inspiration for the tasks which lie ahead. I hope that many individuals and many families will do so, and that they will continue this practice in the New Year, joined by men and women of faith and good will in other lands."

FORGE AND ANVIL EXPERIENCES

As the blacksmith plunges his irons into the fire in order that he may shape them into instruments of usefulness on the anvil, so many a life comes in contact with the fires of discipline and the anvil of correction that it may become a better instrument in the hands of the Master-craftsman.

Could the iron speak when experiencing the forge and anvil, it no doubt would remonstrate seriously about this rigid treatment—at least if it were something like humans. For it is so easy to cry out "why" in the fires of testing and discipline, and so easy to complain at the treatment of the hammer and anvil. Yet without some such occasional experiences, we might easily become dulled, useless instruments, not equal to the world's needs and tasks.

If, when subjected to such forge and anvil experiences, we can but trust the Master-craftsman and have faith that He knows what He wishes to make of us, we would submit to these crucial molding processes with better grace. For if we resist and rebel against the difficult or tragic experiences of life, we may not only thwart the Master's plan for stronger characters which He is able to forge from such experiences, but we make ourselves miserable and useless in His hand. The tragedy masters us instead of we mastering the tragic experience. Herein is grave danger.

The forge and anvil have their place in developing stronger, better-tempered, more useful characters. When they do come, may we yield to the Master-designer and pray that we might be submissive in the severe process of becoming more serviceable instruments in His hands. Thank God that life is not all "flowery beds of ease."

UNDERLOADED LAYMEN

We hear much about overloaded ministers, or perhaps overloaded leaders, but we should give more serious thought to the underloaded laymen—to those individuals who, for one reason or another, are given no share at all in the active work of the church. Doubtless in any church there are such and in some churches certainly a large number.

If the church is to function properly, every member should have an active part and responsibility. There are diversities of gifts, but one body. Sometimes inactive members absolutely refuse to have any part in the activities of a church, but in far more cases the average layman would be glad for some part if along the line of his ability. There are certainly many abilities and undiscovered talents which could be put to good use. A good slogan for any church might well be "Some definite assignment for every member, old and young."

This takes time and careful planning. The minister with his council or board should study each individual member and consider his talents and abilities. Then, also, a list should be made of all the things the church might and should be doing. Then the person should be matched to the task best suited.

This may be over-simplification. Some may not care to accept assignments made. Perhaps the minister needs first a series of sermons on such themes as "to every man his work," "co-workers together with God," etc. The various possibilities of the church's activities could be outlined and interest created in trying to meet those needs. When the leader can inspire in the people a "mind to work" he has taken a great step toward supplying every member with an appropriate task and responsibility.

What about the older people who are no longer equal to strenuous work? Since they have much time on their hands, could they not be given a definite prayer list from time to time and asked to pray for such projects or persons and for the work of the church in general? Many have had much experience in living; perhaps they could share this with others. Some could still do visiting with the sick and shut-ins. Surely some use should be made of their many years of living.

The young people and even the children will usually be quick to respond to some challenging assignment. Most of them are eager to be a useful part of the church fellowship.

If the possibilities of a church in a community are carefully reviewed and outlined, there should easily be enough tasks to go around for every member to have a definite assignment, even in our larger churches. When the load is more evenly distributed it can be borne much more easily and more work can be accomplished. Ministers, to put new life into your church, work out some plan for every member to have a definite responsibility in the work of God.

STUDY THE STORY

Beginning with October the International Sunday School Lessons for the next six months will be a study of Luke's story of our Lord. Here is a splendid opportunity for all of us to make a thorough, detailed study of Luke's gospel as he records the Life of Christ. A daily reading from this interesting gospel; selecting choice passages; memorizing large portions; learning the contents of each of the twenty-four chapters—all this will be of real value to the Christian.

Reading from as many different versions as may be available may throw new light on many passages. Reading from different languages, where one is able to do so, is also a great help. For those who are able, reading from the original Greek will be rewarding.

May we not miss this chance for a devotional study of the gospel according to St. Luke. Pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and teachers can urge the careful reading and study, and at the end of six months our spiritual lives should be richer for having become better acquainted with our Lord.

Do Right by Your Speakers

ROLAND E. WOLSELEY*

A theological schoolteacher was invited, one day last summer, to preach two months later in a city 300 miles away. He accepted, proposed two possible subjects, marked the date on his calendar, and awaited further instructions.

The weeks passed but all he heard from the other city was a letter from a friend whom he had told of the invitation. The friend suggested that he stay at the friend's home if the church did not insist upon another arrangement. The church didn't; in fact it remained completely silent. So the theolog, trusting that he was still wanted, made the journey. He would be content merely to visit the friend, but it was an expense he did not plan to make at the time.

When he arrived he learned that one of his subjects had been announced locally and that he was expected by the church. His exact part in the service he did not know until a few minutes before he joined the processional. No attention was paid to him by the people who had invited him either before or after the service.

Furthermore, there were errors in the bulletin in the paragraph referring to his career. These had to be corrected verbally by the pastor during the service. Casually the host preacher apologized for not having sent the promised follow-up letter giving further instructions, although he had a private secretary. Had it not been for the friend this would have been a dull and lonely experience for the teacher, whose lodging and meals were evidently of no concern to his ministerial host.

This incident is an example of how to do wrong by a speaker. It did not happen to me, but in two decades of speaking before various church groups similar experiences have been mine. Therefore, I want to suggest a check-list of points for program chairmen and other church people responsible for speakers.

No one denomination is more of a transgressor than any other. Unsystematic, careless folk are to be found in all churches, just as methodical and considerate ones usually are around. Nor are church people any more in need of such a check-list than other humans.

Let us say that you are the program chairman of the Women's Guild, the Men's Club, or whatever group it is you serve. Do you usually do your best especially for the speaker who may be one of those good people who want to do their bits for the cause by speaking without making a charge? To make sure, examine this list.

1. Be certain to clarify in writing just what you expect of him or her (and let's use him from now on for brevity's sake). This memorandum should indicate which group he is to address, exactly what time he is to speak, precisely how long he may have and whether there will be time for questions. Also ask for a subject title and then use it. If you made the date months in advance, and get out a yearbook that lists his and other programs, send him a copy.

2. Find out about your speaker. If you don't see him listed in a national, regional, or professional Who's Who, ask him to send you a brief biographical sketch, emphasizing those points in his career which are pertinent to his appearance before your group (if he's speaking about Africa and has written a book about that country, get the facts on that; get the book, if you can, for display). If the local press or your own parish publications can use it, also get a glossy photograph of him.

3. See if he has some special needs as a speaker. Maybe he wants to mount a map, use a blackboard, or exhibit materials on a table. In your first letter or a subsequent one inquire about this. The older the speaker the more problems he may have. He may wear bifocals and require a podium or stand on which to rest notes. He may need a glass of water. Be sure the microphone or recorder is in good working order.

4. Make the financial arrangements clear. You can't do this if your group has no policy. Most church organizations do not and cannot pay fees except on extraordinary occasions. There ought to be a policy, something like this: 1. Pay speakers their expenses and at least a moderate fee if they make their living mainly from public speaking or if such earnings are clearly important as supplementary income to a salary that is far too small. 2. Pay expenses to those who do not need a fee but should not be expected to make long trips at their own expense. 3. Pay nothing to persons who are being sent by other organizations to publicize them or who have a duty to do the speaking and are not in need of either expenses or fee. With speakers from the local community this situation offers few problems; it applies chiefly to out-of-town speakers. Always let the speaker know your policy in advance. And then live up to it. Pay him promptly; if possible before he returns home. I know several ministers who were promised fees (and they deserved them) and had heavy expenses for the trips but the committees concerned forgot to send the checks; in two instances these men were fearful of being considered mercenary if they called attention to the slip, so they never were paid even for their outlay.

5. Don't overlook the speaker's wife or husband. Whatever you intend to do about the other member of the family, do it; leave no mystery. Be clear about whether he or she is expected, especially if the speaker is from your own community. Sometimes the program chairman doesn't know if the speaker is married, but an inquiry about his desire to bring some other member of the family will soon get the answer.

6. Publicize the event properly. If you have obtained the advance information accurately such publicizing consists primarily of sending news stories to the local papers, radio stations, and your own church publications (to the latter especially about events of considerable importance). Try to interest the journalistic media not only in announcing the event but also in covering (i.e., reporting) it afterwards. If there is hope of this, ask your speaker for a 300-word abstract of his speech and make enough copies for all publications and stations.

7. Meet the speaker at the station, airport, or bus terminal. If he's coming by car, be sure he knows where to go. Greet him with a car at the terminal and take him where he is to stay. Be sure to tell him in advance that he is to be met and how to identify you.

8. Leave him alone for awhile before his duties begin. Give him a chance to change clothes, rest, go over his notes, or assemble his exhibits. Don't sandwich in other duties without consulting him well in advance.

9. Make sure he gets his meals. Don't expect him to rush from the terminal to someone's house to have a hurried lunch or dinner before speaking. He may wish to eat lightly or not at all before giving his talk. Consult him; if he prefers to eat at his hotel let him.

10. Check the day of his arrival if all is in readiness at the hotel or some member's home where he is to stay. Make certain that the hotel provides adequate and clean facilities. Church speakers sometimes are put in hostels or dormitories; these can be seriously lacking in bathroom and toilet facilities and should be checked for the presence of linens, soap, towels, and other items.

11. Introduce him properly. The time has come for him to speak. Whoever is to introduce him should have a copy of his biographical sketch and should abstract the main points that will interest the audience and show the speaker's authority to deal with his subject. This step in treating speakers right is one of the most badly handled, in my experience. It hardly need be said, that the too wordy introducer is just as bad. The stock example of the introducer who takes almost as much time as the speaker is no exaggeration.

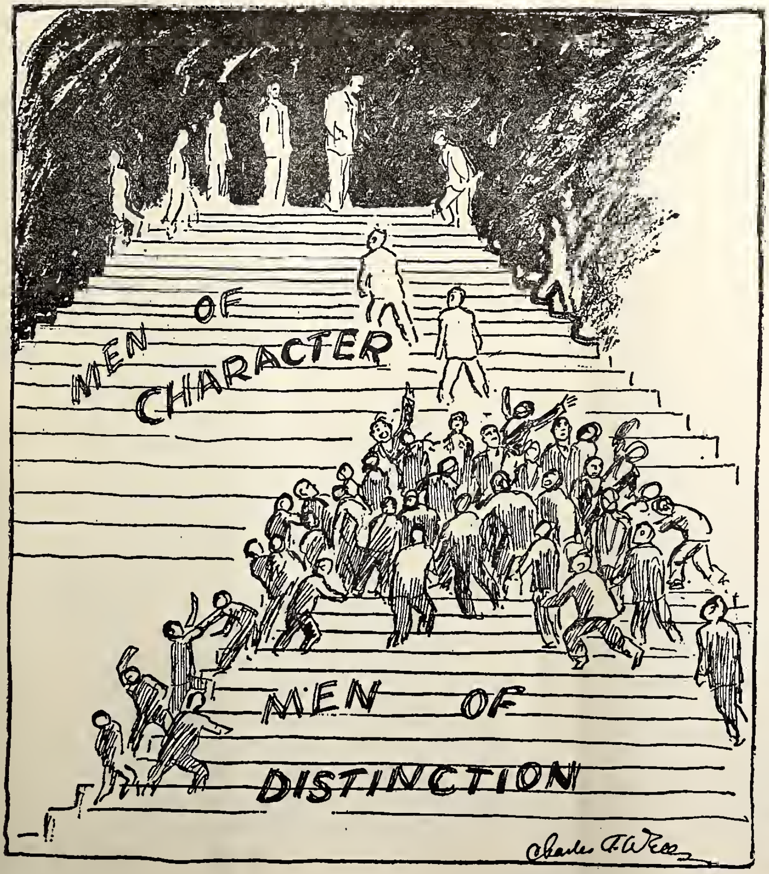
Distinction Without Character



Charles A. Wells

Everybody wants to be "somebody," get a bigger car, bigger house, belong to the right social set or club. We have put the accent on "distinction"—and forgotten character. Little men—who have neglected character—have then failed miserably because they achieved distinction without character. This is not only true in government circles. In the next ten years, as the big boom ends, we may see many business failures because management built an impressive profit structure and forgot integrity. When survival becomes the issue, integrity and character are deciding factors for men or institutions. There can be no real distinction without character, and character is the fruit of spiritual growth.

Mine Eyes Have Seen

GARY STENSON*

Since living in the big city of Chicago, my eyes have been opened to many things that I never knew existed. I have seen these things and they prove problems with which the Christian should cope. I do not have a solution, but perhaps you can form a solution of your own. I shall tell you some of the things I have seen and some of my thoughts concerning them.

I have seen children playing in the streets and on the sidewalks because of lack of playgrounds. I've seen children throwing a tennis ball against a building and calling that a ball game. One will stand on the sidewalk and throw the ball against the building and another will try to catch it without fumbling it. Three good catches and they change places. The girls play hopscotch and sometimes they, too, play this ball game. Some children had nothing else to do one evening, so they wrecked a wooden crate in which perhaps a stove or wash-machine had been shipped. Is this the way children should be brought up? Is this the reason for the teen-age gangs in the big cities? Why do parents allow this sort of thing to happen? I feel it is neglect on the parents' part. They are worried about making a good living and not on raising children. Sure, some parents do all in their power to raise their children, and do a very good job of it, but the average for these is very low.

I've seen young girls, perhaps nineteen to twenty-nine years old, walking the the streets with men who could well be old enough to be their fathers, yet they were clinging to them not as fathers. Their faces were painted up so much that their own fathers would hardly know them. Their hair had tints of gray in it to make them look older. It usually made me think of a secretary and her boss on a dinner date. Then, you can also see girls that seem nothing more than a hard shell. They have no softness that you usually see in a girl. Would you want to see your girl like these? Would you, young man, want to date one of these? Why do they become this way?

I noticed soon after coming to Chicago that manners and small courtesies do not exist except in few instances. Men don't get up to let a lady sit down on the buses, the "L," or subways. It is everyone for himself. No one seems to worry about another, just me and mine. You speak only to those who know you because others will think you are either crazy or trying to rob them, if you speak to them. Everyone distrusts everyone else. In the big city there is a lack of faith of all kinds. There is a tremendous lack of faith in God, and also a lack of faith in our fellow man. Would you enjoy living in this atmosphere?

There is a lack of a moral code in many parts of the big city. Murders, robberies, rapes, sluggings, swindling, embezzeling, and adultery are some of the most frequent headlines to hit the daily papers. It seems like it is not safe to go out after eight o'clock in the evening without a bodyguard. With these things happening, God must surely be left out. If people had faith in God and tried to abide by His word to us, there would be less of these crimes committed.

I have seen alcoholics lie in the gutter from being so drunk that they could not stand any longer. Men have fallen to these depths, maybe from having that first social drink with their boss or friend. To go down "Skid Row" and see all the men loitering around is a very sad sight. Ask them why they drink, their answer will be, as one fellow told me, he had to drink to live. To drink to him was the same as breathing to me. When man goes this far, it is not something to be amused at.

I've seen men, that, to me, have hit rock bottom as far as morals are concerned. These men are sex perverts. They have no concern for women but love another man as the normal man would love a woman. They act as "girls," and they hang around together. They often wear women's perfume. I've had to work with many of them, and it makes me sick to watch their actions and to listen to their talk. To think that men can act as these do, is disgusting and yet bewildering. Why do they act this way? What causes them to be like this? Is there something that can be done for them?

How can a Christian cope with these problems? These many questions are difficult for me to answer. I've worked with them and have tried to find an answer. As yet I have no sure answer. I look to the verse, Matthew 19:26. "But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible."

Why Are Ye Fearful?

Matthew 8:26

Our fear is like a breeze that blows,
Disturbance first is small;
But soon the wind much fiercer grows
And tempests lash and fall!
How often fear possesses us,
Then even comes despair;
Till life becomes tempestuous
And more than we can bear!
Have we forgotten or ignored
The message at Christ's birth?
Fear not! Rejoice! for Christ the Lord
Brings peace (not fear) on earth!
To Mary too the angel said:
Fear not! He shall appear—
That Holy One, the Son of God—
Dispelling mortal fear.
When confidence is placed in Him
He makes the fears to cease;
'Tis sin and unbelief bring fear,
But His love brings us peace!

The Soul's Sincere Desire

This is my soul's sincere
Desire: eyes to see and ears
To hear, and a heart to Understand; eyes to see
Earth's wondrous beauty and Sordid ugliness; ears to Hear exquisite harmonies and
The groans of the anguished;
A heart to rejoice in the Good and the true, and to Suffer with the sorrowing;
Faith to see light in Hours of darkness; hope to Expect triumph in the Moment of defeat; love to Appreciate those who would
Do me harm, and concern to Persist in good will;
Conscience to register what
Is right and steel-ribbed
Will to do it: a penitent
Spirit and pure habits;
Courage to struggle on and Daring to attempt the Needful; buoyant anticipation
Of vistas over the hill;
Contentment of being, and
Peace of mind and soul
Passing all understanding.
This is my soul's sincere
Desire: to hunger for God
As a deer longs for water in
A thirsty land; to open every Window of my soul that He may Give guidance, bestow power,
And make of my life a
Benediction; to yield myself
Utterly to the living Christ
And follow wherever He leads
At whatever cost; to be His Voice in proclaiming the Gospel of good news; his Hands in serving tables of
The needy; His feet in Running errands of mercy;
To live with quiet trust in Him which cannot be shaken;
To face death unafraid,
Sustained by confidence in
The character of God to Insure man's resurrection.
This is my soul's sincere
Desire—at least there are Hours when I wish that I were Possessed by this yearning.
Help thou me, O God, until
I want this more than
All else that I desire.

Flashes of Thought

Planted as Seed

Walter Gering

Like a flash it dawned upon me as I sat and listened. It could not be done; it was utterly impossible. To be sure it could be done on the machine. But to do the same in everyday life—that could never be. Pilate was right!

For years we had been doing it. The inventive genius of man in this present age is almost beyond description. That which only a few years ago was considered as utterly fantastic—the imagination of an idle dreamer—today has become reality. There seems to be no end to the possibilities in the field of man's endeavor to produce new products. The use to which these products can be put is likewise unbounded.

So it is with the device known as the tape recorder. A few years ago it would have been considered a dream; today it is common possession in schools, churches and institutions. One twist of the dial controls and that which has been spoken in the past suddenly comes to life, repeating itself word for word just as it was originally given. This device is one of the marvels of our modern age.

Another twist of the dial and suddenly everything disappears beyond recall. Never again can these words be recalled; they are gone forever. It is this feature of the recorder which has made it such a popular device from the standpoint of economy. One single operation and all previous recordings can be erased and a new message transcribed. What matters is whether the messages agree or contradict each other. One by one they are erased to make room for a new declaration.

It was this which suddenly flashed the thought. The Sunday's message as delivered had been played back; the tape came to the end. There was silence. Next Sunday it would be erased and a new message recorded. This procedure has been going on for years.

There in the silence of the study, in retrospect thinking over the message it came—"what I have written I have written." Those memorable words of Pilate gripped the mind. It was true! To be sure the words—the message recorded on the tape—could be erased, never again to be repeated. But the words lodged in the hearts of the congregation could never be erased that easily. They had been planted as seed and would bear their fruit for good or evil. Humbly I knelt in prayer.

Let the words of my mouth
And the meditations of my heart
be acceptable in Thy sight
O Lord, my Strength, and my Redeemer.

The First Uraon Church

Here is what to me is a very important report from our Indian brother, Rev. P. A. Banwar. Let us remember that Surguja is only a part of our entire mission field in India. It used to be an independent state under British rule, until 1947. When independent, the state permitted no gospel preaching. With the independence of "the whole" of India in 1947 a new constitution came into effect in the whole of India: and this constitution provides for religious freedom. Any religion can be preached and accepted in India. The gospel of Christ, too. But many people in India, and very specially in Surguja, would like to maintain the old closed doors. To know and accept the Father, as Jesus revealed Him, is not welcome to many in the orient as well as to the occident. Yet, those who accept, overflow with joy so that they dance. Now please do not think of American immoral dancing when you read this. "Dancing" as the word is used here, is like shouting "hallelujah," and it is expressed in India by men and women absolutely separate. It is their way of expressing "joy in the Lord." (II Samuel 6:14)

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

Many of us were greatly concerned about the work in Surguja, because it lacked proper supervision. It had to be done, either from Champa or from Korba, by foreign missionaries. The state of affairs in Surguja continues to be such that foreign missionaries are not welcome. For this reason, mission representatives in Surguja are nationals. The challenge of Surguja came to us when Brother Stephen and Brother D. Ram approached us. Since Mrs. Banwar is of Uraon background and is well versed in the customs and traditions of the tribe, we could not help but accept the challenge. When we were married in 1936, it never occurred to me that my wife would prove to be my passport to enter the Uraon tribes in Surguja. We praise the Lord for this opportunity, and believing in the words of Paul in 2 Cor. 3:5, "Our sufficiency is of God," we moved to Surguja and we have made Ambikapur our headquarters.

The Uraon Tribe

Being a tribe, the Uraons isolate themselves from the rest of the Indians. Hindus and Mohammedans look down upon them because they have some traits which are characteristic of the lowest castes of India. Liquor, polygamy and hog raising are their hobbies. They have a rich cultural heritage which they have jealously guarded throughout the ages. They have their own folk dances, folk lore, and methods of merrymaking. Unfortunately, for centuries their legitimate individual rights and privileges were denied them, hence civilization and education is lacking. At present the Government is concerned in improving their social status and economic condition. Uraons are poor. Their income is dependent upon the harvest. They do not follow any of the prevailing religions in India. They believe in evil spirits which are invoked especially at times of great distress.

The Mission Work

There are at present five mission groups working in the Surguja district and all of them have concentrated their work among the Uraons. Since this particular tribe is open to the gospel, the Word of God, in a way, is restricted only to this community. The Lutheran National Missionary Society claim over 2,000 members in this area. In most cases, the spread of Christianity is not a matter of a personal spiritual satisfaction, but rather following the village leader or family group.

Our work is comparatively small. We have 15 evangelists as compared to 120 in the Lutheran National Missionary Society. Travel is very difficult, since the country is hilly and full of jungles. Although we are trying to provide the workers with bicycles, nevertheless, it will not always be easy to use them. We have ten out-stations and twenty-seven converts in five of them. One village with 22 families has expressed its desire to accept Christ and we are looking forward to that day when they will openly confess Christ, through baptism.

There are strong movements against proselyting in Surguja. The agitation set afoot by the Maharajah of Surguja, and other hostile groups, has greatly hampered the cause of Christ. In many places they have tried to drive away the evangelists by bringing false charges against them and by making their lives difficult, but praise God, they have failed.

Our First Church Building

Fourteen miles from Ambikapur live three of our convert families. They expressed their desire for a place of worship and one of them was willing to donate a piece of land. The workers decided to build a church with mud walls. They financed it through church offerings and free manual labor. The work started in great earnest and in two months the building was ready. Haste was required on two accounts, opposition from the non-Christians and the coming monsoon season. It was a pleasure to see our young evangelists carrying logs on their shoulders, making tiles, and working in mud during the hottest season of the year.

The First Mennonite Church in Surguja was dedicated on June 17. My wife, my daughter, and myself, all rode to this occasion on my bicycle. On the way we discovered that the river was in flood, so we had to wait on its banks for two hours. When the waters subsided we waded through waist deep water and arrived tired and hungry at Charpara.

From a distance we saw two big bamboo poles with white flags on them, which proclaimed a festival in that particular house. The house was decorated with leaves, flowers, and colored paper. After a formal welcome, which consisted of feet washing and the receiving of garlands, we went through the village in a procession. Since all of the evangelists, converts, and some prominent figures from the Uraon tribe were present, the procession looked pretty long. We marched through the village singing, drumming, and at places halting to give a short message. The non-Christian Uraons joined us in the procession. Arriving at the place of worship we formally opened it. Upon entering, every one went straight to the pulpit and gave his offering. The church building was then dedicated for its use as a place of worship. The dedication was followed by the observance of the Lord's Supper. The tribal dance, which was accompanied by Christian songs, started after dinner and lasted until the morning. What surprised me most was the fact that other Uraon non-Christians participated in the entire program, which gave us hope that at some future date this church will be filled to capacity. This is our first Mennonite church building in Surguja. We solicit your prayers that many such buildings will be erected in the near future to proclaim the truth of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

A Clear Conscience

Elaine Sommers Rich

A good conscience is not lost overnight. It slips away subtly in small ways.

For example, a woman writes advertising copy for a publisher. At first, it bothers her a bit to write, "You can't afford to miss reading this book," when she really believes, "This book isn't worth the paper it's printed on." But the job is her bread and butter; she does it, and next time it's easier.

Or a student reports that he has read five more pages of outside reading than he has. Only five measly pages. The prof will never know (true enough, no doubt!).

Or a man sells a secondhand motor for a few more dollars more than he knows it's worth. Business. Everybody does it.

A girl by the tone of her voice casts unfair suspicion on another, feels it's not quite right, but conveniently forgets it.

To such a person there may come a day when a Big Event shocks his fellows, who have not seen the gradual inner process. "How could it have happened to him!" But whether this occurs or not, there will come a day when he no longer possesses that priceless treasure, the inner peace of a clear conscience. Then the only hope is forgiveness in Christ and a new uncompromising beginning.

A Visit to the Leper-Mission Station

The Mennonite Mission Station to the lepers lies 81 kilometers from the Paraguayan capitol. It is built on a large land-holding owned by the MCC voluntary workers under the direction of Dr. and Mrs. Schmidt who carry on a farming program there.

These folks mostly serve a term of either three or six months and then return to their respective churches with a greater understanding and appreciation for that which Mennonites are able to do for their Paraguayan neighbors.

My wife and I received an invitation from Mrs. Dr. Schmidt to come over for the evening to their closing school program, which we gladly did. It is a one-and-one-half hour drive along the best Paraguyan highway. Few cars and fewer police patrols added to our pleasure. Somehow I have seldom gone that stretch, without being stopped and questioned by police.

We arrived there just a little before sundown, just in time to quickly look over their gardens and dig a few young shrubs and plants for our home here at Asuncion. They have a variety of plantings such as oranges, grapefruit, bananas, mulberries, peaches, pears, plums, grapes, and many native trees and shrubs. Many of the above mentioned plantings are in the experimental stages only. A great lot of damage was done recently by night frosts. We had supper at the Schmidts' and then went on to the newly finished dining room hall, where the school program was to be held. As a surprise to parents and guests, the teacher with her flock (nine pupils) had decorated the hall very nicely with green boughs. The children were highly excited in their joy and anticipation of the evening. The teacher, a voluntary worker from Neuland, a Miss Martens, led the children in song, had several dialogues practiced with them and had them say several good poems. Besides the doctor's children and those of our Mennonite workers, there were two boys and two girls with darker skins. Their voices mingled nicely and one could not help but think of the One who loves them all. The sincerity of the teacher and the gratitude of parents and children impressed us all. We felt that here foundations were laid, for lives of service in the Kingdom in years to come. A serving of ice cream and cookies was enjoyed by all after the program.

The work with the lepers is growing. More and more those ailing from that dreaded disease, find confidence in the doctors and their helpers at "Kilometer 81." Some eighty patients are attended to and mostly in their own homes. This is one way in showing those poor folks that someone does care.

Formosa the Beautiful

Martha Boschman

The first missionaries to Formosa under our Board of Missions, the Hugh Sprungers, write of the "breath-taking natural beauty of Taiwan." This thought is repeated in almost every letter or article by relief worker or missionary. The high range of mountains that runs the whole center of the island, the incredible green of the vegetation, the brilliance of the flowers, all are framed by the background, sometimes distant, of the sea. Those who work in Formosa speak of the fact that sin is just as ugly there as elsewhere.

The MCC has had a widespread and varied program of relief work. We are working with them and rejoice in the reports from the Glen Grabers, Dr. Roland Brown, and others. 1954 marked the first year we sent missionaries to Formosa, and early this year the W. C. Voths moved to Formosa from Japan.

Now we are happy to announce that three more workers will be sailing from San Francisco on October 1, destination Keelung, the northernmost port on the island. Marie J. Regier, Whitewater, Kansas; Martha Boschman, R.N., Petaigan, Saskatchewan; and Lena Peters, R.N., Winnipegosis, Manitoba, make up the trio. Miss Regier has served in China and was interned for almost four years until V-J day brought that period to a close. After intensive itinerating in United States, she was asked to serve in Paraguay. Here her ministry was with the women in the colonies, in addition to some school teaching. She is happy to be going to the Far East again and to use the Chinese (Mandarin) which is now the national language taught in Formosan schools.

Martha Boschman comes from nurses' training with the addition of a Bachelor's degree in Christian Education, from the Canadian Mennonite Bible College in Winnipeg. She is a sister of missionary Paul Boschman in Kobayashi City, on Kyushu Island, Japan. She was ordained on July 31 in her home church at Petaigan.

Lena Peters has also had Bible college training after getting her R.N. She was ordained at her home church in Winnipegosis in connection with a mission festival on September 11. It does much for the home church when one of their number goes out to represent them on one of the world's mission fields, near or far. Language study will be one of the main activities of these nurses. The Board of Missions is sending two nurses because we hope to carry on the medical work begun under the MCC. Taichung on the west side of Formosa, a city of 200,000 population, has a home for babies which will need the services of one of the nurses. A home for schoolchildren functions here also. Evangelistic work, begun in a bamboo chapel under Glen Graber's direction, new is housed in a more permanent building. Earlier this year Brother Voth baptized the first believers won through this effort. A faithful Formosan evangelist has worked steadily in this area.

At Hwalien, population 20,000, on the east side of the island, is a 35-bed hospital, now located in a good building. This particular ministry has been largely to the aboriginal tribespeople. Since so little is done for them the government is sympathetic and on the whole helpful. From the beginning it has been a concern of Dr. Brown (son of China missionaries Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Brown) that the means of healing the soul be presented at the same time as bodily healing. He has had nationals help in this task. It is in evangelistic work in Hwalien that Miss Regier will probably find her place.

From this brief account it can be seen that much of the 'pioneering' stage of the work is over, but our task now is more in the nature of a taking over of what has been well begun, "In the name of Christ." For some time both MCC workers and missionaries under our Board will be working together on the big task that is ours.

Missionaries in Formosa have tended to settle in cities, and the government has increased this tendency by refusing to have missionaries live among the tribespeople who are neither Chinese nor Formosan. Some Christian work has been done among them, but the results of that work must be conserved. The mobile clinics and small local chapels all serve to this end. When one considers that some of these people are only fifteen years away from head hunting, it is easy to realize that there is much patient teaching to be done.

This seems like a strategic time to carry on this work in Formosa. Our missionaries, as well as the MCC personnel, need all the prayer backing an informed constituency can give them. The names of these new workers should be added to your prayer list. Formosa needs to be in our thinking, not as a small, beautiful remote island, but as one of the areas of the world for which we have a responsibility. The "beauty of holiness" needs to be added in the lives of many, to the natural beauty already there.

Mennonite Youth

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference, Editor, Maynard Shelly, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas

They Went to the Farm

Three young people from Minnesota and Pennsylvania found six weeks of varied activity in their summer work at the Mennonite Youth Farm, Rosthern, Saskatchewan. Marilyn Fuller, a schoolteacher from Jackson, Minnesota; Esther Buller, a produce employee from Mountain Lake, Minnesota; and Elva Nase, a student from Blooming Glen, Pennsylvania; became interested in the work of the Rosthern organization through reports that they had heard from others who had spent their summers in Saskatchewan.

Cleaning and Cooking

Esther worked in one of the farm's two invalid homes attending the patients. This included sweeping and dusting, as well as bathing patients, combing hair, making beds, preparing trays, feeding, and assisting patients from one place to another. During the canning season she supervised patients who assisted in the preparations of shelling peas, cutting beans, or cleaning gooseberries.

Marilyn took a turn at helping in the kitchen with its many and varied operations not the least of which was peeling potatoes, washing dishes, cooking pudding, and preparing trays. One of her large tasks was baking bread.

One day it had to be white bread, and the next day brown, except Saturday when buns and rolls were the order of the day. The smallest container she dared use for mixing was a tub, because the farm has 85 patients, children, and workers to feed.

Besides this Marilyn worked in the children's home which has nine boys and three girls. Some of these are crippled children and others come from broken homes.

Teaching and Counseling

She also took part in the teaching and counseling program of a children's camp for 170 boys and girls which was held on the farm for four days during the summer. She also spent time at a camp at Pike Lake where a similar children's program was sponsored by the Mennonite churches of Saskatoon.

The laundry of the invalid home was the place where Elva busied herself. This meant washing, mangling, and ironing for the patients and staff of the invalid home. Besides this there was cleaning to be done, and help that needed to be given in the kitchen.

The Mennonite Youth Farm has always provided ample opportunity for service for men and women from spring to late fall each year. Volunteers have been coming to the farm for the past nine summers.

This farm was purchased by the Saskatchewan Mennonite Youth Organization in 1944. They had begun holding retreats on this former dominion experimental farm four years before.

For $20,000.00 the youth organization was able to purchase this large farm with its one section of land, two large barns, piggery, chicken house, milk house, storage bins, and four large houses. The largest house was put to immediate use as a home for invalids, and it now houses 53. The other residences later developed into two children's homes that provide room for more than a dozen children each and a smaller invalid home.

Besides their regular duties the Voluntary Service workers took part in the devotions for each ward, joined in the singing for the sick each week, helped to pick vegetables and berries, and cleaned the garden. These activities were times of fellowship as well as times of service.

The experience of these young people who worked on the youth farm this summer is summed up in the testimony of one of them, "I am very glad I came."

Two boys from the children's home "assisted" Marilyn in picking peas.

Serving on the staff of the children's camp Marilyn teaches a class of boys.

PENCIL POINTS

Traveling on the train the other day I found myself in a coach filled with high school students returning from a big city convention. It was my privilege and obligation to observe them. They had seats and I didn't.

Slumped against the luggage compartment in the rear of the coach I made some notations on what high school folks do, at least while traveling en masse on a public conveyance.

They talk. In fact, these kids talked quite a bit. They hadn't all come from the same high school, but a week on a big adventure made close acquaintances.

They bustle around. The degree of vigorous activity here was high. Traffic between diner, wash rooms, and water fountain was continual. And no one went alone, moving always in pairs or committees.

They spend money. The conversations I overheard indicated that they spent considerably more in the diner than I would have. But then again things in railroad diners cost a lot, and I seldom attend.

They sing. And even better than singing they seemed to like to hear someone else sing. They found a serviceman who could sing moderately well by my standards, and apparently exceedingly well by theirs. At least, they raptured to his crooning. Added to this impromtu jam session was an alto who apparently had some experience in singing in places where popular music is habitually sung. She sang with her eyes closed. She tried to interest the high schoolers in group singing. Here it seemed that they could applaud together more vigorously than they could sing together. Since they were journalism students, they may not have been good singers.

Perhaps it was because the professional singer was a Negro and they came from a racial-sensitive state. Perhaps they didn't know the songs.

They sit on floors. The girls especially seemed to enjoy the kind of informality that sitting in the carpeted aisles brought. And then, modern skirts seem to lend themselves well to this posture.

They read, even if only fitfully. There was much commotion and activity, but some read for short periods. The kind of literature they read was not the best, but, of course, they were seeking recreation and not education at this point. Perhaps it was their way of exploring the world.

They make notes. One girl over whose shoulder I couldn't avoid looking made notations of things she wanted to remember from the trip. It was a list of names and addresses and telephone numbers. After one boy's name she noted: "No telephone. Sob!"

They sleep, though somewhat reluctantly. The coach lights remained burning much longer than usual. And even when the lights were dimmed the tumult and the shouting receded only gradually.

What's the point? Well, I don't have a moral for this. When tempted to search for one, I prayed that I should never grow so old that I would find wringing my hands over the activities of the younger set to be my favorite indoor recreation.

In this connection, I might point out that I stood on the train for over six hours and no one offered me a seat. This may indicate that I don't look old enough to be given preferential treatment, or it may infer other things.

But I was interested in noting what young people are doing these days. It was educational and refreshing. It seems they act pretty much like people.

A medical missionary, captured by Chinese bandits, was taken to their leader's cave in the hills. There was no doubt in his mind that he would be executed at once, but on his arrival the bandit chieftain was found in the throes of appendicitis and the doctor was ordered to attend him. With cautious anxiety, the other members of the band permitted him to prepare for the operation but watched him carefully as they handed him the knife which had been designated for his execution. The missionary cleansed it, purified it over the flames of the camp fire, and proceeded to restore the dying bandit's life. Those desperate men could readily understand the doctor's ability to cure. They had no difficulty in accepting his willingness to do so as a bargain for his own life. The thing they could not comprehend, however, was that he could take the same knife dedicated to his own death, purify it and employ it as the instrument for giving life to his enemy.

So we can also turn evil into good and thus reenact the first word from the Cross of Christ.

HORN HONKS ON THE MESA

Arizona is a beautiful country. The mesas, the rocks, the flowers, the cornfields, the Hopi villages, and many other things, including the delicious Hopi apricots help make this country interesting and inviting.

Sometimes I felt like I was living in a foreign country because the Hopi way of life is so much different than ours. I wondered how and why they lived in such a deserted country. They are a peace loving, intelligent, and friendly people. The Hopi women still grind corn like the people did in Bible times and they carry their babies on their backs in their shawls.

As we drove through the villages at sundown we could see many Hopi fathers and mothers sitting outside by their doorsteps enjoying the cool breeze and watching the children play. Some families gathered outside for their evening meal.

There is one sad picture and that is that most of these Hopis do not know Christ. It is hard for these people to break loose from their heathen customs and become Christians.

Mudholes and Leaking Roofs

I spent five weeks teaching Bible school among the Hopi children in Arizona; two weeks at Moencopi and three weeks at Hotevilla. It rained during the first few days at Hotevilla. We had a big mudhole in front of the mission building. This attracted the children and perhaps led them to Bible school.

It also rained inside the building. Suggestions were made that we should have our classes outside because there the roof wouldn't leak. It was interesting to see all the children in the village come from every direction at the honking of the horn or the ringing of the bell which signalled the time for Bible school to start.

After all the Bible schools were over we took the children to Flagstaff to a Bible camp. Flagstaff is a beautiful place with tall pines and mountains and the weather is perfect. All those who had good church attendance and had memorized 50 Bible verses were eligible to attend the Bible camp in Flagstaff It was a privilege to take these children up here and teach them more about Christ.

Thus ended my weeks in Hopi land, and I'll always remember them. I found that a summer of Voluntary Service in Arizona has been the most interesting and enjoyable that I have ever had. I hope that more volunteers will be able to come next summer. I am sure that they, too, will feel that their summer was well spent.

The best way to prove your religion is not to argue about its facts but to produce its proper results.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

Dr. Frank C. Laubach, world apostle to the illiterates, comes to Bethel College, Oct. 12, as the speaker for the sixty-seventh Founders' Day observance of the college, as announced by Pres. D. C. Wedel.

Frank Laubach and his wife first went to the Philippines as missionaries for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (Congregational) in 1915. After many years with the Moros and learning their still unwritten language he worked out the now famous picture-word-syllable literacy charts.

In 1935 a group of New York businessmen organized World Literacy, Inc., of which Dr. Laubach is honorary president. His literacy teams have prepared lessons in 24 countries of Asia, 29 countries of Africa, 4 countries of the South Pacific island area, 22 countries of South and Central America, and 4 European countries. A member of last year's graduating class of Bethel College Mina E. Mina, of Cairo, Egypt, is at present preparing to be a member of his personnel in Egypt and the Near East.

A traditional phase of the Founders' Day program has been a thank offering to supplement the current expense budget of the college. The chairman of the board of directors, Rev. S. J. Goering will speak concerning financial needs of the college.

The Mennonite Singers under the direction of Dr. W. H. Hohmann will sing, "Balm in Gilead" and Rev. Arnold Epp and Rev. John Thiessen will present the invocation and benediction.

Rosella Reimer Duerksen and Rupert Hohmann presented a vesper service in the Bethel College Chapel, Sunday, Sept. 18, as the program for the annual Bethel family picnic sponsored by the alumni association.

Rosella Duerksen is a graduate of Bethel College and the Westminster Choir School. She has also completed two years at Union Theological Seminary, New York City. As a vocal instructor at Bethel College she has made many friends in this area.

Rupert Hohmann, son of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Hohmann of the Bethel faculty, has delighted Newton audiences for many years with his violin appearances. He has studied with James Caeser, Wichita University, and continued his violin work with Robert Quick at Northwestern University, and at Philadelphia where he worked with the concertmaster of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Duerksen and Mr. Hohmann were accompanied by Mrs. Erwin C. Goering.

After the vesper service opportunity was provided for fellowship around a pot luck supper.

"Chapel Meditations" the half-hour weekly radio program given by the Mennonite Singers of Bethel College is again being heard over Station KFH on Sunday evening at 10:30 p.m.

Since the spring of 1952 this program has been presented as a Sunday public service feature. A group of the Mennonite Singers under the direction of Dr. W. H. Hohmann completed a very successful concert tour of Europe this past summer.

The spoken word on Chapel Meditations is again being given by Dr. Erland Waltner, head of the Bethel College Bible department.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Registration began on the Bluffton College campus Tuesday, Sept. 13, with indications showing a slightly larger student body than usual. Included among the freshmen and new students are two German students, one Dutch student, one Formosan, three Puerto Ricans, and one student from the Canal Zone. All new students were introduced to campus life by means of various orientation programs and with the help of upper class "big brothers and sisters."

Several new faculty and staff arrangements have been made for the coming year. Rev. Dale Dickey will return to the faculty as head of the speech department and will assume the task of dean of men formerly held by Dr. Paul Shelly. Dr. Shelly will continue as Professor of Bible and as instructor in argumentation and debate.

David Flanagan, instrumental music teacher at Findlay high school, will be the assistant professor of orchestral instruments to replace N. Laurence Burkhalter who will study and teach in the school of music at Ohio State University. Earl Lehman will direct the Vesper Choir and teach some classes in addition to his teaching position at the Bluffton high school. Another Bluffton high school teacher, Lorain Basinger, will teach a new course being offered at Bluffton, Introduction to Agriculture.

New arrangements on the staff include: Carol Whirledge of Goshen, as college nurse; Mary Ann Kooker, assistant to the registrar and Mrs. Kathryn Kolter of Rockford, Ohio, as the temporary house mother in Ropp Hall, the boy's dorm.

Many improvements in facilities were made this summer on the campus in preparation for the new school year. Among the most noticeable improvements are: the new furniture in Lincoln Hall, the girl's dorm; newly painted halls and stairways in both men and women's dorms, and a redecorated Hirschy House. Less noticeable, but important, was the refinishing of the gym floor in Founders Hall and the resealing and waxing of the floors of the locker rooms. The library floor also received the same treatment.

Camp Friedenswald was the site chosen again for the preschool retreats for two groups from Bluffton. From Sept. 3 to 5 the faculty held their annual retreat, and from Sept. 6 to 8 the Student Christian Association met to plan for the 1955-56 school year.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The annual Faculty Retreat was held on the Northern District retreat grounds at Swan Lake the first two days of September. During this time committees met and plans were made for the coming year.

School practices and policies were evaluated and rethought.

Ample time was also devoted to meetings of a spiritual nature. Rev. Herbert Fretz, who served as retreat speaker addressed the group twice. In his first address he challenged teachers to meet the mental needs of students. He related an example of Christ doing this when he met Nathaniel. He dealt with his needs and sent him on to greater things. In his second address he emphasized the moral challenge teachers need to bring to students. Here he cited the example of Christ speaking to the Samaritan woman. Christ was not satisfied with imparting knowledge alone—he touched on the moral problems of people.

The lakeside prayer services held at sunset each evening were an inspiration and gave one a special awareness of the presence of God.

Periods of recreation and fellowship at mealtime were welcome additions. This year a special feature was added to the retreat program. Members of the Board of Directors and their families were guests of the faculty for the last evening.

The fall term of the 1955-1956 school year began the second week in September. Although enrollment statistics are not complete due to late enrollments preliminary surverys show an increase in both the College and the Academy. The largest increase over last year is in the second year college class. As might be expected, most of the students come from South Dakota, but five other states have made contributions. They are Montana, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa. Germany is the only foreign country represented on the campus this year.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The seminary opened its eleventh year with a joint chapel service on the Bethany Seminary campus. Dr. Robinson, president of Bethany Seminary, welcomed the students and gave the opening address. In the afternoon of the same day, Sept. 8, a special program of orientation was planned for the new students. Dr. Pannabecker gave a word of welcome to the students and gave the background history of the seminary. The students were also introduced to the Kenwood Community in which the seminary buildings are located. Library and Business procedures were explained by Miss Magdalen Friesen, librarian, and John T. Neufeld, business manager. Ramon Jantz presented the Woodlawn Mennonite Church.

In the evening of the first day of orientation Don Smucker gave a message on the "Role of the Seminary." The practical work program for the coming year was explained by Andrew Shelly who is the practical work director for the coming year.

On Friday morning the students and faculty of the seminary met for a chapel service at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church. In the evening of the same day an all-school reception was held at the Bethany campus where the faculty and staff of both institutions were introduced. A fellowship supper on Saturday evening was held in the church where students had an opportunity to get to know each other and to get better acquainted.

12. Arrange for the proper handling of questions, if there is a period for them. Have someone prepared to handle them, especially in a very large auditorium, or arrange with the speaker to handle his own.

13. Take the speaker in tow after the speech. Don't let the poor fellow wander into the social part of the session or into the disappearing crowd unattended by someone from the group.

14. Take the speaker home or to his hotel or his train. That is, if he is going promptly and would appreciate transportation and did not come in his own car. At least get a taxicab for him. Now also is the time to pay him for his work or reimburse him for expenses or at least arrange details of disposition of the debt. A few groups have offered to send me a check in advance; this saves embarrassment about expenses.

15. Send him a note of thanks. It takes only a few minutes to write it, but such a note shows thoughtfulness, especially if your speaker has come out of the goodness of his heart and obviously has worked hard to give you a specially-prepared talk. He'll be more willing to come back some day. If program chairmen would see that the fifteen points listed here would be checked carefully, church speakers' lives would be made easier.

WORKCAMP IN MEXICO

Twelve Mennonite VS'ers painted the 30 bed regional hospital at Cuahtemoc, Mexico, during this summer's workcamp and tour. This hospital is located near the Old Colony Mennonites and serves them as well as the Mexican community.

The VS'ers found that life in such a hospital has excitement. In a country where some of the men are armed with revolvers, an argument can easily mean more patients for the hospital. And painting in the hospital made the VS group a part of the everyday happenings. Many of the group watched an appendectomy, the birth of a baby, or other minor operations.

The workcamp was climaxed by a community open house and a dinner given by the doctors of the hospital for the VS group.

The Cuahtemoc hospital staff includes three nurses and acting administrator sent by MCC. Since the poverty of the community is intensified following four years of drought, the hospital is conspicuous for its lack of facilities and equipment. There is no running water, electricity, X-ray machine, sterilizer, heating facilities, or adequate apparatus for administering gas.

Willard Smith, director of MCC in Mexico during the past year and professor of history at Goshen College, led the VS group tour of historic sites in Mexico for two weeks before the workcamp.

TWO NURSES FOR KOREA

Margaret Wiens, Vancouver, B.C., and Bertha Kornelson, Abbotsford, B.C., have been appointed to serve as nurses in the MCC program in Korea. They will sail about the first of October. In Korea they will be assigned to children's hospitals at Pusan or Seoul.

Miss Wiens and Miss Kornelson are members of the Mennonite Brethren Churches at Frazerview Vancouver and Abbotsford, B.C., respectively. They have been working in the Vancouver General Hospital as night supervisor and operating room worker specializing in orthopedic work.

SOCIAL WORKER AT PRAIRIE VIEW

Mrs. Hans Regier of Whitewater, Kans., began as a part-time social worker at Prairie View Mental Hospital, Newton, Kans., on Sept. 9. Mrs. Regier is active in the Newton Council for Retarded Children, has done some social work and taught high school and college. She will handle contacts with patients' families, take social histories and other related activities at Prairie View.

Herb Wiebe, Abbotsford, B.C., and Joe Hoover, Goshen, Ind., also began work as psychiatric aides at Prairie View in September.

MEETING OF CONTINUATION COMMITTEE

Representatives of the Friends, Mennonites, and Brethren met as a Continuation Committee at Quaker Hill, Richmond, Ind., on Sept. 15. They discussed here mutual concerns growing out of the July, 1954, conference at Bluffton, Ohio. Orie O. Miller and William T. Snyder, Akron, Pa., represented the Mennonites; Errol Elliott and Lewis Hoskins the Friends; Ora Huston and Ralph Smeltzer the Brethren.

MCC HEADQUARTERS

Mrs. Edna Schroeder and her two children from Mt. Lake, Minn., joined the MCC staff at Akron, Pa., Sept. 7. Mrs. Schroeder will serve as cook at headquarters. The Schroeders come from the Bethel General Conference Mennonite Church at Mt. Lake where Mrs. Schroeder was an active member.

Since her husband died as the result of an accident in 1949, Mrs. Schroeder has worked at the Mt. Lake Cream Station and in the school lunch room.

Erma Miller and Emma Troyer, members of the Amish Church at Sugarcreek, Ohio, have been helping in the kitchen at MCC headquarters since the first of August. They returned to their homes on Sept. 16.

Junior Program and Lesson Material

Material for Midweek Bible Study Classes or C.E. Groups

THROUGH THE YEAR

The first unit in a series of program helps for use with junior age children. It includes ten complete programs for special occasions such as New Year's Day, Easter, Children's Day, Advent, and six other days. The unit has excellent poster suggestions, interesting stories, and project ideas.

WE WOULD SEE JESUS

This book represents a twelve lesson study of the life and teachings of Jesus. An inspiring worship service accompanies each lesson and there are well-chosen stories for each program. Picture lists and hymn suggestions are helpful aspects of this unit.

ADVENTURES FOR CHRIST IN COLOMBIA

A mission unit to acquaint the juniors with the work in Colombia. The six lessons tell of the boys and girls, the work, the missionaries, and many other things of interest about this mission work in South America. The stories in the worship service outlines are true stories from South America. The author is a missionary in Colombia.

LIGHT COMES TO THE CONGO

Another mission unit about the work in the Congo in Africa. The seven lessons present worship service outlines centered around stories or articles of actual happenings on the mission field. The author of this unit is a former missionary to the Congo.

The Reader Says—

Dear Editors:

Upon the article "Concerning Eternal Security," by Boyd E. Bonebrake, in The Mennonite, Number 35: I do not believe in "salvation by works," Eph. 2:9, but in the truth "By grace are ye saved through faith, it is the gift of God," Eph. 2:8.

I know that "who is born of God," John 1:13, and "whosoever believes in the Son of God, shall not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3:16.)

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father, who gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand," John 10: 27-29. Is that eternal security?

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord," Rom. 8:35, 38, 39.

But "Ye must be born of God," John 3:7b.

Dear Editor:

The article "The Hidden Treasure; The Precious Pearl," (September 13) was a real blessing to us. It was filled with rich scriptural truth from beginning to end, and, I believe, will be used for the glory and praise to the Lord Jesus Christ for all eternity.

We should like more of its kind.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

REQUIREMENTS FOR CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

That there is a great variation among churches in the manner which new members are received is well known. There is a general feeling that there should be more uniformity in admitting new members. Just what should be the requirements for membership? Obviously, more than just a brief course in catechetical instruction.

At the recent Study Conference on the Believers' Church in Chicago, the findings committee in their report mentioned a threefold requirement for church membership. These requirements follow:

1. The conscious acceptance of Christ as personal Savior and Lord, giving evidence of an intimate and vital relationship to the person of Christ in terms of His Saviorhood and lordship which issue in saintly conduct, and out of which the believer can speak with heartfelt conviction. The conversion experience or inner quiet decision must confront the individual with his own sins and his need of a Savior.
2. An informed willingness to participate in the fellowship of the church, to live a life of separation from the world, to witness openly of his experiences with Christ.
3. Accepting the authority of the Word of God and willingness to study it.

We note such phrases as "giving evidence of an intimate and vital relationship," "saintly conduct," "a life of separation from the world," "speak with heartfelt conviction," "to witness openly." Too often such phrases are not definitely tested in the lives of those seeking membership. In our eagerness to receive more people into the church fold, we may be inclined to make such membership too easy. The standards for becoming a Christian and member of the fellowship must be kept high.

YOUTH AND THE CHURCH

J. Edgar Hoover, of the FBI, states as his conviction that a child should definitely be required to attend Sunday school, whether he wants to or not. His reasoning is well worth pondering.

But there is a tremendous advantage in conditioning the child so that he really wants to go to Sunday school and church. The attitude of the parents should be so joyous and eager to attend that the same spirit lays hold of the child.

A study has recently been made of the youth work in our churches to determine the "state of the church in relation to youth as revealed through interviews with youth themselves." Among the many things revealed by this survey were such as, youth wants to feel that they are a part of the church, and that there is a place for them. They feel that more adult leaders with better training are needed. They feel the church is weak in providing opportunities for them to put into action the Christian convictions and attitudes they develop in church. They are interested in working together with other youth groups of other churches. Youth are often not challenged to give themselves to religious vocations.

It was also observed that, as a rule, small churches make less provisions for their youth; that more provision was made for the senior-high age than for older youth. When inactive youth and young adults were asked why they dropped out of church activities, 32 per cent of the youth and 25 per cent of young adults said they lost interest and were bored since the youth program did not meet their personal need.

The church's big job is to give every young person a living Christian faith, but they can be led to the Christian experience by various paths. Too often there is a wide gap between what a church is doing and what it might do for its young people. Perhaps we should plan for a "study conference" on "Youth and the Church."

TRIPS AND RETREATS

The retreat programs of the church have been steadily growing and enlarging in scope. Today, retreats are not planned only for the children, but for adults as well. There are ministers' retreat, missionary retreats, young family retreats, Sunday school groups, week-end church retreats, etc. The regular district retreat grounds are usually booked full for the summer.

The adults need retreat experienecs as well as the youth. In the quiet and peace of a retreat they should revalue their activities and life. Usually they think they are too busy to spend most of a week together as a family in some religious atmosphere. But the relaxed quiet and peace in the Christian setting may be just what is most needed.

Vacation trips are often too hurried in an attempt to see so much that we lose our sense of wonder. Often we return more worn out than rested. Such trips should be more leisurely, more restful, and more given to the spiritual reviving.

Whether next year's vacation be a retreat or a trip, there are certain values we should hope to receive from such: rested bodies and minds; revived spiritual awareness; greater appreciation for God and His works; more love for people; more thought to the spiritual things of life; and a deeper appreciation for our own homes and communities.

Evangelism, What Is It?

The Scope of Evangelism

WALTER MCDOWELL*

In the Believers' Church Conference in Chicago, one of the leading papers presented the thought that in the church today there seems to be a "confused sense of direction." If every scriptural issue were faced squarely and studied in the light of the Scripture, this condition would not be so prevalent. The "confusion of tongues" caused by many outside influences has caused some to misinterpret scriptural principles, and has caused others to seemingly ignore some principles given for our guidance. Especially, has this been true in regard to the nature of the church and the function of the various gifts to the church.

The Church of Christ, of which we are members, has been given a great task. Primarily, the task is to bring glory to Christ who is the Head of the Church. There are two phases of this task that are of special importance to us since these phases of church activity are our obligation fulfilled by the guidance and the empowering of the Holy Spirit. These two phases are, first; the presentation of the "Good News" in such a way that the sinner will accept the salvation which Christ offers freely by His Grace, Eph. 2:8-9; and then secondly; to bring that sinner (now saved by grace) to a life of willing consecration and service to the Savior.

The first phase of this task; that of proclaiming the gospel with the purpose only of bringing sinners to Christ, has been at times under severe criticism. Here we must raise the question which is before us: What is Evangelism? and What is its scope? Webster says that evangelism is "the preaching of the gospel with effort to convert hearers to a religious faith." Is there any other authoritative definition? I know of none. From this definition we can infer, that evangelism is limited to the process of being saved. The re-establishment of the relationship between a Holy God and a sinful human being is a crisis experience of sufficient importance that it should stand foremost in Christian experience. This crisis experience may have varied amounts of emotional accompaniments, and may be followed by other crises of a subordinate nature. Without this initial crisis experience, in which man is restored in fellowship with God, man is eternally lost, hence its importance. This experience which is the New Birth is the only means of entrance into Christ's kingdom. Since it is the beginning of a new life it is the prerequisite for growth and development of Christian life and character.

Granted that the new birth of the sinner is the objective for which the evangelist may strive. Are we going to be satisfied with this achievement only? Some are completely satisfied at this initial juncture and will suspend all activity as far as this individual is concerned. But the newly converted individual is only a "babe in Christ" at this point, and the church must use every effort to bring him into fullness of joy that comes when one lives a life that is pleasing to the Lord.

The Scripture points out a further task, in Eph. 4:11-12, the important function of gifts to church; for the perfecting of the saints and for the edifying of the body of Christ. After an individual has accepted the gift of salvation, he needs the counsel of pastors and the instruction in the Word from teachers. Some feel that this phase of his experience is still in the realm of evangelism. It is comparatively easy to convince an individual to accept the gift of salvation, but it is an entirely different matter for that individual to give his talents over to Christ to fully obey His demands. Too many accept the "Saviorhood" of Christ but have not accepted His "Lordship" over their lives. This second phase of his experience calls for dedication of self; and is far beyond the realm of evangelism that leads him to accept the gift of salvation.

Undue importance is often placed on certain phases of Christian life and experience. In modern religious circles there seems to be a continuous conflict between those emphasizing Christian culture and those who stress Christian redemption. This variation of emphasis need not lead us to an "either-or" decision, but should drive us to our knees as we search the Word of God which is our only guide in spiritual things. The gifts to the church as enumerated in 1 Cor. 12 are not centered in one individual, but in many persons. It would be presumptuous for any one individual to say that he possessed all of the gifts, or, that the gifts which he possessed were more important than the others. Each gift has a particular realm wherein it functions. It is indeed a sad state of affairs when Christians criticize some part of church activity just because their talents are not in that particular field. "Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? . . " 1 Cor. 12:29-30. Let's not be guilty of encroachment in the matter of gifts, just because our talents are limited to one certain field of Christian activity.

"We are laborers together with God." As we faithfully serve with our gifts in their particular realm of action, we support each other in the great work of glorifying Christ our Head. We will then rejoice together, in seeing lost souls come to the Savior, and also, we will praise God together as they willfully step into a life of sacrificial obedience as they are led by the Holy Spirit of God.

Friedenswald -- Woods of Peace

CHRISTINA HARDER DUERKSEN*

Was this to be just one more place to go to? Or was there a deeper meaning to the name Friedenswald. Due to the train being delayed for more than six hours because of an obstruction on the main line, a carload of us arrived at our destination after lights were out and early comers were sound asleep. A deep peace seemed to brood over the place. Only the airplanes droned their song along highways of the sky. Shown to our cabins, we were soon settled for the night.

Peace at Dawn—As day dawned, we looked out at our surroundings. Tree covered knolls were on all sides and some distance away at the foot of the hillside lay the lake from which the mist was slowly rising. Robed figures could be seen hurrying to the shower house. Breakfast was to be served at 7:30, daylight saving time.

Peace at Mealtime—Meals were served in the fine new building erected by the Central Conference churches. But could there be peace with all the chatter and clatter that accompanied our mealtimes? Yes, there was the peace that came from a well-organized routine: cheerful cooks in the kitchen, wholesome food on the tables and informal seating arrangements so that conversations started outside could be continued or old friends could choose to sit together. Board members, mission candidates, and furloughed missionaries rubbed elbows—even washed dishes together and thus really got acquainted.

Peace in meetings—Daytime meetings were out under the trees. Evening gatherings were in the dining hall. No street noises crowded in, no roar of motor vehicles rushing by, no outside duties called. Devotional periods, prayer times, discussion groups, and missionary messages filled the allotted time with both challenging and inspirational moments. There was peace of heart—not from hearing of the great need everywhere nor from the messages through film and slides. Peace of heart came from realizing afresh that the Lord of the harvest knew the needs of each country and that it was He alone who could thrust forth laborers into his harvest.

To one whose chief interest in three decades had been the land of India and its needs, it was a great experience to meet missionaries from the Congo, from Formosa, Paraguay, the American Indians, and Mexico. How very much alike the problems in all the fields are.

Group fellowship—Between sessions small groups could be seen visiting, counseling, praying, or just getting acquainted. Older workers were an encouragement to those about to go into new work. The recounting of God's marvelous dealings with individuals as well as with the needs of various fields was a source of strength and joy.

Reactions to the Study Conference

In the following excerpts from letters received, some of the delegates to the Study Conference on the Believers' Church give their impressions of the conference and its value for our churches. May these statements encourage us to continue in our diligence to bring home to our District Conferences and individual congregations the blessings obtained.

P. K. Regier
Executive Secretary

"WHAT THE STUDY CONFERENCE ON THE BELIEVERS' CHURCH MEANT TO ME"

It was important to me that brethren from the various congregations often geographically removed from each other and ethnically not of the same background, met on common ground. We sensed a feeling of belonging together, based on a higher level than that of blood kinship. Conferences of this nature, I believe, will help us to weld our General Conference Churches more closely together, such union being necessary for a more effective witnessing in many fields.

G. Lohrentz
Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada

The Study Conference in Chicago to me was an open confession on the part of General Conference, that we have missed "the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." This Conference gave me great encouragement, as there were strong indications that many pastors and leaders have a deep understanding of the scriptural standards required of His people and His church; and earnestly desire to have our churches become strong spiritual churches carrying out faithfully God's Divine program.

Walter McDowell
Delft, Minnesota

My reaction to the conference is that it was an outstanding event in General Conference experience and history. It is significant for any group to go back to try to get a vivified concept of how the church in general and itself in particular got started, and for what purpose. The tendency as a rule is to veer away from those original moorings and never go back to assess them to see what inherent values they had and then weigh the existing order in the light thereof. It was noteworthy that General Conference should do so.

R. L. Hartzler
Bloomington, Illinois

This conference rates as the best I have been in thus far. Indeed, an historic General Conference achievement. We must learn to think together.

Don. Smucker
Mennonite Biblical Seminary
Chicago, Illinois

The study conference on the Believers' Church held in Chicago is, I believe, the most significant conference I ever attended during all my years of work as a minister of the General Conference Mennonite Church. It helped me to obtain a clearer insight as to what the Christian Church should be from the standpoint of being a "Brotherhood" type of a church in contrast to a "Peoples' Church."

Ernest J. Bohn
Pandora, Ohio

The conference gave me a feeling of growing unity in the General Conference on this important subject. It will have implications for Conference unity for years to come. It was a mountain top experience for me.

William T. Snyder
Akron, Pennsylvania

This conference to me represented a serious search by consecrated men from our Conference for a clear understanding of what is the meaning and character of a congregation of believers in Jesus Christ in the twentieth century. This conference called us back to a careful examination of what Jesus and the Scriptures, as well as our Anabaptist-Mennonite forefathers, had to say about this matter. As a result, there should be a leavening process set in motion throughout the General Conference to develop a new and clearer appreciation of what the Mennonite Church is; what its distinctive ideals are; to what extent it agrees with other Christian Churches and where and why it differs from them.

J. W. Fretz
North Newton, Kansas

I was deeply moved by the unmistakable working of the Holy Spirit as demonstrated:

a. In the genuine Christian fellowship that knit together minds and hearts in presentations, discussions, and personal visiting.
b. In the freedom of inquiry that made possible frank and open statement of convictions and concerns with the perfect confidence that love within the "gathered" would remain strong.
c. In the persistent reminder that the Bible is the Word of God and therefore speaks the decisive word.
d. In the perfect agreement that Christ be central in the faith and life of every individual believer as well as in the "gathered together" community.

Jacob T. Friesen
Beatrice, Nebraska

Timothy Coop, an American farmer, was noted for his generosity. When asked how he could afford to give so much, he replied, "I shovel out as God shovels in, and the Lord's shovel is larger than mine."

TEN OF A KIND, by Edna Beiler, 106 pp., Scottdale. Herald Press, $1.50.

The art of living together as Christians is one of the achievements of life seldom attained over night. Yet it's a problem which every gang of boys must learn if it's to survive. "Ten of a Kind" is a moving account of the experiences of such a group as they share a series of normal gang activities under the wise counsel of their respected leader, Uncle Al. After weeks of attending church together, playing ball on Saturdays, working on missionary projects, hiking, and rubbing shoulders in numerous ways, a growing comradeship is established; the spirit of Christ begins to shine through the life of each boy.

In this circle of ten boys, the author has included a gang of normal, everyday fellows easily found in any community. As in every group so in this, personalities clash and difficulties arise. It is but natural that Eddie, coming from a home where father is a drunkard and mother is an untidy, careless housekeeper, should reflect traits not acceptable to those coming from the upper strata of life. Stewart is like a clam, closemouthed and reserved. In direct contrast, Dave is always speaking, never recognizing that others ought to be given opportunity. Stan is the hot tempered member of the gang, always casting gloom over the group with his grumbling and complaining. So it is that each emerges in the story as a distinct personality, in need of the moulding influence of the preacher friend, Uncle Al.

Edna Beiler has learned the nature of boys in this age through her wide contact both in her youth and later in her travels. Born in Indiana she found herself living in five different communities during her childhood. Having been interested in people from her childhood, she became a part of them wherever she went as is reflected in her writings. Her words take on life as the characters move about in an interesting manner.

The book Ten of a Kind should be of value to those interested in teaching Christian living to boys and girls. While it is in story form, it has a definite teaching aspect, which will appeal to children. The experience in which the tramp of Turtle Creek played a trick upon them becomes a fine occasion to teach the value of refraining from the taking of revenge. The story is well planned in that each chapter becomes almost a unit in itself. The incidents of each chapter are centered about some one specific problem. In this manner the book becomes effective not only for ordinary reading but can also be adapted as a weekly reading for a number of consecutive periods.

Flashes of Thought

Costly Moments

Walter Gering

It was just another one of those countless circulars which floods the mails today. Of the mailing of advertising circulars to box holders there seems to be no end. Some of them, of course, are a legitimate part of good business and convey a message of real interest to the reader. Countless others never receive more than a casual glance, then are consigned to the waste paper basket.

So it was with this folder. The address "Post Office Box Holder, Local" was enuogh to indicate the nature of the correspondence. With only passing interest it was tossed aside in favor of other correspondence.

Then it was that my attention was suddenly caught. Spattered across the folder, in large blue letters were the words: "The Most Expensive Minute of Your Life." Most expensive minute—what could that be? Almost instinctively the hand reached out to retrieve the folder. Maybe it did have something worthy of attention. More than once I had tossed away innocent looking papers only to discover later that they were really valuable. Could it be that I was doing the same again?

It was a disappointment. I could have known from the very start that it would be that. The words were only a means of creating interest in the contents of the folder. The contents themselves were hardly comparable in interest to that of the caption. To be sure an accident upon the highway or in the home can become a most expensive moment. Thousands have discovered how costly illness and misfortune can become. But to say that such experiences are life's most expensive moments—that can hardly be accepted as the final answer. There are moments far more expensive than that. The insurance company was wrong!

I thought of the rich young ruler who sadly turned and went away from the Son of God. There was Esau who sold his birthright for a mess of pottage; Judas who betrayed his Lord for a few silver coins. Pilate washed his hands, consigning the Savior to the Cross. These are the most expensive moments in life—those moments in which we reject the Eternal Son of God, our Lord and Savior. There are none more costly than these.

WHAT DOTH IT PROFIT IF A MAN GAIN THE WHOLE WORLD AND LOSE HIS OWN SOUL?

God must not be expected to do for us what we can do for ourselves.

Toward Mental Health

Ten years ago mental hospitals meant many-storied, dingy brick buildings with barred windows and locked doors; working in a mental hospital meant living in danger—a constant tension between patient and attendant as to who would be in control.

Brook Lane Farm doesn't meet any of these conditions! The hospital is a one-floor building with open windows and unlocked doors. The key—most coveted item in most mental hospitals—plays little importance here, for the patients are free to enter the linen and cleaning closets at will. Kitchen, laundry, recreation hall, and chapel are always open, and patients are encouraged to take advantage of this freedom.

Yet, since its beginning in January, 1949, Brook Lane Farm has helped overd 1000 patients to return to their homes.

Modern psychiatric theory points out that the secret of returning to mental health is not necessarily found in the construction of larger and more modern buildings in which to hospitalize those who are ill. The social environment of the patient is more important. The right to be an individual, to be accepted and loved for himself, to make a contribution to the group, to know that people respect and trust him helps the patient to grow stronger emotionally. This accentuates the possibilities for a Christian mental hospital.

With this background, the staff at Brook Lane Farm spends its entire working day—and often some of its off-duty time—with the patients; not as "authority," but as a friend who is interested in helping the patient to enjoy human relationships again and regain self-respect. Attitudes of inferiority and social incompetence which are so devastating to the self-esteem of a patient are slowly broken down as they accept the love and concern of these staff members.

Patients and staff work together on different projects in the morning and early afternoon. The women assist in the kitchen, laundry, craft shop, garden, or wherever activity is carried on. The men help with construction projects, carpentry, gardening—wherever he has interest and skill. Often before leaving the hospital the patient can completely assume some responsibility in one of these areas. And the staff shares with the patients the thrill of learning that work and working together can be fun and satisfying.

The craft shop is an important part of the treatment program at Brook Lane Farm. Basket weaving, painting, making mats, all offer the patient an opportunity to use his own creative abilities to make something that is attractive and useful. It is an important step forward to learn to master new materials in a satisfactory manner.

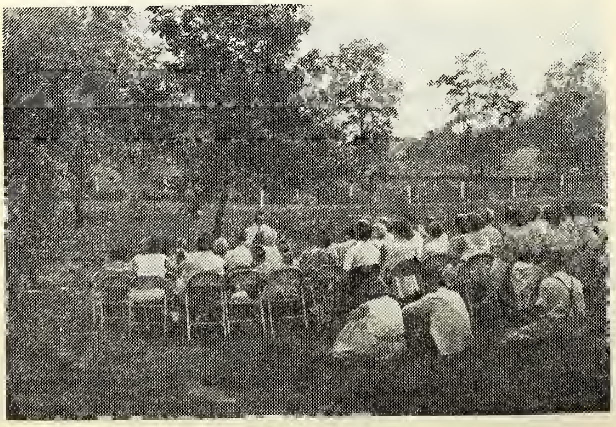
Meals at Brook Lane Farm are served family style in the old stone farmhouse. The staff members —seated with patients—help to stimulate and guide conversation. Add attractive and colorful surroundings, plus good food, and mealtime is a happy occasion.

The staff also joins the patients in recreation periods. Concerts, plays, and tours through the rock-dotted hills of Maryland often highlight a week. The large farm has a couple of trails for hiking which entice most of the patients.

Activities for the patients stimulate the feelings of worthiness and well-being and self-acceptance. For example, volley ball, a game in which group co-operation is necessary, helps in gaining appreciation of the values of team work. On several occasions the patients at Brook Lane Farm have not only played baseball but officiated as well. To be able to settle a dispute successfully on the ball field enhances one's self-assurance.

The medical director here is a fully qualified psychiatrist; he is medically responsible for the entire schedule of treatment and activity of each patient.

Brook Lane is planned so that required protection can be given to staff and patients. The one-story buildings help to reduce accidents and make it possible for many patients to enjoy the outdoors. There



Glenn Musselman, missionary under appointment to Brazil, conducts an outdoor church service at Brook Lane Farm. A trio from the Bethel congregation, Mummasburg, Pa., accompanied him. Church and chapel services are conducted regularly by visiting ministers and staff members at Brook Lane.

Supper served on the back lawn by the pond is a welcome summertime occasion at Brook Lane Farm.

Mennonites Aid Eastern Flood Victims

Another opportunity to express our belief in love as the way of daily Christian living was accepted by the hundreds of men from Mennonite churches in the East who helped to "dig out" the flooded areas of northeastern Pennsylvania.

On Monday, following the fateful Friday night and Saturday, 120 men left the Franconia conference district by busloads for the flood scenes. In the following two weeks until Labor Day, between 200 and 300 men per day from Franconia, Lancaster, southwestern Pennsylvania, and eastern Ohio, continued this mission of love and concern.

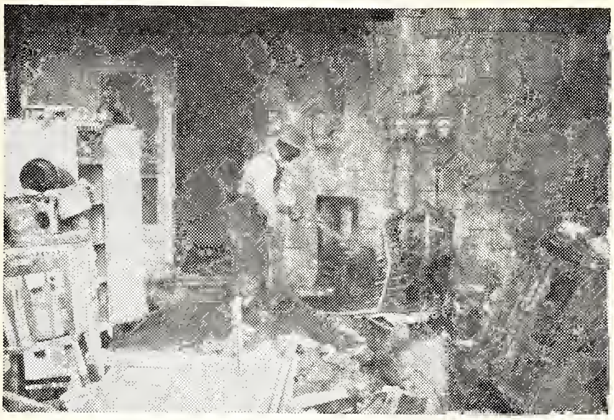
The men worked first at Riegelsville, Pa., the southern end of the flooded area, then further north at East Stroudsburg, Pa. Forty-four homes were reported completely destroyed and 67 with major damages in this one community. Since the water rose above the second floor level, the men shoveled mud from the basement and first and second floors. In one home, ten men worked four days to clean out the debris and dirt which was then hauled away by dump trucks.

David Derstine, pastor of the Blooming Glen, Pa., congregagtion, was co-ordinator of the effort which included the General Conference, Mennonite Brethren in Christ, and Mennonite Churches. Norman Good of Franconia Conference directed the work at the disaster scene.

Although the Red Cross met the first major needs for clothing for the flood victims, the Mennonite Churches made one distribution of new bedding—comforters, spreads, sheets, blankets, and pillowcases, new shoes for children and men and new clothing for school children and men. These were items which the Red Cross did not have.

Working in co-operation with the Red Cross, the Mennonites contributed this labor very effectively. There were many appreciative comments on the good organization and thorough work.

Mennonite groups from the West Coast and across the U. S. also gave money to aid the sufferers. The French Mennonites expressed sympathy and offered to send a gift.



The Mennonites helped the flood victims to clean, salvage and repair furniture which has possibilities for reuse.

Labor Day marked the last effort of the large organized groups, but the churches are standing by if more specific help in rebuilding is needed.

Representatives of MCC and the disaster workers planned to meet Sept. 21 to discuss the long term needs and the final disposition of funds.

is one wing in the hospital where the overactive or aggressive patient can be segregated. Here he will not disturb the other patients beginning to reconstruct behavior in productive channels. Additional protection is given to the acutely psychotic patient by surrounding him with kind and understanding staff.

This continuous constructive activity program, accompanied by the Christian love and acceptance of the staff, brings a surprisingly quick response from the patient. He learns to accept himself again. Within a short period of time, the patient is eager to return home. He is willing to share this love and understanding which he has found at Brook Lane from a staff who in turn have known and shared the love of Christ.

Should I Insist My Child Attend Sunday School?

J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI

Shall I make my child go to Sunday school and church? Yes! And with no further discussion about the matter. Startled? Why? How do you answer Junior when He comes to breakfast on Monday morning and announces to you that he is not going to school any more? You know! Junior goes. How do you answer when Junior comes in very much besmudged and says "I'm not going to take a bath." Junior bathes doesn't he?

Why all this timidity then, in the realm of his spiritual guidance and growth? Going to let him wait and decide what church he'll go to when he's old enough? Quit your kidding! You didn't wait until you were old enough! You don't wait until he's old enough to decide whether he wants to go to school or not—to start his education. You don't wait until he's old enough to decide whether he wishes to be clean or dirty do you? Do you wait until he's old enough to decide if he wants to take his medicine when he is sick? Do you?

What shall we say when Junior announces he doesn't like to go to Sunday school and church? That's an easy one to answer. Just be consistent. Tell him "Junior, in our house we all go to church and Sunday school and that includes you." Your firmness and example will furnish a bridge over which youthful rebellion may travel into rich and satisfying experience in personal religious living.

The parents of America can strike a telling blow against the forces which contribute to our juvenile delinquency, if our mothers and fathers take their children to Sunday school and church regularly.

We Filled Our Notebooks

MARY LOU DUERKSEN*

Second fiddle is the hardest instrument to learn to play. But this ability a missionary must learn if he is to be successful.

Another important must for new missionaries is personal devotions. The servant of God who is too busy to have devotions and time for God is busier than God intended him to be.

"Dope" also is important. This comes in handy when learning a new language. It means:

Divest yourself of preconceived ideas so you can start from the beginning;

Observe although you will not always understand after seeing;

Practice;

Express yourself, remembering what the words mean to the nationals as you say them.

These were some of the things that our group of thirteen missionary candidates were told at the recent orientation course for new missionaries which was held in Chicago from August 7 to 14. Arizona, Belgian Congo, Formosa, and India will be our future fields of service for the Board of Missions of the General Conference Mennonite Church.

Letters, History, and Music

Our days were busy with three courses in the morning and speakers in the afternoon and evening. John T. Neufeld, Chicago home mission worker, began our morning with devotions and a study of the Epistles of Peter. He brought to us precious truths from these letters.

During the second period, S. F. Pannabecker, president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary and a former missionary to China, presented Mennonite mission history showing us its application to our present mission work. Following this, Andrew R. Shelly, director of public relations for Mennonite Biblical *Missionary candidate for India.

Seminary and a member of the Board of Missions, and his wife shared observations and experiences from their recent trip to our mission fields. We will never forget Andrew's testimony as he sang, "To the east, to the west, to the north, and the south; we must go, we must go with the Gospel of Love."

Our notebooks were filled with helpful "do's and don'ts," qualifications, and problems by the time we had heard all the speakers. These speakers included John Thiessen, executive secretary of the Board of Missions; H. A. Driver, secretary-treasurer of the Congo Inland Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Ewert; Jitsuo Morikawa; Mrs. Anna B. Mow, a teacher at Bethany Biblical Seminary and former missionary to India; Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker; Mrs. Paul Wenger; Dr. Hamlin, a Chicago surgeon; Marvin Dirks; and Glen Graber, former MCC worker in the orient.

Cookbooks and Vacuum Cleaners

Our school for new missionaries was held in the Chicago mission home at 4609 Woodlawn Avenue. It was our home for the week, and we all helped in the cooking, cleaning, dishwashing, and many other chores. But we continued our discussions on our future work while looking for recipes in the "Mennonite Community Cookbook," while we pushed the vacuum cleaner across the living room floor, and while we put clean paper on the tables for the next meal.

A farewell dinner was given on Thursday evening for Dr. and Mrs. John Zook who were members of our group. They left the following day for Belgium for further study before going on to their field of service in the Belgian Congo. Farewell letters to be opened by them during their sea voyage were given to them.

We all felt grateful for the privilege of attending this course and having the chance to study each of our different mission fields with their own unique work, problems, achievements, and country. It was helpful to have guidance on the many things a missionary needs to know, such as keeping accounts and records, caring for one's health, and how to get along with fellow missionaries.

"THE GREATEST BATTLE in the world is the battle for the hearts and minds of little children, and the church isn't winning it. In East Germany Russians have sensed the futility of trying to win adults and even older youth to the standards and ideals of their so-called 'communist' order. Prohibitions and restrictions against religious teaching among youth and adults have had the opposite effect from that which Stalin's agents desired. Today there is a vigor in the life of the persecuted German church which is one of the heartening signs of our times.

"The Russians, sensing this awakening, are concentrating their attention on little children. It is their expectation that in ten years there will rise a generation of youth—Eastern Germany, to whom 'God' is a strange word. This is what it takes to make communism stick, and they know it."

PENCIL POINTS

Do you want to be an ordinary bookkeeper, an ordinary farmer, an ordinary teacher, an ordinary secretary, or an ordinary lawyer?

I'm not sure what vocation you want to follow, but I'm sure that your desire is to be extraordinary in your chosen field. While you may realize in your serious moments that you may never be the best, you have good reason to hope that you will be next to the best.

No, no one wants to be ordinary. This is true, at least, when it comes to working, earning a living, or enjoying life. Ordinariness is never our standard.

But there is one area in which the push to become or stay ordinary is making a dent on our attitudes. For when it comes to being a Christian this is what too many folks are trying to be.

I'm not sure where all of this began but we can see it happening to other people easiest of all. This is the impression that many folks get of the Roman Catholic church. There are people who are extraordinary in their religious service. These are the priests. But it seems that the rest of the members of the church have an obligation to be ordinary. They, of course, are expected to attend church services and support the church, but beyond that their greatest obligation seems to be an obligation to be harmless.

Of course, this may be a slight overstatement, but it is a trend noticeable in the bulk of Protestant churches. The very fact that the terms "ministry" and "laity" are so frequently used suggests that there are two classes of people in the church. And often two different standards apply to each group.

The people called "laymen" are not expected to know much about the Bible or be able to explain his faith. All of this is for the minister to worry about.

In too many ways we have absorbed this spirit into our Mennonite churches. While no Mennonite farmer would want to be known as an ordinary farmer, yet members of our churches have been satisfied to be ordinary Christians. If we feel that our farming is distinctive because of our records of productivity and good management, so also ought to be our expression of the Christian faith.

Our church's program of voluntary and second-mile service has done much to help us see that each Christian is a special messenger. It has made us all discontent to be just ordinary Christians who do nothing for Christ. And it is helping to make the second-class Christian a candidate for the position of the "vanishing Christian."

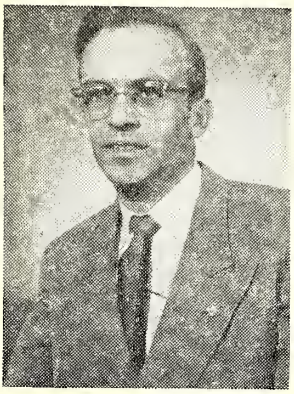
Meet the Presidents



Joe Neufeld, Alberta Mennonite Youth Organization

President of the Alberta Mennonite Youth Organization is Joe Neufeld, a graduate of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College.

Previous to attending college Joe spent two years in the school of education at the University of Alberta where he received his teacher training, after which he taught school for two years. This fall he is planning to resume his studies in education at the University. Joe was recently married to Jeanette M. Janzen of Waldheim, Saskatchewan, and they are making their home in Calgary, Alberta.

Henry Koop of Glenwood is vice-president of the Alberta youth group. Henry teaches in the Menno Bible Institute at Didsbury. During the spring and summer months he farms in the Alberta foothills.

Serving as secretary is Evelyn Baergen of Tofield who has attended Menno Bible Institute and taught public school. She has been active in Sunday school, summer Bible school, and retreat work and is planning to attend Canadian Mennonite Bible College.

Cornie Dick, Allen Hiebert, and Cornie Klassen are the chairmen of the three areas. For Faith and Life it is Cornie Dick of Rosemary who received his degree this spring and who will teach in the Lathbridge High School. Fellowship chairman is a Calgary carpenter, Allen Hiebert, a graduate of Menno Bible Institute. A farmer, Sunday school teacher, summer Bible school instructor; and a former Voluntary Service worker in Montana is Cornie Klassen of Rosemary, who is the Service area chairman.

The Alberta organization has operated under the "three-area-emphasis" program since August, 1954. Advisor for the group is David P. Neufeld of Rosemary who was appointed by the Alberta conference.

Composed of young people from seven Alberta Mennonite churches this group focuses most of its activities on the summer months. Features of this program are a youth retreat, a children's camp, and a summer Bible school program.

This year their retreat was held on the campus of Menno Bible Institute at Didsbury, July 28 to 31. Approximately 200 young people participated in this retreat which was planned by the three area committees.

Following on the heels of this retreat was the children's camp. The last discussion period of the retreat was not completed when the children began to arrive. This was the first time they had attempted such a program. Eighty-nine boys and girls came to spend a week, learning to sing, pray, worship, play, and live in a Christian spirit and atmosphere.

A summer Bible school program was conducted in four districts where church and Sunday school programs are not regularly held.

This youth organization attempts to aid local church groups in establishing youth fellowships and to act as a guiding and advisory body to help realize a united Mennonite youth in Christ.

GOING WITH GERING

Washington and Oregon
Are neighbors of degree.
Their west is green
Their east is less—
Still, they put up
With even me!

My first destination after leaving Alberta in the beginning of August was Monroe, Washington. This was my first contact with our two churches there and I experienced a fine time of Christian fellowship. I was pleasantly surprised in finding some distant cousins there, and discovered that some of the older folks could also speak Die Schoenste Lengevitch.

Clair Bartel, Pacific District youth president, made the necessary arrangements for my visits in the six Oregon churches. It is always a challenge to meet with young and old who are willing to take time out during a busy season (at this stage it was picking beans) to hear what God has wrought among our young people, but I think the Lord would have it so, don't you?

One evening the young people of the six churches gathered at the Dallas City Park for a swimming party sponsored by the Grace youth group. The half-empty pool kept the danger of drowning to a minimum because most anyone can swim if they have their feet on the ground and their heads above the water. The party concluded with a devotional and the "slurping" of watermelons.

The youth groups in that vicinity are struggling to adapt their activities to the three-area-emphasis-fellowship plan. I see great potential in the groups and trust they will find a good balance in working out this plan. It is something which takes much effort and work. I believe the "workshop" technique used in other Mennonite youth groups would also be a great help in this situation.

I continue to rejoice in what our young people are doing, and as we work toward being a "united Mennonite youth in Christ" we will accomplish even greater things for Him.

This semester a proctor system has been instituted among the men students on the campus. Each of the outside houses and each floor of Ropp Hall will be under the care of a proctor appointed by the dean of men, Dale Dickey. The proctors will be concerned with the living problems in the dorms and will be available to help students with any problems that may arise.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Officers of the Northern District Conference held a meeting at Freeman this week. Arnold Nickel of Henderson, Nebraska, Edward Duerksen of Butterfield, Minnesota, H. M. Harder also of Butterfield, and Orlando Schmidt of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, visited in chapel on Thursday. Rev. Nickel, who is president of the Northern District Conference spoke. He spoke of the "Undying Light of God." Many times the light has grown dim but it has never gone out, he stated. Before the lamp went out the voice of God would speak. In its perfect form the light was revealed in Jesus Christ. But we are not only to see the light but we are in turn challenged to be a light which reveals God to the world. We are to let our lights shine—that is our commission. The world may be dark at times, but with faith in God there is no need to despair. The greater the darkness the brighter the light.

The Mennonite Ministerium, which includes all the Mennonite ministers in the area holds all its meeting in the College Library. They met for their first monthly meeting of the year on September 13. Herbert Fretz is the chairman of the group and Lester Hostetler serves as secretary.

Many of the important meetings sponsored by the churches in South Dakota are held on the campus of Freeman College. The Beadle, Hutchinson, Spink, McCook County Sunday School Convention to which the Hutterthal Mennonite Church near Freeman was host this year met September 10 and 11. All Sunday sessions were held at Pioneer Hall.

Dr. Marcus Bach, Professor of Christianity at the University of Iowa, stopped on the campus last week to visit friends on the college staff.

Two students—Annette Kaufman and Joanne Kleinsasser described their summer experience in Voluntary Service during a chapel program last week. They had both worked with children. One had worked at Moses Lake, Washington—a modern boom town. Here the work was done in co-operation with the churches. Unit workers helped these churches make a survey of the trailer court population to discover the area in which each denomination might serve these people. The second girl had worked with a unit in Chicago where they worked with children in Bible school and day camp. The sincere feeling of devotion to their work and the sense of mission which they expressed was inspiring.

MEDICAL PROGRAM IN VIETNAM

Dr. Willard and Grace Krabill, Louisville, Ohio, sailed for Europe abroad the "S.S. Ryndam" on Sept. 22. From Rome they will go to Saigon, Indochina, Oct. 10 to begin a program of medical assistance in Vietnam under the Mennonite Central Committee.

There has been about one doctor to 35,000 people in Vietnam, and most of these doctors are in the cities. With the General French exodus from Vietnam during the past months including many doctors, and with the population increased by over 200,000 refugees from North Veitnam, this need is becoming even greater. Many of the hospitals and clinics are left without either doctors or nurses.

Upon arrival in Vietnam the Krabills will locate in the area around Dalat, at a place where they find adequate facilities to best serve some of these needy people. The Mennonite Central Committee will send nurses to help the Krabills as soon as the opportunity warrants it. Four workers have been distributing food and clothing among the refugees in this area since the latter part of 1954.

KANSAS ALL-MENNONITE WOMEN'S MEETING

The Kansas All-Mennonite Women's Meeting held on Sept. 15 at Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kan., featured the Mennonite Central Committee. The theme of the forenoon session was "Our Far Eastern Field" and featured an address by Ruth Fisher, former MCC worker in China and Formosa. In the afternoon Brother and Sister Cornelius Wall spoke on the theme, "Spiritual Outgrowth of Relief Work." This meeting is sponsored yearly by the Mennonite Brethren, General Conference, Krimmer Mennonite Brethren, Mennonite and Church of God in Christ Mennonite groups in Kansas.

FROST HITS CROPS IN PARAGUAY

Robert Unruhs, of Bloomfield, Mont., who are in charge of the experimental farm and nursery in Paraguay, report heavy frost damage in the last days of July. "The first part of August was spent in taking toll of the frost damage. We learned that the damage varied considerably over the three colonies. In some of the villages only the small branches of the trees were touched, while in others the trees were damaged severely. In some villages the trees leaf out again from the stubs that remain of what were beautiful young trees beginning to bear fruit. Our nursery stock is a complete loss. The wheat crop is also a total loss over all the colonies, and it had looked like a bumper crop.

In August we also began putting in operation a feed mill purchased from STICA. This machine was bought specifically for the promotion of the silo program here in the Chaco. However, since the feed supply is so short this year, we are now using it to chop up kaffir straw for farmers. It has worked in several villages and is being received enthusiastically by the farmers. It simplifies silo filling a good deal. If as many farmers follow through on making silos next year as have talked to me about it this year, we will have plenty of work to keep the machine going for a few weeks at least. I believe that silos are in the Chaco to stay, even though it may take a few years yet until they are in general use in all the colonies."

D. C. KAUFFMANS RETURN TO EUROPE

The D. Chauncey Kauffmans, West Liberty, Ohio, sailed for Europe on the "S.S. Ryndam" Sept. 22. He is returning for a three-year term as director of the European Area MCC work.

Brother and Sister Kauffman first sailed in 1953 as assistant director of European MCC; following the death of Brother C. F. Klassen, they assumed the directorship. They returned to America this summer for a furlough. While here Brother Kauffman presented the needs and program of MCC in Europe to many of the Eastern churches.

HOMEMAKERS NEEDED IN VS

At least four people are urgently needed to do cooking, cleaning, and laundry in MCC VS units now. Camp Landon, Gulfport, Miss.; Portland, Maine; Coalinga, Calif., Migrant unit; and Baptist Home for Children, Bethesda, Md., have openings now. There will be other openings later in the year. Workers in this area have opportunity to add the "plus" of congeniality and warmth to the VS units in which they serve.

Jottings

—Woodland Church, Warroad, Minn.: Rev. and Mrs. Paul Schillingsburg and children, Helen and Peter, missionaries of South America, were with us August 21. Mr. Schillingsburg was the guest speaker in the morning and they showed slides of their work as missionaries in the evening. Aug. 31, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dick held an auction sale. They will move to Hasting, Minn. Sept. 2 Mr. and Mrs. Donald Heppner also held an auction sale. They are leaving for Oregon to make their future home. In the evening a student from our Mennonite school, Jakob Duerksen, was the guest speaker. He comes from Paraguay, South America. Sept. 4 Melvin Ortmann showed slides on relief work in Jordan and on Voluntary Service. After the slides a farewell program was given to both families who are leaving our community. Refreshments were served after the program. We will miss both families, but we wish them God's richest blessings wherever they make their home and new friends. The Sunday school teachers met at the home of Jake Unruhs, Sept. 7. Elmer Ortmann is a patient in the Warroad Hospital. We wish him speedy recovery.—Mrs. Nick Fast, Corr.

—Springfield Church, Pleasant Valley, Pa.: In April our Missionary Society had Violet Kaiser, who was in VS in Colombia, S. A., show slides and tell of her experiences. In May the group had "Family Fellowship Night," the topic being "Life's Highway." The ladies brought towels and washcloths for migrant work. In July the ladies rolled bandages for relief. On April 24 the C. E. Society had Miss Marie Duerksen, missionary to India, show slides and speak of her work. In May we had the film "Honor Thy Family." In June our topic was "Serving God and Man"; we had a group from the 1-W unit from Norristown State Hospital tell of their work. FRIEDENSWALD—WOODS OF PEACE

Board meetings—As the Mission Board sat through session after session, struggling with the problems confronting them, we realized anew that the God of Peace was their strength in whom alone they could go forward.

Recreation—Swimming and boating for those so inclined, came after four o'clock. Even some of the board members found it possible to share a bit in this.

A wiener roast one evening was a happy occasion, especially for the children present. And there were no dishes to wash afterwards.

Friedenswald—Woods of peace? Yes, there was a deeper meaning in the name and many of us realized afresh that if we but trust the God of peace we will have the peace of God to steady our hearts. It was good for us to spend a week there.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Students enrolling for seminary work during the first week of classes were: Floyd Bartel, Hillsboro, Kan., Walter Neufeld, Inman, Kan., Daniel Graber, Goshen, Ind., and Walter Eisenbeis, Waterloo, Ont. Student wives enrolling for part time seminary work were: Mrs. Floyd Bartel, Mrs. Arthur Isaak, and Mrs. David Schroeder. Still others enrolled for part time work in the Bible Training School, as follows: Mrs. Menno Bergen, Mrs. Jakob Duerksen, Mrs. Ronald Krehbiel, Mrs. Cornelius Dyck, and Phyllis Mueller. The total enrollment now stands at 33 full time and three part time seminary students and five Bible Training School students.

John T. Neufeld, business manager of the seminary has been suffering from a heart condition for some time. His condition recently got worse so that he is now on a complete rest treatment and so has not been taking care of the office work here for several weeks. Let us remember him in prayer.

Paul Edward, born to Menno and Esther Bergen on May 6th, underwent minor surgery on his lip on Sept. 12, at the Woodlawn Hospital, Chicago. Paul was born with a cleft-palate. The expenses of the operation were carried by the Ladies Auxiliary of the Woodlawn Hospital.

Miss Phyllis Mueller of Freeman, S. D., has joined our fellowship here and has taken over as dietitian of the seminary. By the number that eat at her table you can tell that the number of single students has increased considerably over last year.

THOUGHTS FROM PSALM 61

Hear my prayer, O God,
And listen to my supplication.

When my heart is overwhelmed,
I will call with humility;
Lead me to the rock
That is higher than I.
Then I will rejoice in Thee.

INSTALLATION SERVICE

Rev. W. J. Flickinger was installed as the new pastor of the Ebenezer Mennonite Church, (located two miles west of Bluffton, Ohio), during the morning worship service of the church on Sunday, September 18.

Dr. A. C. Schultz, a former pastor of the church and guest speaker for the day, gave the charge to the new pastor. Rev. Flickinger then gave his response to the charge. Following this Charles E. Sprunger, who served with Lyman K. Hofstetter as interim pastor of the church for the last three months, gave the charge to the congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. Flickinger are established in the church parsonage in Bluffton. Prior to their arrival in Bluffton, Rev. Flickinger served as pastor of the Saran Mennonite Church in Orienta, Oklahoma. Preceding his ministry in that church he was with the Go Ye Missions in Oklahoma. He is a graduate of Moody Bible Institute and also John Brown University, Siloam Spgs., Arkansas. He also attended Bethel College.

Rev. and Mrs. Flickinger have two sons. Their youngest son, Leland, is a senior in the Bluffton high school. Marvin is married and is attending Grace Bible Institute.

MCC ENTERS NEW FIELD

In its beginning, the Mennonite Central Committee was organized to render relief to needy world sufferers. Gradually, as other needs were evident, it has added to its interests that of mental hospital work, Voluntary Service and PAX aid, mutual aid, and special peace witness. In September of this year it has entered still another avenue of service. With the dedication of the Ailsa Craig Boys Home in Ontario, we have the first Mennonite institution for juvenile delinquents. (The dedicatory address is printed in full in this issue of The Mennonite.

Just as the work in mental hospitals grew out of the interest of young people who had served in such institutions during CPS days, so the work among delinquents has been brought to the special attention of Mennonites through the enthusiasm of the young people who worked in various such homes in their Voluntary Service program. With this interest has also come an awareness in general of the need of Christian homes for boys from broken families. The juvenile delinquency problem has reached an alarming state. The conscience of the church has been touched by the need of unfortunate teen-agers who have never known, or have missed, the Way of Christ.

This new home for boys, a 138 acre fertile farm, was a gift of the Mennonite congregation at Ailsa Craig, Ontario. The Conference of Historic Peace Churches assured the MCC of the Ontario support. The MCC, after careful consideration, stepped into this new service in faith. The Home will provide for twenty boys from the ages of ten to fifteen.

The Mennonite Central Committee is to be highly commended for entering this new and needy type of service. This is but a beginning. This form of work may grow, we hope, into a very real type of Christian service to the youth who know little about the love of God, but who will be led to find their highest life in accepting such love through Jesus Christ.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER'S PREPARATION

A first step toward a Sunday school teacher's proper preparation is to have a deep sense of the tremendous responsibility and opportunity that is his. To bring the eternal Word of God to the eternal soul of the pupil is a heavy responsibility. It should not be undertaken lightly. Sensing one's spiritual obligation will make one strive to be better prepared to discharge that duty properly. The proper preparation of the teacher may be said to be threefold:

(1) The preparation of the lesson. This should be so thorough and accurate that the teacher is well familiar with far more than he can hope to teach in the time allotted. What he knows beyond what he can share gives background to that which is taught. Not only should he know the immediate circumstances of the lesson text, but also the scope and setting, the historical and surrounding ideas, so that he becomes an authority of anything connected with the lesson. This means work.

(2) The preparation of method. It is not enough to know the material. If it cannot be properly shared with the pupil the knowledge becomes ineffective. Teachers should learn the very best methods of teaching. This can be done by study of methods, in teacher-training classes, and by special courses. There is a right and a wrong way to present truth. The teacher should become an expert in the art of teaching. This means study.

(3) The preparation of the teacher himself. Perhaps this is most neglected. The lesson may be well in hand, the method may be correct, but if the teacher himself is not a living example of the truth he tries to teach he will not really be successful. Has he taken time to possess his soul in peace with God and man? Has he allowed the Great Teacher to cleanse and forgive him? Has he taken time and effort by prayer and devotions to come before his class as from the very presence of God? This means consecration.

ANOTHER HISTORIC PEACE MEETING

August 15-19, thirty-three participants from Denmark, England, France, Germany, The Netherlands, Switzerland, and the United States met in a peace meeting at Puidoux, Switzerland, for a four-day discussion on the general theme, "The Lordship of Christ over Church and State." Papers and discussions were arranged under two heads: (1) "The Relationship of the People of God to the World," and (2) "Is There a Christian Ethic for the State?" Not only were the Historic Peace Churches represented but there were also theologians from Lutheran and Reformed churches in Europe and members of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation. In a report of this conference it is stated that "it may well have been the first time in hundreds of years that leaders of the Mennonite and other peace churches grappled with leaders of the Continental state churches in days of discussion on the theological issues that separate them."

In consultation with leaders of the World Council it seemed agreed that a pacifist theological conference "could provide an important contribution to both pacifist and ecumenical thinking." It was the unanimous conviction at the close of the conference that discussions of this kind should continue and that all should seriously seek to grow in common confrontation with the Scripture. One present reports, "We felt our need and the need of the world and we truly felt the leading of the Holy Spirit."

Mennonites are repeatedly accused of "hiding their lights under a bushel." Perhaps by more such discussion meetings, both with the peace churches and others, our peace testimony can be made to shine more clearly in a seeking world. Some of the findings and a brief summary of this conference may be found in other pages of this issue. We believe this marks a significant historic event in Mennonite history.

The Social Need and the Church

E. J. SWALM

(Dedication address at the Ailsa Craig Boys Farm at Ailsa Craig, Ontario, the first Mennonite institution for juvenile delinquents. Bishop Swalm of Duntroon, Ont., is chairman of the Conference of the Historic Peace Churches in Ontario).

We are assembled today on a history making occasion. The Mennonite Central Committee is projecting her witness in a hitherto untried field, and we are very happy to be associated with this worthy movement.

We have been asked to speak to you on the subject, "The Social Need and the Church." May we first briefly define the terms, "society" and the "church."

By "society" we mean any number of people united in a common interest, or the entire group of persons who live in any region at a given time. Thus the term "social" is applied to those living in society.

It is not quite as easy to define the church because of its many references. "Church" suggests different things to different people. We have what is called the "empirical church" which is characterized by her devotees placing almost the entire emphasis on personal religious experience even to the subordination of the Bible or scientific discovery. Again we have the liturgical groups who are emphatic on the ritualistic approach. Broad terms are also often used, such as the nominal church, the true church, and others. We are using the term today in a very broad sense referring to the entire profession of Christianity in which there is a divinely recognized genuine number of which the Scriptures say "nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are His."

THE SOCIAL NEED

The topic implies that there is a social need. We gravely admit that our society is depraved and has been ever since the tragedy in the Garden of Eden. This is a somewhat old-fashioned position, but it is forced upon us not only by a casual acquaintance with the Scriptures but by the press, radio, and T.V. Injustice, greed, and violence are rampant in our world. National and international tensions continually disturb us, and economic pressures attack our security until every unit of society feels the impact. It eventually reaches the home, the foundational unit of any permanent social structure. People are trying to be happy with gadgets rather than with each other. This forces everyone with an earning power into industry and our children, the greatest national asset, are carelessly and criminally neglected.

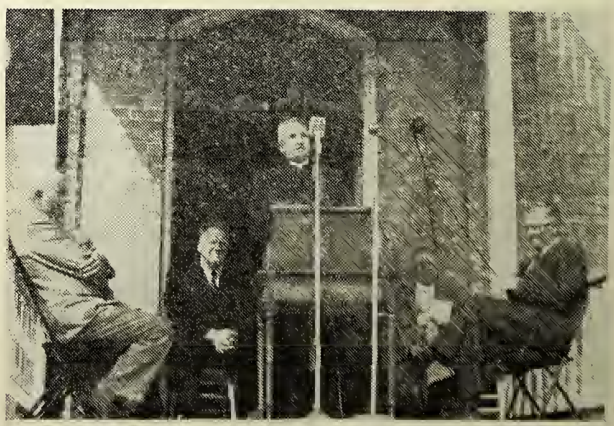
THE CHURCH'S ANSWER

What has the church to say in the face of this chronic illness which threatens our very existence? She could say nothing and confine her efforts solely to the preaching of the simple gospel; many sincere Christians feel that way. It would be easy to ignore the desperate need of our imperfect society and do nothing about it except offer a cure for our basic necessity, and forget the many closely related disorders.

However, when the great Head of the church, our Lord Jesus Christ, was on earth, He spoke loudly against the social evils of His day. In delivering the charter to the church in the Sermon on the Mount, He charged us to give two coats to him who takes the first one; if compelled to go a mile, volunteer the second. In principle we should control violence with love, greed with generosity, and injustice with equity.

When the people interrogated John the Baptist, he emphatically told them they should give fifty per cent of their goods to the destitute and hungry. He even went so far as to tell the army to disassociate itself with violence and avarice. He dared to invade the precincts of royalty and courageously warned Herod of the immorality of his domestic circle. True,

The Ailsa Craig farm house easily houses 20 boys.



E. J. Swalm delivering the dedicatory address at Ailsa Craig Boys Home.

it cost him his life, yet his method and purpose offer a twentieth century challenge.

While it is easy to say too little regarding the cancerous sores of our age, yet it is easier to say too much. The church has suffered from both errors during her history. She can become partisan to radical groups and abet national socialism which exists in some countries in Europe. The church can become meddlesome, oratorical, and inflammatory, creating disrespect for law and order. Between the extremes of a church that is silent and a church that is garrulous we should try to interpret the teachings of the Word of God on questions which rend society.

JUSTICE, MERCY AND GOD

One of the prophets appropriately set the standard for our day as well as his own by saying: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God," Micah 6:8. In this great statement a threefold message is suggested.

First, "justice." We should be more concerned with conduct than property. Always endeavor to promote a square deal. Justice is the reign of law. Since the church is the conscience of the state, she, above every group, should teach people to behave themselves, to exercise restraint, to give and take—to plainly practice the Golden Rule. The church must stand for the dignity of law and the authority of the courts if we would have a respected order.

Second "mercy." Justice needs something additional. We need more than a square deal. We need mercy—that quality of spirit which cultivates good will, repudiates self and helps us to serve our fellow men impartially. This great virtue will have a fivefold effect:

(1) It will teach us the real truth about people and convince us that men, women, boys, and girls are precious, worth the noblest possible expenditure of our spiritual energy.

(2) It will create a new duty. We will imitate our Master of whom it is said, "He went about doing good." The church will become cognizant of 1 John 3:17. "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

(3) It will give a new inspiration. It will make the Lord's people tireless workers in behalf of the unfortunate. That is what gave birth to this project.

(4) It will give a new test of character. The basis of service is giving—not getting.

(5) It will supply a new and tender plea as the Apostle exhorted us to not love in word and in tongue but in deed and in truth. We will promulgate a practical religion, not be exercising philanthropy only, nor the indiscriminate use of alms, but by making people strong enough to do without them and by endeavoring to remove the stumbling blocks along life's rugged pathway.

Third "God." He is inestimably greater than either justice or mercy. We can never have right relations with each other until we have a right relationship with God. Capital and labor will never be on right terms until both are properly related to God. Our homes will never be as they ought until they are correctly related to God. He must be enthroned in every circle.

A widespread rebuilding of the old-fashioned family altar would make Ailsa Craig Boys Farm obsolete. Legislators as well as churchmen are saying this. A lawyer friend touchingly described to me his rescue from agnosticism and credited the major power to the influence of his godly mother's prayers so often heard in family devotions. He testified at her funeral saying, "The woman in this casket is my mother. To know her was to know Christ. I drifted far from her theology through the years but never became isolated from her prayers. I am serving notice on my friends today that I have returned to her religion." He has since joined his mother in Glory.

Since we will never have a perfect society, we will always need some of the social services such as this Farm provides, and we are very hopeful of its success. For that we pray.

God's Word Stands Above Man's Opinion

FRANK EPP*

Christians, who sincerely aim to follow Christ all the way, even in the most difficult situations, will regret that various leaders at church council meetings have spoken un-Christian answers on war and the present international crisis.

An outstanding educational leader, Allan A. MacRae, president of Faith Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, told the third plenary congress of the International Council of Churches:

"... unless the Western nations stir themselves from their lethargy, and proceed to use the temporary industrial and scientific advantage that is theirs and destroy communism, there is nothing human to stop the communist world revolution ... with the atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb that the free world has in its hands now, it could probably put an end to the menace of the Kremlin, with the loss of a comparatively few thousand men. Wait ten years, and millions will be killed on both sides, with the balance of power having shifted to the side of the slaves of the communist autocrats."

Also advocating "preventive war" was an editorial in United Evangelical Action, organ of the National Association of Evangelicals. The article was entitled "While Asia Burns."

General Douglas MacArthur has been proven a major prophet by the happenings in the Far East during recent months. His declaration that the issues joined there are primarily spiritual was basic. Compromise with atheistic communism has had a terrible fruitage. His strategy for overwhelming victory would have resulted in Asian peace by this time."

Another voice of the National Association of Evangelicals, Harold John Ockenga, a past president of the association, and president of Fuller Theological Seminary, refuted the peace teaching of the Bible, when he addressed the twelfth annual convention of the association in Cleveland:

"In my way of interpretation, and I say it with due regard to all who may disagree, the lifting today of pacifism before a monster such as this communistic philosophy which is governing hundreds of millions of people of the world is suicide and we ought not even to consider it. Indeed, from my interpretation of the Scripture it is not biblical."

The report of International Affairs from the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches gives some encouraging answers in its statement, but weakens to permit retaliation in self-defence:

"Lofty objectives so often invented to justify war cannot conceal the truth that its violence and destruction are inherently evil. Therefore, Christians in their respective countries, must not lend themselves to, but expose, this deceit.

"... we believe that any measure to deter or combat aggression should conform to the requirements of the United Nations Charter and Christians should urge that both the United Nations and their own governments limit military action strictly to the necessities of international security."

Christians will regret that leaders from these various church organizations, often classified as being fundamental, evangelical, and liberal in their turn, have compromised with the world and the state to utter such statements. It should be mentioned here, though, that Christian pacifists took exception to the statements of Dr. Ockenga, and also that other leaders at the World Council stood true to the Bible teaching on war. For this we are thankful.

Christians, who seek the Lord's will, in all things will not be confused by the opinions of men, whatever they may be. They will turn to the Bible for their guide to life. And as they do, they will come to the conclusion, that the Bible teaches the sinfulness of war, that where the commands of God and state conflict, men should obey God rather than men, and that Jesus taught His disciples by precept and example to become martyrs before they became murderers.

The Active Element

The Firestone Park Brethren Church was organized only six years ago. Eighteen charter members banded themselves together in order that a Brethren church should be located in Akron, Ohio. Of these charter members, 90 per cent of the wage earners were tithers. Others became tithers as they became adults or wage earners.

Because of this fact, finances have been no problem for this newly-organized Brethren church. All bills are met promptly, for most of the purchases are cash transactions. The church is paid for, and out of all debt except for a land contract on the parsonage held by the Missionary Board of the Brethren Church. This indebtedness is being liquidated at the rate of $50.00 a month.

Tithing is taught in the Women's Missionary Society, in the Laymen's Organization, in Sunday school classes and from the pulpit. Stewardship is considered as one of the cardinal teachings of the Scriptures. It is thus emphasized. Therefore, charter members and new members as they are added to the church are taught that stewardship is an active element in the Christian life.

It is evident that the exercise of Christian stewardship, which includes tithing, instigates zeal for Christian labor and promotes faithful and loyal church membership. Fruits of sincere Christian stewardship are visible in the lives of all who accept these principles.

FARTHER INTO THE NIGHT by Mrs. Gordon H. Smith, 247 pp., Grand Rapids, Michigan, Zondervan, $2.50.

In her earlier book Gongs in the Night, Mrs. Smith tells of the work she and her husband carried on as missionaries to the tribes-people of French Indo-China. Farther into the Night is an account of the work which was done during the five years following the period included in the former book.

Few authors have as much material for a captivating story ready-to-hand as lay before Mrs. Smith as she wrote this book. Living in a country which was in the state of civil war, being constantly in danger of attack by guerilla bands, and working with uncivilized tribes who lived in isolated, tiger infested jungles, provided all the material needed to produce a story that would keep the reader spellbound, and reading far into the night.

But, unfortunately, Mrs. Smith fails to make the best use of her material and the result is disappointing. Her account is too much like a statistical report. If instead of referring in a factual way to the many encounters they had with tigers, the many elephant-back trips they made into the interior, the many flights in their private plane, the numerous trips by convoy to Saigon, and the many meetings in the villages, she had selected only the outstanding and most exciting of these incidents, and given a moving account of the same, she would have produced a good story which would be widely read.

Calling All Shut-ins

Oh, all you shut-ins, sick abed,
Or helpless in a chair,
Who fear your lives are not worthwhile;
You have much time for prayer.
We who must spend our days in work
Wish for more time to pray;
For, oh so many need our prayers,
At home and far away.
The pastors, teachers, and pupils too,
And all who are distressed
By illness or by fears and cares,
Can through your prayers be blest.
Say not there's nothing you can do
While you are lying there;
The great vocation can be yours
Of intercessory prayer!

Flashes of Thought

Full Speed Ahead

Walter Gering

Those little footsteps—I recognized them immediately. Strange, is it not, how we learn to know people by their walk. Sitting in the church study with the doors closed, the sound of footsteps is often heard in the auditorium. Sometimes it is strangers who have stopped in to look at the building. At other times it is one of the workers or a frequent caller. Soon one begins to recognize people by the sound of their walk.

So too it is with this little fellow who frequently appears in the study. In his boyish glee, full of life, he makes his way about the building. Now he is in the choir loft with the organ which intrigues him so much; then again he is in the library paging through the books for children. Finally the sound of his steps nears the study and he appears at the door.

On this particular day it was the same. There was the sound of steps, a knock at the door and in he came, a welcome visitor bringing in a ray of sunshine. But I was hardly prepared for the lesson of the day. Placing a sheet of information into his hands I said: "Take this to your Daddy." With a grin brightening his face, he turned and literally ran full speed out of the door, around the corner to the library on the other side of the church. The sound of his barefoot feet across the auditorium was a thrill.

All was silent for a few moments. Then suddenly came the sound once again of rushing feet. Full steam ahead, he came dashing around the corner, bursting into the study. In his hand he held a letter. He had become our little messenger boy.

That same week we were engaged in a union community Missionary Conference. Day after day we had heard the appeal; mission fields around the world had been presented in word and film. And then came the thought: that is what missionaries are—they are God's messenger boys carrying the news to God's people. They have gone forth at His command, message in hand.

The same call comes to all of us, even though we never leave the home community. Each of us has been given the same message; the command is for all to obey. Would that we all could answer in the same spirit—full speed ahead with beaming face.

LORD, LET ME RUN FOR THEE

It is not so much the greatness of our trouble as the littleness of our spirit which makes us complain.

The Lordship of Christ Over Church and State

The following declaration was adopted by a theological conference held at Puidoux, Switzerland, in which a number of theologians from Lutheran and Reformed Churches in Europe met with representatives of the Historic Peace Churches (Brethren, Friends, and Mennonites) and the International Fellowship of Reconciliation. Denmark, England, France, Germany, Netherlands, Switzerland, and United States were among the countries represented.

(There has been virtually no discussion between theologians and pastors of the large Lutheran and Reformed bodies and the Historic Peace Churches since the first Anabaptist debates in the 1620's. The Puidoux meeting was thus an historic event of some importance, as is the fact that a considerable number of continental theologians have arrived at or are approaching a pacifist position. The fact that the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches at its recent meeting at Davos, Switzerland, directed a representative commission to study the implications of nuclear war for Christian faith adds timeliness to these developments.)

THE CHURCH AND PEACE

With thankfulness and rejoicing we report that we have discovered again in a concrete way that the unity of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ takes form as we listen together to Scripture, in a fresh realization of our common responsibility for faithful witness to our Lord and for service in His name in the world.

In spite of the variety of our ecclesiastical traditions and theological conceptions, we have found ourselves unanimous in affirming that our Lord expects from us today an obedience to His gospel which expresses itself through a self-sacrificing love for all men.

This love constrains us to action for justice and peace among men with all our strength, by every means compatible with the gospel, and therefore without recourse to war.

We believe that the Church, as it accepts the constraint of this love, will be inspired and enabled to commend the gospel by manifesting the neighborliness which transcends differences of race and class, and by carrying out across all national boundaries the work of compassionate service and of Christian evangelism of which our world stands in such need.

We shall be glad to share the resume of our discussions with any who are interested. We intend to continue our study of the theological problems which have engaged us at this conference, and we cordially welcome the co-operation of our fellow Christians.

Resume of the Puidoux Theological Conference

I.

1. From the witness of Scripture we learn that Christ is really Lord over both the Church and the world. The goal toward which God is working through the kingdom of His Son is the building up of the body of Christ; the meaning of history is in the redemptive work of the Church.

2. The Church's witness to and in the world is the proclamation of the Lordship of Christ as Savior, Servant, and Judge. This proclamation is embodied in the call to reconciliation, in works of love, and in the expression of God's claims upon the world.

3. Since God respects the "no" with which sinful man may respond to His work of reconciliation, the Church as the obedient body of Christ is the community of those whose "yes" to God's work distinguished them from the world. Their unity is a precursory sign of God's eschatological victory over the world, and therefore, of the provisional character of the State.

II.

1. The Lordship of Christ signifies for Christian ethics that the "good" is one; there are not two separate and unrelated realm or criteria in the Church and in the world.

2. In the common confrontation with Scripture, we receive directions whose authority is not that of a legal prescription but that of a reliable exposition of the meaning of obedience.

3. The relevance of these directions for the world and thus for the State is conditioned by the "no" of the world to God and also by the "yes" of the Kingship of Christ to both the world and the Church. The tension existing between the Church and the world is thus the duality of human freedom and not a static dualism; it cannot mean that God's command is irrelevant, but only that its relevance is mediate.

III.

1. War is always sin. It can never be considered as an instrument of order and thus it cannot be justified even as a mediate expression of the Lordship of Christ over the world.

*Readers of this statement in U.S. and Canada may address inquiries about the Puidoux Conference and similar work being done to Peace Section, MCC, Akron, Pa.

2. When the State wages war in spite of the witness of the Church against its use, the Church does not become silent, but rather continues to testify as to the way in which this violence is used. In its criticism of political events the Church will guide itself by criteria which translate into political terms the directives of the Word of God. These criteria ("middle axioms"), such as concepts of retributive and distributive justice, are valid measures for relative judgments, even though they fall short of the righteousness of God and therefore may not be determinative for Christian discipleship.

3. The Church's responsibility for peace and justice consists in her incarnation of God's reconciling initiative, in her own fellowship, in works of sacrificial service, in the promotion of understanding, in efforts to transform peacefully unjust social structures, and in the refusal of her members to participate in war.

With humility and repentance we recognize our past failure to obey our Lord faithfully; we seek to further study our responsibility for peace and commit ourselves to the witness and life of unmixed love.

Food Relief for Jordan

MCC worker John Horst of Los Angeles, Calif., is assigned to serve as a secretary and clerk to maintain records in connection with shipments of American Surplus Foods which are coming to Jordan to be distributed by the Christian Voluntary Agencies working in this area. In this article he explains some of the details in the planning which is necessary for such a program to effectively help the people who are poor.

A recent development in the material aid program for the poor and needy people of Jordan has been the availablitiy of certain U. S. surplus agricultural commodities. The governments of the U. S. and Jordan signed an agreement in July, 1954, providing for the duty-free entry and the payment by the Jordan government of all inland transportation and storage costs on three commodities—milk, butter, and cheese. The U. S. government would pay the cost of ocean freight and the voluntary agencies, to whom all the surplus foods were to be consigned would pay the costs of distribution.

It was agreed between the voluntary agencies concerned (Catholics, Lutherans, Church World Service, and Mennonites) that the planning and carrying out of the program should be a co-ordinated and unified effort to prevent overlapping of areas or inequalities of distribution. Consequently, a sub-committee was formed and a thorough survey of the country was made. It was concluded that approximately 25 per cent of the total nonrefugee population of Jordan should be included in this program. This amounts to about 285,000 persons. The entire country was divided into four areas which were assigned as the responsibility of the four participating agencies. On the basis of the needy population in each of these areas, the total amount of available food supplies have been allocated for distribution as follows: 20 per cent for the area covered by the Mennonites; and 26 2/3 per cent each for the areas covered by the Lutherans, Catholics, and Church World Service. The area assigned to the Mennonites includes Jericho, Shuneh, Dhiban, and the large desert area southeast of the Dead Sea.

Butter and cheese were the commodities decided upon for the Jordan area. The quantities involved would be 450 tons of butter and 900 tons of cheese each year, with distributions three times annually. It has more recently been decided that the surplus cheese is unsuitable for the Jordan program, and thus the shipments have been discontinued. Because of the severe drought conditions in many parts of Jordan this year, and the almost complete failure of the grain crops, the government requested that wheat and flour also be included in the surplus food program. The voluntary agencies agreed and placed orders for 12,000 tons of surplus wheat and flour annually, although this has not yet been released by the U. S. government for shipment to Jordan.

In addition to this program for the needy nonrefugees of Jordan, the voluntary agencies also agreed to supply UNRWA (United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees) with quantities of fats (360 tons per year) and cheese (900 tons per year) to be used for supplementary feeding of refugees in Jordan.

The first quantities of surplus foods for refugees were received and distributed by UNRWA in January, 1955. It was hoped that the distribution program for nonrefugees could be initiated by early 1955, but for various reasons — prolonged negotiations with the Jordan government and the need for detailed and extensive surveys—the program has been delayed. However, the agencies are planning to conduct their first distribution within the near future.

It is felt that this program of sharing of the material abundance of America with the needy people of foreign countries can be, when properly administered, an extremely worthwhile and significant contribution to the over-all relief program. It is an excellent opportunity for the American voluntary agencies to supplement their material aid programs, to benefit the impoverished people of Jordan and to promote friendly relations between the people of America and those of the kingdom of Jordan.

BOUNDLESS LOVE

If God were half as small as man,
He would not heed the plea
Of those who only come to Him
When tossed on troubled sea.

But in His all forgiving Love
He answers even those
Who only stagger back to Him
When stunned by crushing blows.

My Need for a Savior

PROGRAM HELPS FOR OCTOBER

My Need

PROGRAM NO. 1

A. Devotional Resources. Hymns from the Mennonite Hymnary which you can use in your program are "O for a Closer Walk With God," 197; "Alas! and Did My Savior Bleed," 108; and "In the Hour of Trial," 195.

Scripture passages illustrating the need of people for a Savior are Psalm 51 and Romans 1:14-25.

B. Leader's Introduction. Some of the basic questions we want to consider in these programs are: Why does the Church exist? Why do we have religion? Why did God need to send His Son from eternity into our world? What did God achieve through what seemed to the world as the death of a political offender on a hill outside a small city two thousand years ago? How does this event have any effect on me as I go to school or help on the farm or work in the factory?

Does God really love me? How can I know? If God loves me, can I love Him? And how can I show my love to God? Should I work with other people in serving God?

C. An Outline for a Talk on "The Effects of Sin." Sin brings guilt. This means we feel that there is something wrong with life. Often we don't know just what it is. We feel uncomfortable in the presence of good. In fact, it can trouble our body as well as our minds. Many physicians agree that 50 per cent or more of man's illness is mental or spiritual in origin.

Sin brings a sense of separation. We feel as though there is a wall that keeps us away from our friends and the rest of people. Somehow we never get to know them. But worse than this is the fact that we feel separated from God. At first we don't let this bother us. We think we can be happy without God. But then we find happiness and peace slipping away from us. We may not know why there is no harmony in our lives and why everything frustrates us. It is because we have shut ourselves off from God.

Sin brings suffering. Not all suffering is caused by sin; but all sin causes suffering. The individual sinner may suffer directly for his sin, or it may cause another person misery. Falling from a forty story building brings with it some direct consequences. Venereal diseases bring suffering to the lives of others as children feel the effects of the sins of their parents.

Sin brings weakness of will. Giving in to sin brings greater weakness. It is the reverse of "each victory will help you, some other to win." Drifting becomes easier once you are carried by the stream. No longer are we able to do the right thing as easily as before; we don't even have much desire to do good. "That which I would not, I do" becomes our experience because part of us really does want to do it.

D. Studying what the Bible says about "Sins of Omission." We may feel that we are fairly good because we have not committed any "big" sins like robbery, adultery, or murder. But pride also is a serious sin. And things left undone have the effect of sin on our lives.

Before the program you may write the following references on slips of paper and give them to various members of the group. Ask them to be prepared to read the verses at the meeting and tell what this passage has to say about sins of omission.

These are some of the references you should study: He passed by on the other side, Luke 10:31, 32; the buried talent, Matthew 25:14-30; no oil in the lamps (the foolish virgins), Matthew 25:1-13; "and ye fed me not," Matthew 25:41-46; hearing sayings and doing them not, Matthew 7:24-29; the rich young ruler, Mark 10:17-22; the rich man and Lazarus, Luke 16:19-31; Pilate washes his hands, Matthew 27:15-25; Simon's hospitality, Luke 7:36-50; nine lepers and one, Luke 17:12-19; what Jerusalem wouldn't do, Matthew 23:37-39; unfruitful branches, John 15:5-6; and Peter's denial, Luke 22:54-62.

After this study of some of the passages of the Bible you can discuss with the group some areas in which we sin by leaving things undone. Have we helped a friend when he was in trouble? Are we loving to those who are unlovely? Have we been as interested in other people's welfare as our own? Have we withdrawn from the "world" and closed our eyes to the needs of people? Have we been witnessing of Christ to people in every way we can? What are some other things we omit?

F. Report of a Conversion. It would be helpful to have someone report on the conversion experience of some well-known person like Dwight L. Moody, Augustine, or Francis of Assisi. Your church library may have books that can give you this information.

G. Time for Personal Decision. At the close of this meeting or the following program you may want to give time for individuals to review their relation to Christ. This can be a quiet time of meditation or silent prayer when members of the group have time to examine their lives and purpose to follow Christ.

ABOUT THE PROGRAM HELPS

These program helps on Salvation were prepared and distributed by the Young People's Union a number of years ago. Because these are now out of print we present part of them here in revised form. Edith Claassen Graber was the writer.

My Savior

PROGRAM NO. 2

A. Devotional Resources. Hymns from the Mennonite Hymnary to use in your worship service are "I Lay My Sins on Jesus," 444; "I Know Not How That Bethlehem's Babe," 99; and "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," 106.

Scripture passages that speak about salvation are Galatians 2:15-21 and John 3:1-17.

B. Leader's Introduction. The leader should review some of the questions raised in the introduction in the first program. Review also some of the things learned at this meeting about the nature of sin and man's need.

C. An Outline of a talk, "God's Love and Holiness." God can best be described by two adjectives, holy and loving. Both are a part of His nature. Because He is holy, He cannot fellowship with sinful creatures. Evil is so completely foreign to His nature that He "cannot stand it."

But God is not content to sit by and watch His creatures ruin their lives. For His nature is love as well as holiness. He loves men so deeply that He spares nothing to win them back from their own erring and self-willed ways.

Because He cannot take sinful creatures to himself as such, there has to be some way in which to make men "right." The method God uses is to find some way in which sin can be paid for, and God and man reconciled.

Sometimes we emphasize love more than holiness. This seems to make sin not too serious and makes God a kind of Santa Claus who gives endlessly without requirements. Sometimes we overemphasize holiness and make God so stern and sin so black that there seems to be no hope. It helps to keep both emphases together. God is holy and cannot fellowship with sinful men. God is love and does all He can to rescue men from their fallen state.

D. An Outline of a Talk, "God's Method." At Christmastime we celebrate the truth that "God so loved the world that He gave. . . ." This is the Incarnation. It was the method that God used to save men. The word Incarnation means "becoming flesh," menschwerdung. It is astounding that God would become man, that He would leave His unlimited existence to "take on the likeness of sinful flesh."

But this is what happened when Jesus came to our world to show us what God is like. Jesus showed this throughout His life through His supreme concern for people and their needs. He showed it still more by His death. Calvary alone shows the lengths to which God was willing to go to bring His people to himself again.

That God, the living, eternal God who made heaven and earth, was willing to come to earth and die in the way that a common criminal dies may sound sacrilegious. But we can be eternally grateful that the love of God was great enough to go to these lengths.

The Old Testament teaches us that there must be suffering for sins. The New Testament tells us that this has been done. Through God's suffering for our sins in Jesus Christ (for "I and the Father are one") these sins have literally been paid for. No sin is beyond forgiveness if man will but accept the forgiveness which has already been achieved and is waiting.

The blood of Christ was shed. His life was given. We need to be restored into the fellowship with God. We have destroyed the fellowship, but cannot restore it. God has provided the means of restoration. But we are still with our God-given free will. We can accept or reject.

If we reject, all the work of God is for naught on our behalf. We are lost.

If we accept we are again in fellowship. We have been found by Him for whom we were made. And as we give ourselves to Him we find that we are in harmony with Him who is directing all things and who will finally bring all things to His victory.

E. A discussion on "What Is Faith?" The following points could be used by several people in a panel or group discussion. Each person might examine one or two of the points given below. In a discussion between two people, one might speak on what faith is and the other on what faith is not.

Faith is not the following four things, although faith is closely related to them.

It is not church loyalty. Does being born in a Mennonite family make me a Christian? Perhaps I am better morally than someone born in the slums or better than someone who has never known a church. But is this enough?

It is not theological beliefs. I may believe that Christ is the Son of the living God and yet be lost. What part does acceptance and discipleship have in Christian experience?

Faith is not religious emotion. Some people go through an emotional experience in a public service, but their lives remain unchanged. Does an emotional experience make a person a Christian? Is an emotional experience necessary?

Faith is not moral earnestness. In going to the medicine cabinet and drinking from a bottle I may be sure that I am taking cough syrup. Yet if I am really drinking poison, my sincerity does not stop me from suffering the consequences.

Faith is the acceptance of God's forgiveness in such a way that I put away sin. Faith means that I have set up a relationship with God in which I have contact with Him. I entrust my life to Him. I seek direction for life in prayer. Faith is giving myself to God for a life of discipleship. This has sometimes been called nachfolge Christi.

Faith is giving myself in repentance, prayer, and discipleship.

F. Personal Decision. If you did not take time at your last program for a period of personal decision you may wish to do so at the end of this meeting.

Members of this year's Booster Committee are Mrs. Dean Niswander, chairman, Milt Edwards, and Arthur Schumacher.

Doris Diller, '29, will be the speaker at the Homecoming Banquet in Founders' Hall on October 15, at 6:00 p.m. Miss Diller has been engaged in cancer research at the Johns Hopkins University and has co-authored a textbook for nurses.

Four of Chicago's finest voices, blended into the Serenaders Male Quartet, will appear as the first concert series program of the season on Monday, October 17, at 8:00 p.m., in Bluffton's Ramseyer Chapel.

Fifty-four students were selected by director Earl Lehman to comprise this year's Vesper Choir. FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The annual Bible week was held early in fall this year to avoid the conflicts of an overfilled spring activity schedule. Rev. Lotus Troyer, pastor of the Meadows, Illinois, Mennonite Church, served as Bible week speaker. The evening meetings were held in Pioneer Hall and were open to the public. He also spoke in chapel each morning. The morning series was based on the Book of Job and each day questions raised in that book were discussed, especially those concerning life, death, and immortality. During the evening sessions he spoke on the subjects: "Foundations for the Christian Life," "Specializing in the Impossible," "Christian Unselfishness," "Things Worth while," and "Anywhere with Christ."

September 22 Cornelius Wall spoke at a meeting sponsored by the MCC to which all the Mennonite churches in the area were invited. He spoke of the work of the European Bible School.

After a year's trial the Student Association adopted a new constitution last spring. This aims to meet the peculiar needs of a Junior College with a six year class spread. It had been felt that the academy students were not as free to express themselves in an organization whose officers were largely college students as was desirable. As a result the Student Association was divided into an academy and a college organization. For matters in which both have an equal interest they function together. John D. Unruh, Jr., is the new president of the College Student Association and Joseph Wipf is the president of the Academy Student Association.

"Strangers at Home" has been selected as the academy play for this year. It is a three-act drama by Charles Divine. Miss Katherine Kaufman directs the production which has tentatively been scheduled for October 13 and 14.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

With the return of Marvin Dirks to the Seminary, after a year of leave of absence, he again took over the chapel choir. The choir is made up of students from Bethany and Mennonite Seminaries and serves at chapel services and other occasions.

Arrangements have been made this year so that it will be possible for student wives and staff members to take classes in the evenings. The Minister's Wife Class is held every Tuesday evening on the Bethany Campus, and is being taught by Dr. Paul Robinson. Rev. Marvin Dirks teaches a course in The Book of Acts on Thursday nights at the Mennonite Seminary.

On Monday night, Sept. 19, the students gathered for their first student-discussion period. The discussion centered around what activities we as students would like to engage in during our stay here at the Seminary. It was an effort to determine what activities would lead to a deepened fellowship with one another and would permit us to grow spiritually.

MCC news & notes

DIRECTOR OF HEEREWEGEN VISITS U.S.

Brother Alexander van Gilse, leader of the Dutch Peace Center at Heerewegen, Holland, arrived in New York aboard the "S.S. Mauretania," Oct. 3. He will visit various Canadian and U. S. Mennonite communities this fall to enlarge fellowship and understanding between Dutch and American brethren.

Brother van Gilse is a leader in the peace movement among the Dutch Mennonites. He is chairman of the "Peace Bureau" whose function in C. O. service parallels that of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors in the U. S. in giving counsel to C. O.'s subject to draft. He also edits the monthly paper of this group, "Doopsgezinde Vredesgroep," which brings the latest information on peace developments and activities to its members. Outside of the U. S. and Canada, the Dutch Peace Group represents the most active Mennonite group facing and struggling with the question of our historic nonresistant position.

At present Brother van Gilse is also pastor and leader of Heerewegen, the Dutch Conference Center sponsored jointly by Mennonite Central Committee and the Dutch Mennonites. Heerewegen offers individuals and groups the opportunity to vacation and rest at a home where there is spiritual counsel available. The Peace library is also located at Heerewegen and various conferences—for youth, for peace groups, for international meetings of German and Dutch Mennonites—are held here. This, plus having two MCC workers on the Heerewegen staff offers rare opportunity to strengthen the ties of genuine Christian fellowship between individuals and the church, between various churches, and between Dutch and American Mennonites.

Although he is one of the younger ministers in the Dutch Mennonite Church, Brother van Gilse has served as pastor at Joure, in Friesland, and Amersfort before becoming full time pastor and director of Heerewegen. He is married and the father of four children. His visit to America will end Dec. 13, allowing him to return to Holland in time to spend Christmas with his family.

TWENTY-SIX MEMBERS OF HOLY LAND TOUR

Twenty-six brethren and sisters from Canada and the U.S. will participate in the MTS tour of Europe and the Holy Land this fall.

Under the leadership of Tour Conductor Gideon Yoder, this group will visit Europe, historic home of the Mennonite Church, with its great scenic beauty and rich heritage. They will visit the MCC and PAX units in Europe. They will proceed through Italy and Egypt to the Holy Land, then back through Greece, Italy, and France.

Brother Gideon Yoder is professor of church history and religious education at Hesston College, Hesston, Kan. He will direct worship services and Bible study while on tour, help to point up historical significance as they visit Europe, and bring church and biblical history to enrich the experience of "walking where Jesus walked."

This is the fifth consecutive tour which Menno Travel Service has arranged specifically for Mennonites who would like to tour Europe and the Holy Land. The group sails from New York aboard the "Queen Elizabeth" Oct. 12, and are scheduled to return Dec. 14.

PAX MATRON FOR ENKENBACH

Anna Ewert, Bingham Lake, Minn., sailed Oct. 3, for Germany where she will serve two years as PAX matron at Enkenbach. Anna is the daughter of the D. H. Ewert's and she is the fourth member of the family to serve in the Mennonite Central Committee program overseas. Anna is a member of the Mennonite Brethren Church at Mt. Lake, Minn.

TWO WORKERS JOIN MCC IN JAVA

Wilbert Shenk, Sheridan, Ore., and Lena Miller, Rittman, Ohio, sailed Oct. 3 on the first lap of their journey to Java. The "S.S. Maasdam" will dock in Rotterdam about Oct. 12; they will await the arrival of their visas in Holland and then proceed to Java.

Wilbert will assist in the youth work among the Javanese and general work of the MCC unit and Lena, a registered nurse, will do nursing in the two mobile clinics and the hospital.

Wilbert has attended college at Hesston, Kan., and Goshen, Ind. He is the son of Kenneth Shenk's, Sheridan, Ore.

Lena, daughter of Solomon Miller's, Rittman, Ohio, is a member of the Crown Hill Mennonite Church, Rittman, Ohio. She took her nurse's training at Lancaster, Pa., General Hospital and has worked in the obstetrical department at the Wadsworth, Ohio, Municipal Hospital for the past two years.

MCC WORKERS SAIL FOR AUSTRIA

The "S.S. United States" carried two MCC workers to Austria when it sailed from New York Sept. 30. Irene Bishop, Perkasie, Pa., will serve as director of MCC in Austria, and Clarence Sakimura, Grantham, Pa., will help with the material aid distribution.

Irene is returning to Europe for her third term and seventh year. She first sailed for a two-year term in Europe in 1946. She sailed again in the fall of 1948, and this time she stayed until the fall of 1954. While on furlough this past year she has showed slide sets and presented the MCC work in Europe to many congregations in the East.

Clarence Sakimura goes to Europe with a peculiar understanding for the suffering of refugees. He and his family were one of the many Japanese families in California who lost their home and florist shop and most of their belongings when the government moved them to camps in Arizona following Dec. 7, 1941. After nearly two years in makeshift army barracks in the deserts of Arizona, the family moved to Michigan. Here this Buddhist family had their first contact with Christians when one family gave them a box of food for Christmas, and another family took them along to church every Sunday. After the Sakimura's became Christians the local Brethren in Christ minister told them of the need for a gardener at Messiah College in Grantham, and the Sakimura's moved there. Clarence attended the Messiah College and Wheaton College, and last year he taught part time at Messiah.

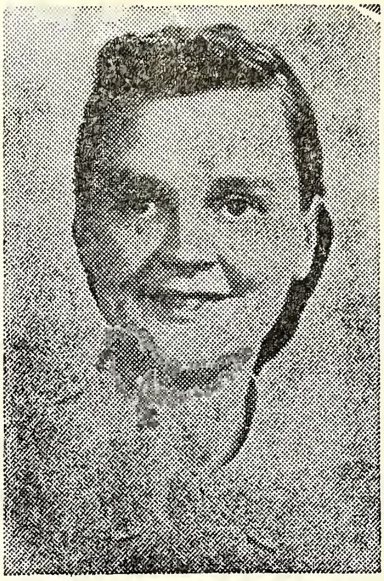
Writes Book About Mennonites



Barbara Claassen Smucker (Mrs. Don. E. Smucker), has just written a book for boys and girls, Henry's Red Sea, which is the thrilling story of experiences of the thousand refugees who were stranded in Berlin in 1946. This is the group which had the miraculous escape from Berlin, engineered by Peter and Elfrieda Dyck, whom we find in the story. Many of our churches have heard the Dycks relate this story in our churches. Here we have it graphically told for the younger readers.

But readers will not be limited to boys and girls, for this dramatic account will be read with much interest by the adults as well. Sunday schools and churches will want this account based on authentic Mennonite history for their libraries.

Mrs. Smucker, the mother of three children, is a graduate of the school of journalism of Kansas State College, and has had various experiences in writing. A more detailed review of the book will follow later.

ON THE WING

I watched a little group of birds
As they flew south today;
And wondered if I'd want to leave
My home each year that way.

They didn't seem a bit perturbed,
As heavenward they soared;
I guess they knew their journey
Was guided by the Lord.

And as I saw them winging by,
Somehow I seemed to know;
That where He chose to lead me
I, too, would want to go.

If only we will trust in Him,
Peace to our hearts He'll bring;
And troubles like a bird in flight
Will soon be on the wing.

Ordination Service

The ordination of Daniel J. Graber to the gospel ministry will take place Sunday afternoon, Oct. 23, at 2:30 p.m., at the Silver Street Mennonite Church, Goshen, Indiana.

Mr. Graber is a graduate of Bluffton College and is now in his final year of study at Mennonite Biblical Seminary, from which he is to receive the B.D. degree next spring upon completion of his work. He is also serving as pastor of the Silver Street Mennonite Church. His home church is the Eicher Emmanuel, Wayland, Iowa.

An invitation is herewith extended to all to attend this service to fellowship together and with the Lord.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. Psalm 1:1, 2

OUR WILDERNESS STRUGGLES

Jesus' acute struggle against the various temptations in the wilderness causes us to realize that perhaps we do not struggle against some of the common temptations as heroically as we ought. The great choices He made in the wilderness set the tone for His whole life. He would not merely feed hungry people material food and allow their souls to starve. He would not try to impress men with the merely spectacular or use miracles to save himself. He refused to compromise one iota with evil to make life more comfortable for himself.

Do we battle these temptations? Are we tempted to compromise a bit with our conscience so that we may have greater material success? Are we satisfied to meet only the material needs both of ourselves and others, and neglect the deeper hungers of the soul? Are we tempted to live a showy, popular life instead of turning our backs to selfish aims and give our best to the deeper claims of Christ?

It may be that these problems cause us no struggle. Perhaps we simply follow the path of least resistance and sense no vital conflict between the material and the spiritual. Where there is no wilderness struggle there may be little spiritual life. The Christian life is not free from sharp temptations, but it is free from the power of sin if we work through such temptations and come out on the Lord's side.

SCHOOL DISCIPLINE

The article in this issue on discipline in the schools may arouse some discussion. At least one former teacher met with this summer stated that he gave up the profession of teaching because he could not reconcile the idea of nonresistance and the apparent need of discipline in the schoolroom. To him, the theory of love and that of discipline did not match, so rather than compromise his conscience he decided to give up teaching.

Theories have a way of swinging from one extreme to another. Where formerly there had been rigid iron discipline with children, the idea swung to the other extreme of allowing full self-expression with no restraint lest we "frustrate" (that much over-worked word) them. But indications now are that we have gone too far in the direction of nondiscipline. No doubt somewhere between the two extremes lies the right solution. For surely discipline has a large place in life, as the undisciplined child will soon learn when he meets up against the world and the laws of nature. Discipline is a perennial problem in home, in school, and in church, and deserves thorough study.

WHAT DO WE FEAR?

To note how the military minded are trying to frighten us with the prospects of an enemy attack we might shudder with fear. But by taking a sane view of world events and attitudes, we might well ask whether much of such fear is not deliberately stirred up to carry through a heavy program of military power.

In listening to a world reporter commenting recently on the possibilities of a Third World War with its terrible consequences, it was heartening to have him say that, in his opinion, war is not in the picture. Every nation knows of the terrible consequences that might result from any attack. No nation is willing to risk starting such a catastrophy which might annihilate the inhabitants of the earth. We sincerely hope he is correct.

Is it too much to hope for that national leaders will finally come around to the truth that churches have been trying to state all along; that the way to world peace is not by increasing military power but by increasing the power of good will and unselfish sharing? Think what could be done with the price of one bomber or one mighty nuclear weapon! Think what could be accomplished for good with the money spent on machines of destruction that are obsolete before they are finished!

If a minority feels at times that it's hopeless to convince the majority of the ways of God, let us remember that any minority with God is a majority. We need to keep working and teaching and praying and witnessing to the truth of love in God. This is no time to hide our light, but to put it out where its beams may illuminate the truth of God.

WOMEN AND THE CHURCH BOARD

From the recent survey of churches in the General Conference one learns that the Church Board is an important part of the organization in 96 per cent of our churches. But there is a great deal of variation in the makeup of that Board. In one-fourth of the churches the deacons are not a part of the Board, and trustees are members in only slightly over half of the congregations. Sunday school superintendents are members in a little over a third of the churches. But the women's organizations are represented in only 11 per cent of the churches.

As important as is the work of the women in any church, would it not seem that they would be entitled to a much larger percentage of representation? Usually the women's missionary organization is the most active group in the church. Since mission work is one of the chief functions of a church it would seem that it should have fuller representation.

There may still be men who doubt the ability of the women to function on such a Board in spite of the fact that women are usually more enthusiastic about church work in general than men. Could it be that the men want the jobs for themselves, or that they still cling to the old idea that the women must be kept down? Would it not seem logical for at least the president of the women's organization to be represented on the official Board? Church meetings might well consider these questions.

Is There a Future in Material Aid?

The churches in West Berlin have found that the refugees who daily flee East Germany to crowd in temporary refugee quarters have great spiritual emptiness. The Evangelische Kirche (Protestant state church of Germany) has organized a ministry to refugees. In this ministry they use refugee laymen who have a strong and firm faith to contact other refugees with the gospel.

This is primarily a spiritual ministry, but the "lay-brothers," as they call themselves, have found that these refugees who live in hunger and great poverty will not listen to a gospel of "words without deeds."

While he was serving under PAX in Berlin, Marcus Smucker, Bird-in-Hand, Pa., gave some MCC supplies to this group to use in their project. The superintendent of these lay-brothers writes to us:

Dear unknown givers:

The Mennonite Central Committee has done a lot of good in all quietness through work projects, neighborhood centers and the distribution of relief goods. It gives us a deep feeling of gratitude that we too who are working for nonrecognized refugees have been helped by your organization.

But now I will have to explain first to our friends in America what nonrecognized refugees are. I am sure you know that since several years people from the Soviet Zone of Germany have been coming into the Federal Republic seeking shelter. Thus a continuous flow of people from the East to the West is to be registered. Most of them cannot flee to West Germany because they feel themselves under a special control. They seek refuge in West Berlin, "the isle in the Red Sea," which can be reached from the Soviet Zone rather easily. An average of 500 people register daily in West Berlin.

Here they have to prove that they have been in a special political calamity and danger. Then they are recognized and arrangements are made to bring them to one of the Laender of the Federal Republic, or they may remain in West Berlin. Often enough they have to wait for quite a while until they can find work and lodging in overpopulated West Germany. But still they have the hope to get a new start in life some day.

It is an altogether different matter, however, with those refugees who are not able to prove a special political oppression. They remain in West Berlin as nonrecognized refugees; have the right for asylum but not for work, lodging or voting. At the present time there are about 40,000 of these nonrecognized refugees living in West Berlin. A small portion is living in camps, but the greater part are in settlements which are built like apartment houses. Here each person is allowed a space of only 4 m. 2. Others live in a poorly furnished room, in basements, huts, or somewhere in the attic.

More than 80 per cent of all refugees are members of the Protestant church. They—more than other people in secure positions—need assistance and help from the Word of God. In the camps the camp pastors take care of the nonrecognized refugees. But it is difficult to reach those in the settlements and private lodgings. The nonrecognized refugees often feel bitter. They are as people without a country—outlaws, and only in a few cases do they themselves try to contact a church community.

Thus we have organized a group of lay-brothers who visit these people. Right now we have 30 lay-brothers who each take care of several church congregations. These lay-brothers are unemployed men, refugees, and pensioners themselves, but they are closely connected with their church and have a strong and firm faith. As representatives of the church they are often received with surprise and joy.

When leaving the East, the refugees could hardly save any of their property. Now if they live in private apartments they can only receive the very small amount of social security. Furniture, house equipment, underwear, and clothes—everything is missing. For quite a long time the refugees received their food from a central kitchen, and only a little pocket money was handed out to them monthly. They almost forgot how to handle money. Thus there is always a danger of spending too quickly the money they get. The lay-brothers find great material need among these refugees.

In all these cases the lay-brother cannot approach the people with Bible verses only. The treatment for soul and body cannot be separated. The people have to see and to feel that the Word of Christ's love and of charity is something real. Only then can the conversation about spiritual things be fruitful and credible. Only then can a real contact with the church congregation and with the gospel be possible.

Quite a large amount of clothing and food stuffs donated by the Mennonite Central Committee has enabled our lay-brothers to the most urgent needs.

People who are hungry and very poor have no use for a gospel of "words without deeds." The workers among refugees have found that gifts of food or clothing may open the way for spiritual ministry to these people without a country who face only a bleak future.

Biblical Discipline in Our Schools

LAURIE MITTON*

As teachers we are hearing constantly that we are being unchristian in our discipline. This is especially true in our Mennonite schools due no doubt to our biblical position on nonresistance and love. We hear such questions as these. How can a Christian teacher spank a child? How can a teacher be called Christian who sharply rebukes students? Is it right to punish students who are Christians and past the age of accountability? Should teachers not speak softly, smiling and try to lead children by example especially since children object to discipline? Is fear in the students a legitimate motivation to good behavior?

To answer these questions we will go to the Scriptures themselves, but in so doing we must watch one thing very closely. We must apply only verses that deal with the problem. Passages on nonresistance speak of our obligations as Christians to our society both Christian and non-Christian. Passages on discipline deal with an adult's relationship to children entrusted to his or her care. With this difference clearly in mind we can see that there is no conflict between biblical nonresistance and the biblical application of the rod of correction. It is necessary in this matter that we "rightly divide the Word of Truth." All quotations are from the Revised Standard Version.

Prov. 22:6, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The world disagrees with this and teaches that the child should be permitted to develop along lines suited to his own personality. Any restraint placed on the child will lead to frustration. This position is completely contrary to the Word of God that places the responsibility of training a child upon his own parents or other adults to whom part of the training has been entrusted.

Should a child be spanked? Read Prov. 22:15, "Folly is bound up in the heart of a child, but the rod of discipline drives it far from him." Prov. 23:13-14, "Do not withhold discipline from a child; if you beat him with a rod, he will not die. If you beat him with the rod you will save his life from Sheol." Note this last point and consider it well. A good spanking has saved many children from the terrible destruction of hell. Woe to the parent or teacher who is guilty of neglecting the rod of discipline. Consider also Prov. 5:22-23 on this point. "The iniquities of the wicked ensnare him, and he is caught in the toils of his sin. He dies for lack of discipline, and because of his great folly he is lost."

Is it proper for a Christian teacher to speak sharply to a student? Read Prov. 19:15. "The rod and reproof give wisdom, but a child left to himself brings shame to his mother." The Bible teaches more methods of discipline than the rod. Some students need the rod, others need reproof, still others need both. Reproof means, "to rebuke with sharpness and often with abruptness." This dictionary definition is in agreement with the Hebrew word used here "towkachath" which means "sharp chastisement by words." Such biblical reproof is neglected by modern teachers. As a result our reform schools are full of young people who could have been saved if the teachers had been more firm in their speech. Many mothers have been brought to shame because teachers were afraid they might "frustrate" the child.

How then may we expect the child to accept the use of the rod and reproof? That depends to a large degree on the parents. Do the parents accept this biblical position? If not you cannot expect the child to. Such parents need to ponder the following two verses. Prov. 10:17, "He who heeds instruction is on the path of life, but he who rejects reproof goes astray." Prov. 12:1, "Whoever loves discipline loves knowledge, but he who hates reproof is stupid." If the parent will grasp this biblical truth and teach it to the child then we can expect the child to receive correction in the right spirit. To accomplish this desirable end parents and teachers must work without ceasing. The child's eternal welfare, not our own pet opinions, is at stake. May we not be weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Some no doubt still feel that to reprove a child or to whip a child is not consistent with love. Read Prov. 13:24, "He who spares the rod hates his son, but he who loves him is diligent to discipline him." We are in need of more diligence in this matter, for that proves our love. Also read in Rev. 3:19, "Those whom I love, I reprove and chasten; so be zealous and repent." It is true that discipline must be motivated by love but it is also true that if there is no discipline then according to God's Word there is no love. As teachers we do not like to discipline because we know the child and parent will often claim we do not love the child. We also know that in future years the child will return and thank us for the whipping he received. Pupils do not see love because they are primarily concerned with their own discomfort. Years later after Christian maturity sets in they will praise God for their former punishments.

So far I have been quoting mainly from Proverbs which contains the wisdom of the wisest man that ever lived, King Solomon. I would also like to point out several striking passages from the New Testament that have a bearing on our problem. 1 Tim. 5:20, "As for those who persist in sin rebuke them in the presence of all, so that the rest may stand in fear." Fear is a legitimate motivation to good behavior. Titus 1:12-13,"One of themselves, a prophet

Things As They Are

The past few months have witnessed a great change in the legal status of Protestantism in Colombia. Decrees restricting the free expression of the gospel have followed each other in rapid succession.

Under the former conservative regimes of Ospina and Gomez from 1946 to 1953 evangelical groups suffered few legal restrictions although violence was rampant and many government officials were guilty of arbitrary treatment of non-Roman Catholic Christians.

With the military coup d'etat of June, 1953, many observers predicted a new day for the evangelical cause since the religious hierarchy had supported so completely the former corrupt Gomez administration. But loyalty shifts were immediate. The dominant church experienced no difficulty in maintaining and even strengthening her position at the expense of minority groups.

Protestants began to forsee difficulties when the new military president told a group of visiting newsmen that Colombians, not being savages, hardly needed missionaries. Later Protestants were accused of creating a spiritual void by undermining confidence in the Roman Church, a void which Communistic ideology, according to the president, is quick to fill.

The first decree aimed at evangelical work, dated January 28, 1954, limited Protestant evangelistic activity to approximately one-third of the land area of Colombia. The remainder of the national territory, under an agreement with the Vatican, was to be the exclusive spiritual domain of the Roman Church despite the fact that Protestants, both nationals and foreigners, had been working these areas for years with numerous schools and churches. Since that date, even in the area not considered Roman Catholic mission territory, it has been illegal for evangelicals to distribute Christian literature or engage in personal evangelism outside of church buildings. Added to this, permits for the erection of Protestant chapels and churches are frequently refused.

The decree of June 3, 1954, stated that Protestant pastors must notify the local authorities of the time and place of their religious gatherings. This was followed by another executive order which makes it a serious crime to state anything which can be interpreted as insult calumny. This measure effectively silenced the voice of the oppressed.

More recent decrees have resulted in the curtailment of Protestant educational efforts in Colombia. Since February all private schools are required to have a government license. Despite a population which can boast only 49 per cent literacy the requirements for this license are of a nature that few if any private schools can meet them. Thus far no Protestant school has been granted a license. Many have been closed.

The most recent decree dated July 14 states that non-Catholic schools which accept within their student body children from Roman Catholic homes must employ a teacher of religion approved by the local priest. Without bowing to this infringement of freedom, no private school can continue to operate. Recognizing that for the Roman Catholic Church all children baptized in infancy, regardless of later convictions on the part of their parents or themselves, are considered Roman Catholics, the future of Protestant education in Colombia looks very dark indeed.

Despite these growing restrictions it is still possible to carry on a positive witness for Christ in many areas. This day may soon end!

IS THERE A FUTURE IN MATERIAL AID?

If only all the unknown donors could see with how much joy and gratitude everything is accepted. The material gifts should never become the center of our work, but they can become a sign pointing out the possibility of starting life anew under God's order. Especially the nonrecognized refugees—who have lost everything they had owned and for whom the future is dark and uncertain—are looking for a firm and sound basis on which they can build a new life.

In past centuries Mennonites have quite often been refugees themselves because of religious oppression. Also, after the end of the second world war many Mennonites had to leave their German communities in Poland and Russia, East and West Prussia. If they have found again new homes and congregations in other parts of the world, they will certainly remember those people who are only at the beginning of a long and hard way, who do not yet know what the future will bring them. We wish that all the givers of the MCC could feel some of the deep gratitude and the good wishes with which the nonrecognized refugees of Berlin—whom we are able to serve here through your relief work—remember them. We wish that they too, could feel some of the happiness and consolation which comes from the assurance of belonging to the great congregation of the children of God.

Parables

I took a little child's hand in mine. He and I were to walk together for a while. I was to lead him to the Father. It was a task that overcame one, so awful was the responsibility. And I talked to the little child only of the Father, I painted the sternness of the Father's face, were the child to displease Him. We walked under tall trees. I said the Father had power to send them crashing down, struck by His thunderbolt. We walked in the sunshine. I told him of the greatness of the Father who made the burning, blazing sun.

In the twilight we met the Father. The child hid behind me, he was afraid; he would not look up at the face so loving, he remembered my picture; he would not put his hand in the Father's hand. I was between the child and the Father—I wondered. I had been so conscientious, so serious.

I took a little child's hand in mine. I was to lead him to the Father. I felt burdened by the multitude of things I was to teach him. We did not ramble. We hastened on from spot to spot. At one moment we compared the leaves of the trees, in the next we were examining a bird's nest. While the child was questioning me about it, I hurried him away to chase a butterfly. Did he chance to fall asleep, I awakened him, lest he should miss something I wished him to see. We spoke of the Father often and rapidly. I poured into his ears all the stories he ought to know but we were interrupted often by the wind blowing, of which we must speak; by the coming out of the stars, which we must needs study; by the gurgling brook which we must trace to its source.

And then in the twilight we met the Father. The child merely glanced at Him. The Father stretched out His hand, but the child was not interested enough to take it. Feverish spots burned on his cheeks. He dropped exhausted to the ground and fell asleep; again I was between the child and the Father. I wondered. I had taught him so many, many things.

I took a little child's hand in mine to lead him to the Father. My heart was full of gratitude for the glad privilege. We walked slowly. I suited my steps to the short steps of the child. We spoke of the things the child noticed.

Sometimes it was one of the Father's birds; we watched it build its nest, and we saw the eggs that were laid. We wondered later at the care it gave its young.

Sometimes we picked the Father's flowers, and stroked their soft petals, and loved their bright colors. Often we told stories of the Father. I told them to the child and the child told them to me. We told them, the child and I, over and over again.

Flashes of Thought

Shattered Bells

Walter Gering

It was one of those lessons which all of us must learn sooner or later in life. At first the thought of the destruction of that beautiful glass bell seemed to be completely out of order. The children themselves objected and repeatedly questioned the procedure. That very morning as we met for the worship hour one of the boys anxiously asked: "Are we going to break that bell?" It was an audible expression of that which was in the heart of every child. For weeks they had been seeing the bell; it had become a very part of their affection. Why destroy it?

Yet it had to be done. In the presence of that anxious group the moment came. The hammer was raised high; a tense moment of silence followed and then it was all over. With one stroke of the hammer the bell was utterly destroyed. Nothing but shattered glass remained.

I was proud of those children. Surely they responded in a wonderful manner. You see—they had been bringing their coins for weeks. In far distant lands boys and girls had no opportunity to read the Bible; they had no Bibles. And these coins were to be used for the purchase of Testaments. It was a missionary expression on the part of these Sunday school children.

But that glass bell used as a bank—how they admired it! To be sure they wanted the children in distant lands to have a Testament. That was the reason for these coins which had been placed into the bell. But the beautiful bell; how they wanted to keep it. "Are we going to break the bell?"

The story of David and his offering to God in the presence of Araunah was recalled. The offer of Araunah was clear: take the field, the oxen, and the wood as a gift. Go sacrifice to thy God. What an opportunity for David to fulfill his obligation. Yet the words of the great King have been ringing down the corridors of time: "Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price; neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing."

Challenged by the example of the man of God the boys and girls made their decision. Buying Testaments for the needy children meant destroying the beautiful bell which they loved. Like a flash the little hands were lifted high. Yes, they were willing to give the costly thing. The hammer descended, the bell was destroyed—the money was released.

The Church i

AN

The purpose of this part of the paper certainly is not to give a detailed description of the organization of the church in these two areas. However, we do want to point to some general observations as related to our main purpose in writing this treatise—namely, to point to our concept of the church on our mission fields. Part of this will be done by way of observation.

The Church in India

The church is quite fully organized. The official name of the conference comprised of the eleven congregations on our mission field is "The Conference of the Hindustani General Conference Mennonite Churches."

The constitution of the conference is a lengthy document covering the usual items. Some aspects of the life of the church are more fully covered than is the case in most of our constitutions in the home land.

In Section Two, dealing with "Purpose," one finds this quotation: "Their purpose to help and encourage the congregations of this conference to become self-supporting, well-disciplined, evangelizing agencies so that ideal congregations may be established under the auspices of this conference. . . ."[1]

The constitution provides for conference ownership of property which, of course, is presbyterial polity.

The conference meets once a year and delegates are entitled to attend representing the slightly under 3,500 members at the rate of 1 to 50.

It should be pointed out that a congregation does not necessarily mean members living in the immediate vicinity of a church building. However, especially in the southern part of our field—Jagdeeshpur area—a congregation represents a large area. For example there are Christians in many villages in the Salem Congregation. It was our privilege while in India to visit some villages in each of the six congregational areas. Also, in the northern part of our field—Champa the center—we visited all congregational areas.

The control of the conference activity is in the hands of what is known as the Governing Body. Here are seventeen members — seven missionaries and ten Indians. This body has the responsibility to supervise the work of the committees, generally supervise the work of the conference and do the executive work of the conference. They have considerably more power than our conference executive committees in the United States.

During our stay in India we accepted an invitation to meet with the Executive Committee of the Governing Body. The secretary of the conference spent some time describing their organization. The main purpose of the sessions was to determine ways in which there might be a closer connection between the church in India and our churches in America and how they might become more autonomous.

The work of the conference is divided into committees. There are nine. A listing of them indicates the responsibilities which the Indians have assumed: Elders, finance, evangelistic, primary education, home mission, publication, management, nomination, auditing.

The Church Indigenous

The question is sometimes raised as to the speed with which the India church is becoming indigenous. There are mission groups which have taken a rather radical approach. They have, with suddenness, turned over the work to Indian Christians. In our mission a policy of gradualism has been pursued.

During our five weeks in India it was our privilege to visit many phases of the work of our churches. We saw small village groups gather for worship. We saw something of their inexperience, possibly veritable "babes in Christ." We saw their poverty. We also saw the larger churches. On several occasions we had the privilege to preach to over 500 persons.

One of the indices of a maturing local church situation was a meeting with the Champa church council. We met at their specific request. They had several items of concern to discuss. It was soon obvious that they had carefully thought through their problems—and they present very real ones. Just one problem was what to do with young people dismissed from the Leper Home. The Champa church is the one to which they come. How will they integrate these young people into their life? Since they are Christians, it is difficult for many of them to find farms or other employment. The Champa church council has only one missionary advisor on it.

The church is established in India. Pastors have been selected as shepherds of their flocks. Church councils have been elected to handle the many business and organizational matters arising. We participated in one ordination of an elder which was further evidence of the maturing church.

It is this writer's opinion that a policy of gradualism is the right one in turning over full responsibilities to the Indian church. That this raises problems is obvious. However, it seems normal. Step by step progress has been made. The decision of the Hindustani Conference is that by 1959 paid evangelism is to be eliminated. A detailed program has been worked out in cooperation with the missionary conference to help evangelists into places of self-support.

[1] The constitution can be found in Harold Ratzlaff's Master of Theology thesis entitled "Planting a Church in India," p. 188ff. This thesis is a thorough presentation of the progress of the General Conference Mennonite Mission in India leading to the "planting" of the church.

ia and Africa

NY*

A very significant development occurred in the fall of 1954. The Indian church has been granted the responsibility of call and recall of missionaries. They request the coming of a missionary with specific assignments. They make representations to the government of India.

The word we now use is "partnership." The missionary is not in India with a paternalistic attitude, but is assisting in the establishment of the church. In one sense it can be compared to U. S. Point 4. It is a spiritual Point 4.

If it will be possible to continue the step-by-step method of turning over the entire work to the Indian Christians as they are able to assume it, a very valuable chapter in modern missions will have been written.

This writer does not view with alarm the fact that the Indian church now is very much like our concept of presbyterial polity. In the future a swing might be made toward a modified congregational polity—which is probably what our General Conference Mennonite church now has.

The Church in Africa

The church is organized somewhat differently than in India. This section on Africa will be somewhat briefer than our treatment on India. There are some similarities which need not be repeated.

The process of turning over responsibility to the African has not gone as far as the process in India. One explanation given is that the church groups are generally "younger" and also that general educational standards in the Congo have not been on the level of India.

However, there is an African Church. The leaders of the churches are called assistant pastors. The missionary still has a strong hold on the church. The African assistant pastor does assume much responsibility and goes ahead with the leadership of the congregation.

The church in Africa is also organized in congregational areas. It appears in the earlier stages of mission work this is a strongly feasible method, although some do feel that in the future progress will be more rapid in the organization of village groups into congregations.

It was our privilege to attend a "regional" meeting in the Nyanga station area. The building in which this meeting was held was large enough to accommodate about 700 people. It was filled. People were present from many villages. They comprised a congregational area. They come together every three months for communion.

About fifteen evangelists brought in the offerings of the people during the past three months. This was counted and properly credited. Membership cards were examined.

The assistant pastor preached the sermon. Various groups sang. African hands distributed the elements of the Lord's Supper.

The African church has a busy program. They have midweek prayer meetings. As we discovered in prayer sessions, the Africans are "quick to be on their feet, brisk in their manner; earnest in their attitude. . . ."[2]

Rev. James Bertsche, missionary under Congo Inland Mission, in describing an African conference makes clear that the missionary is there "to guide and to suggest."[3] The process of increased responsibility being assumed by the native is being accelerated.

Discipline in the African church is rather rigid. In one year over 300 members were removed from the church rolls.

One of the distinctive aspects of church life in the Congo is a general agreement among members of the Congo Protestant Council, which includes most missions, that denominational names will not be transplanted in the Congo. Consequently our churches in the Congo do not have the word Mennonite in them. The official name of our mission is Congo Inland Mission. All churches are the Church of Christ in the Congo.

As might be suspected observers differ on the wisdom of this. Some with very strong denominational leanings feel it weakens their teaching program after conversion. However, our missionaries generally seem to feel that the policy is a good one. They feel that there is room for distinctive approaches. Actually, the attempt is not uniformity in church organization and program, but diversity bound together in unity. The purpose is to confront pagan Africa with the gospel under one name.

Also, it should be pointed out that the C.I.M. is unique in that it is composed of several Mennonite groups. On some questions of polity there would be some differences between these groups in the home land. Our impression was that whatever differences there are has not hindered a united witness in the Congo. We were deeply impressed in meeting missionaries from various Mennonite branches working in close harmony. Without previous knowledge of the groups to which missionaries belonged we could not have identified them.

One more point should be made regarding the Congo program. It is the amazing school program. The Congo church has a very great number of children and young people in it. This is a challenge and gives hope.

School of Talk

SARAH DYCK*

How can we tell good news to those who speak an unknown language? An unusual school gives God's ambassadors a key to unlock the puzzle for their speaking mission.

Americans laugh at the way the Canadians say "house," "out," and "hot." But Canadians are amused at the way the Americans say "hike" and "caught."

Although these differences aren't great, they can be noticed. I discovered that it is important to hear these things. And I also learned to produce these sounds and write them on paper accurately.

In preparation for my future work in Africa, the Congo Inland Mission asked me to attend the Summer Institute of Linguistics which meets every year in Norman, Oklahoma. It was an experience that I will never forget.

The studies are not easy. If you are looking for a holiday or an easy summer, don't go to the Summer Institute of Linguistics. But if you want to learn new and exciting things about the languages of the world, and along with all this technical information find a spiritual blessing, you will enjoy the work greatly, just as I did.

If you are allergic to tests as I am, you will find yourself under a constant tension. It seemed that we had tests for breakfast, dinner, and supper. You never knew how well you had done until your papers came back. Just because you made an "A plus" one day did not mean that you wouldn't get a "C minus" the next.

What did we study? Well, first of all, we learned the symbols for the sounds that have been found in the many different languages of the world. We had to know how to write the phonetic symbol and the technical name for new and familiar sounds. For example, the technical name for the letter "o" is "a voiced mid close back rounded vocoid with aggresive lung air."

Then we also had to draw face and sequence diagrams indicating what organs operate to make each sound.

*Missionary to the Belgian Congo

In the production of new sounds we had more fun. Sometimes I thought we would sprain our tongues or our glottis but we can report no casualties. Many tone drills and dictions were also given to train our ears to the many differences within a language.

In phonetics we were given data from foreign or hypothetical languages in which we had to chart the various sounds. We worked with word and sentence structure in foreign languages. Many hours were spent in the analysis of given data and what a thrilling experience it was when at last we detected a pattern in what had seemed a hopeless confusion at first.

All of these things and many more we studied that we might be trained to bring the gospel to those whose languages are unstudied. Linguistics help us to learn the unknown languages of the tribes of Africa and so enable us to speak to them of God's great love in Jesus Christ.

No Snow

Some time was spent on the problems that come up in the translation of the Bible. What would you do if the language of the people to whom you had gone had no word for the word "snow"? And there are tribes who have never seen snow and probably never will. What would you do with the familiar passage, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as snow"? Would you coin a new word which would have no meaning for them or would you take the liberty to change the passage to read, "they shall be very white"?

Quite a bit of time was spent on the technique of teaching people to read. We were shown how to teach the tribesmen to read. This can be done in a short time by using members of the tribe to teach their own people.

Many problems were discussed in our field problems class. Dr. Swadish, a well-known linguist, spoke to us on one occasion on the necessity of speed, the use of your sense of humor, and the effect of interesting imitative abilities in learning a new language. He stressed the importance of learning new languages in such a way that you can speak them without the slightest accent. That should be our aim and we should not rest until this has been accomplished.

Culture and Courtesy

Much time was spent on the problems relating to culture and Christianity. Kenneth Pike impressed upon us again and again the importance of being able to discern what is relevant to Christianity and what is only part of our culture. He had many pertinent problems from the mission field which he brought up for discussion.

The founder of the Wycliff Bible Translators spoke to us a number of times on the same topic. He emphasized the importance of courtesy in a foreign country and culture.

"Don't offend," he would say. "And if you have caused offense, ask pardon."

Be helpful in the market place; everywhere! Anything for love, and nothing by force.

Another question that this man of faith introduced was, "How far should a missionary go?" Should a missionary go to a social gathering when he knows that drinks will be served. He was able to quote some startling incidents which he himself and others had experienced when they had refused that which the nationals had offered as a sign of hospitality and friendship.

An anthropologist spoke to us on the different types of societies, such as the competitive, the cooperative, and the individualistic type. He then described a few different cultures in detail and after he finished we were asked to write on "the problems and the advantages that a missionary would encounter in entering these different cultures."

Enjoy People

Kenneth Pike tried to introduce as many aspects of missionary life to us as possible. We got a better insight into the work than we had ever had before. There are a few pointers that he gave us that I would like to pass on to you at this time. When you enter a new culture, he asked us to do these things:

Understand the people. Learn their way of thinking. It will also be to your advantage to realize and accept the fact that in every culture there is bound to be one, or more than one person, of higher mental caliber than you are. They need not have an education equivalent to yours but they will have a lot of insight and forethought that you don't possess. Recognize this and accept it. Try to channel these persons into the Christian faith, give them responsible work and more will be accomplished than you had ever expected.

Enjoy people. Don't just criticize them. Participate with them. Influence them. Show appreciation for them.

In other words, "Enter with a big heart." Never destroy culture but add new meaningful aspects to the cultural pattern of the people to whom you have gone and see if the useless and harmful won't become more meaningless. Praise the nationals wherever possible, and don't condemn until your people are ready for it. The kingdom of God is like yeast which spreads quietly without destroying. After all, the gospel is not a sledge hammer. So in all, be quick to see, quick to hear, slow to speak, and slow to act.

There was a great tendency for students taking this course to become discouraged. When I learned to know the members of the institute better, I felt so immature spiritually that at times it seemed as though I didn't belong there at all. But I also felt the lifting and helping power of God as never before. It is when we utterly despair in ourselves that Christ and His power emerge.

PENCIL POINTS

Just read about a kangaroo that had to go to a psychiatrist. It seems that nothing he did could make him feel jumpy.

Now, I don't know why Hoppy should have gone to all that bother. He could have saved the specialist's fee and had a free session with me. I could have found some things to make that Australian marsupial quake.

First we'd have a little seance in which I'd read the newspaper to him. Little wonder that he doesn't feel excited, because a kangaroo's brain is so small that he can't master the art of reading. But I'd set him off on a slow tremor with such headlines as "U. S. Battles Russia" and "Bootlegger Shoots Agent." Then I would build up the tempo of his bounce with a few "Kidnapping," "Assault," and "Murder" banners.

To bring his oscillation up to a fine fettle I'd send him for an auto ride with my high school friend, Joe Show. Hoppy will have to go alone because I'm still quaking from my last ride with this automaniac. Joe's all right, but because he feels a little inferior he tries to use his car to convince himself that he can make a mark in the world. I'm afraid it will be on someone's grave soon. He thinks I'm poultry-livered for questioning the wisdom of passing a line of cars on a curve, but I'd rather be a live chicken than a dead duck. A ride with Joe will give Hoppy a high frequency shake.

And just to push him through the supersonic barrier I'd make him program chairman of the youth group of the Last Mennonite Church. After making a series of assignments for a program to people who accepted them but never showed up, he should be vibrating steady.

These things should make Hoppy the bounder he used to be. But I'm sure they couldn't change our inner composure. While we certainly wish that the world would change, that show-off drivers would confine their exhibitionism to a hobbyhorse in the back yard, and that all our youth work would move smoothly, none of these things will give us the permanent wiggles.

They won't affect Hoppy because he's simple; and they won't bother us because we have a simple faith. Now, there's a point!

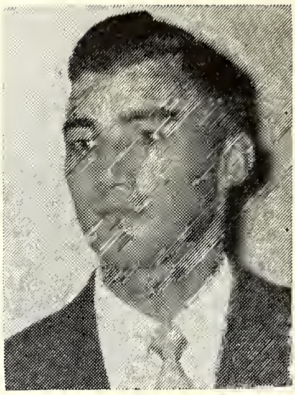
Meet the Presidents



Peter Kehler
British Columbia MYO

President of the British Columbia Mennonite Youth Organization is Peter Kehler, a graduate of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College and a member of the United Mennonite Church at Yarrow, B. C. He taught in the public schools of his home province for two years and is now pursuing his studies at Bethel College. With the help of his wife he prepared the 1955 YPU Prayer Calendar. The Kehlers are the parents of a young son called David.

Co-workers with Peter in the MYO are Abe Pankratz, Mission City, vice-president; Mardge Hiebert Wiebe, Abbotsford, secretary-treasurer; and Abe Neufeld, New Westminster, advisor. Other members of the executive committee include Henry Wiebe, Abbotsford; Gilbert Epp, Vancouver; John Duerksen, North Clearbrook; Frieda Fast and Art Kropp, Chilliwack; and Alvin Harms, Sardis. All of these folks are active Sunday school teachers and youth workers in their local churches.

The work of this Canadian youth group covers three large areas which include Sunday school work and Voluntary Service, besides the regular youth activities.

To build stronger youth groups in British Columbia congregations the MYO sponsors workshops, schedules Christian Endeavor exchange programs, and publishes a quarterly news letter that carries news of the local groups and of the provincial organization. In addition to this a choir school was conducted last year to help local choir leaders. A song festival is sponsored each spring and a retreat program planned each summer for children and young people.

Summer Bible school is the object of the organization's Voluntary Service program. Approximately 1,000 children were instructed by more than 60 teachers during the summer months. Besides this British Columbia youth are also active in local service projects as well as MCC programs. One of the local service programs sponsored last summer was a work day project in which $1,075.00 was raised for missions.

This youth group also helps the Sunday schools by sponsoring conferences, workshops, and winter courses for Sunday school teachers.

It is the desire of the British Columbia group that through these activities the young people may receive a greater vision of the work to be done for the Lord, and that they may consecrate their lives in service for Him.

Our Schools

BETHEL COLLEGE

J. Herbert Fretz was the Christian Life Week speaker this year. His morning topics were "Simplicity for Students," "The Seeking Mind," "On Being Well-Informed," "The Liberating Scriptures," "Country Preacher from Tekoa." In the evenings he spoke on "Man Alive!" "Simon, Son of John," "Falling Rocks," "What's in a Name?" and "Fishing for Sheep."

A new instrument of student government, the student court, has been organized and is prepared to begin functioning in the area of student discipline.

Elected to the student court were Stanley Eitzen, Rolling Hills, California; "Cot" Graber, Kingman; Jennie Schmidt, Goessel; Ken Wedel, Moundridge; Lillian Galle, Valley Center; and Arnold Funk, Winkler, Manitoba. Faculty representative on the court is Dr. J. Winfield Fretz.

The student court will consider cases of misconduct, violations of the student body or community regulations and act upon a verdict. Cases to be considered are to be presented to the chairman of the court who will call the court into session as need arises.

Harold "Tiny" Regier, of the class of 1937, was the speaker at the Homecoming banquet, October 15, at 6:30 p.m., in the college dining hall.

After a term of eight years as superintendent of the Hillsboro public school Mr. Regier is now at the University of Kansas teaching part time and doing graduate work.

Homecoming day was begun with a parade at 1 p.m., led by the queen, and followed by a parade of bands and college floats. At the football field the queen was crowned by the co-captains Don Penner and Don Schrag.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Mrs. Pearl Bogart Mann, assistant professor of Piano at Bluffton, was chosen as Woman of the Week by vote of the Bluffton community in a recent contest sponsored by the Bluffton Business and Professional Women's Club. The contest was held in connection with National Business Women's Week, Sept. 25 to Oct. 2.

Mrs. Mann was given this honor in recognition of her contribution to the community through music and church activities. A member of the Bluffton College faculty since 1911, she has taught piano, directed the Girls' Glee Club, and played the accompaniment for the annual rendition of the "Messiah."

The annual honor scholarships of $50 were recently granted to three students who ranked top scholastically in their respective college classes last year. Receiving these scholarships were: Diane Lora, senior from Lima, Ohio; Marion Keeney, junior from East Millsboro, Pa.; and Connie Diller, sophomore from Wooster, Ohio.

Twenty-six students and gradautes are included on the 1954-55 Roll of Bluffton Scholars as a result of obtaining no grade lower than "B" during both semesters last year.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The 54th annual Freeman College Corporation meeting was held Sept. 30, at 8:00 p.m., in Pioneer Hall. Membership in the corporation which governs the college through its elected Board of Directors is open to everyone. Anyone who has ever made a $25 donation to the school is a member of the corporation and entitled to one-fourth vote. A $100 donation entitles the donor to a full vote.

To make the corporation votes more representative members are limited to a maximum of five votes. To this may be added five authorized proxy votes of an absentee corporation member.

This was the 54th annual meeting of the group which was incorporated in 1901, as South Dakota Mennonite College. The name was later changed to Freeman Junior College—the present official title. The directors are elected for three years. Previously three were elected each year to a nine man board. Due to changes in the constitution providing representation for interested church conferences and to the death of a director with an unexpired term six new directors were elected this year. Elected for three years were David P. Gross, Paul E. Hofer, and Carl Miller. Willard Waltner was elected for a two-year term and Arnold Nickel and Walter Gering were chosen to represent the Northern District Conference.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

As the students reflected on the retreat experience they had had at Camp Friedenswald on Sept. 23 to 25, they wished that they could continue such a deep spiritual fellowship through the school year. They met on Monday, Sept. 26, to discuss how they could continue to share with one another the things of God.

A tragic note of the retreat also remains with us. When the bus was ready to leave for Chicago the count revealed that one person was missing. After a time of waiting Jakob Duerksen went to the lake front to see whether Walter Eisenbeis could be seen anywhere. He found him beside the lake unable to walk having dislocated his kneecap in an attempt to get out of the boat. He was taken to the doctor at Goshen, Ind., and rested in bed for a week to give it a chance to heal. He returned to school on Oct. 4.

The students who have been assigned to Sunday school teaching positions in the Woodlawn Church met with the rest of the teachers for a period of orientation and instruction on Friday, Sept. 30.

Norma Jost, educational director of the church school, Menno Bergen, superintendent, and Merle Epp, asst. superintendent were in charge of the meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Enz, Newton, Kan., visited at the home of their son, Rev. and Mrs. J. J. Enz. They also attended the dedication service of the First Church at Nappanee, where Rev. J. J. Enz spoke. Miss Margaret Salzman, one of the students whose home is in Nappanee, also took part in the dedication service.

On Wednesday, Sept. 28, the Seminary Fellowship held its annual election of officers at which time Eleanor Wismer, Margaret Salzman, and Bob Regier were elected to the Social-Recreational Committee. Wilma Dyck and Curtis Janzen were elected to the Educational-Welfare Committee, and Eldora Rempel was elected secretary-treasurer.

BIBLICAL DISCIPLINE IN OUR SCHOOLS

of their own, said, 'Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons.' This testimony is true. Therefore rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith."

From the above passages of Scripture it is clear that biblical discipline is not a contradiction of nonresistance but rather it is the solemn obligation of a Christian teacher to apply both the rod and reproof. If the teacher fails to discipline the child then the teacher is failing to act as a Christian.

This paper is respectfully submitted with the hope and prayer that our children may be trained and corrected in the fear of the Lord with the result that the Mennonite Church will continue in its true faith and that many more souls may be won for the kingdom of God.

Sometimes we stopped to rest leaning against the Father's trees, and letting His air cool our brows, and never speaking.

And then in the twilight we met the Father. The child's eyes shone. He looked up lovingly, trustingly, eagerly into the Father's face; he put his hand into the Father's hand. I was for the moment forgotten. I was content.

MCC news & notes

WINTER COMES TO KOREA

This is fall in Korea, too, with its promise of winter. The Korean winter is very windy and cold. This one will be harder than the one before because the American army units have been leaving Korea this summer. This means that all the relief which many of the army units gave to the refugees and widows and orphans will be missing. The burden will be heavier on the private releif agencies, of which Mennonite Central Committee is one, as they try to help these victims of war. Following are two reports made by Robert Lee and Clara Eshleman, MCC workers in Korea, of some food and clothing distributions last winter.

RICE FUND DISTRIBUTION

"From the Children's Dime Fund Korea received $5,000 for the purchase of rice plus $1,250 from the food fund for purchase of rice for the Kyong San Orphanage. Since the money was contributed by children, this rice was designated for distribution to children. In our mass distribution programs we endeavored to base the distribution lists on the number of children in each family since all Korean families have a host of children.

"In Taegu we arranged through the city social welfare office to distribute to 2,250 of the neediest families with children. (This city has a population of over 300,000.) Each person received about 16 pounds of rice, one can of beef, and one can of shortening.

"At the last moment the Provincial government welfare office urged us to help the distress area of Yung Yang Gun, an area which had had continual crop failures, and recent shortages in relief supplies from government and Korean Civil Assistance sources has caused added hardship. We arranged for distribution to 2,400 people, distributing only five pounds of rice per person, one can of beef, and one can of shortening.

"The price of rice this year was extremely high, in fact at peak periods three times as high as the previous year. The major reason seemed to be the absence of foreign grains in the country which had kept the price of rice down in past years."

CHRISTMAS BUNDLE DISTRIBUTION

"I spent several days at the beginning of the month (February) down at the warehouse to help with distributions. We gave a surplus food package to each family and then Christmas bundles to the children. (The bundles had arrived late.) Of course, there isn't a bundle for every child and so the community leaders marked who should receive a bundle and how many to a family. However, it makes you feel so sorry for the child who does not receive a bundle and all his brothers and sisters do. It must be quite disappointing for them to wait in the crowd all afternoon when it is so cold, and then when their name is called they find someone is refused a bundle.

"The warehouse is a very cold place anytime, but it makes you wonder how the people can stand so much cold and wind. While we were helping with distributions I wore a sweater and jacket under my coat and wasn't too warm. Some of the children didn't have caps and gloves and would jump around to keep warm."

Last year we shipped 7,242 Christmas bundles to Korea; this fall we sent 7,896.

RELIEF CANNING IN MIDWEST

The MCC canner will begin this fall season in Kansas about Oct. 12. The latter part of October it will move to Manson, Iowa, for the first of November.

During the month of November the communities at Mt. Lake, Minn., Freeman, S. D., and Beaver Crossing, Henderson and Beatrice, Neb., will can for relief.

Operating the canner this year will be Wilmer Wedel of Burns, Kan., and Peter Harder, Aldergrove, B. C., Wedel has been with the VS building unit at Cheyenne, Okla., this summer, and Harder worked on the construction of the men's dormitory at the Akron MCC headquarters.

If there are Midwestern communities still interested in canning meat—beef, pork, lard, or poultry—for relief, write now to the Relief Office, MCC, Akron, Pa.

ANNOUNCE INTEREST IN DELEGATION TO RUSSIA

At the MCC Executive Committee meeting in Chicago on September 30, the matter of sending a delegation to visit fellow-Christians in Russia was given serious consideration. In the light of the expressed strong interest of many of our people in such a visit, and the apparent possibilities now opening for it, it was decided to explore the matter further in the hope of coming to a final decision by the time of the annual MCC meeting in December.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: A number of our young people attended the Wayne County C. E. fall retreat at Round Lake, on Sept. 17 and 18. George Breneman served as one of the speakers. Mother's Study Group met on Monday evening, Sept. 12, at the home of Mrs. Kenneth Gerber with Pastor and Mrs. James Reusser discussing the topic, "Family Devotions." Our choir has reorganized for the year, electing James Bixler as its director and Donald Miller as assistant director. Men's Brotherhood met in the church basement on Tuesday evening, Sept. 20, with A. J. Neuenschwander, pastor of the First Mennonite Church, Wadsworth, as guest speaker and using as his topic, "Planning a Study of God's Word." The wives were guests at the meeting. More of our young people have left for schools and the services. These include Rose Marie Gerber, Massillon City School of Nursing, Bill Moser, Bowling Green University, Noah Flueckiger, Milwaukee School of Engineering, and to the U.S. Army in recent months, Norman Moser, Arthur Moser, and Curtis Sprunger. Wallace Gerber returned home this summer after more than two years of Voluntary Service spent at the State Mental Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio. Ned Gerber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Gerber, is still bedfast with a heart condition following an attack of rheumatic fever which he suffered ten months ago. Mrs. Gerber and son, Kurt, are also afflicted with the same ailment and are bedfast, too.—Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kan.: On the evening of July 6 our former pastor, Martin Classen, and family of Wolf Point, Montana, were with us. Rev. Classen showed the film, "Regions Beyond." A social hour followed the services. Maynard Shelly brought the morning message July 10. The young people of our church joined the young people of the surrounding Mennonite churches in work day on July 18. Special dedication services of the money earned on work day was held in the evening of July 24, when the young people had their regular joint meeting in the Zion Church, Elbing, with C. J. Dyck as speaker. $700.00 was brought in at this meeting and it was given to the General Conference Young People's Union Missionary Fund. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Goering, Jr., disposed of their personal property at public auction on July 22, and have moved to Wichita where Mr. Goering has employment. We observed Holy Communion Aug. 28. Our annual Sunday school meeting was held on the evening of Sept. 2. L. R. Amstutz, pastor of the Emmaus Church, brought us a very inspiring message Sunday evening, Sept. 11. A men's quartet from the same church furnished the music. On Sunday morning, Sept. 18, Miss Marie J. Regier, missionary to Formosa, spoke to us about her work she has done in Paraguay, South America. Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Schmidt, Sr., are not very well and are confined to their home in Peabody. They have not been able to attend church for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hiebert are caring for them at present.—Corr.

—Bethany Church, Freeman, S. D.: Our Sunday school met with the Salem and Salem-Zion schools at Pioneer Hall for a July Fourth celebration. Charles Lacey from Sioux Falls was the speaker. On July 10 our church and Sunday school had out-of-door service and picnic dinner on the Swan Lake Camp Grounds. Mr. and Mrs. LuVern Mettler were received into the church on July 17. A graveside burial service was held July 30, for the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul P. Gross. The little child of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Massey was consecrated July 31. The Hostetlers spent most of their vacation, during August, on several Indian Reservations studying mission work among the Indians. Ralph Graber, Lewis Linscheid, Sam Schmidt, and Orlando Goering served as supply pastors during their absence. Rev. Lotus Troyer served us with a sermon on the morning of Sept. 18; Walter Jost from the college played the organ. On Sept. 25, Pastor Hostetler spoke on "Forty Years in the Christian Ministry" and related some of his early experiences. Come and worship with us.—Ben J. Waltner, Corr.

The Mennonite Encyclopedia

A most significant publication for present and future generations

The Mennonite Encyclopedia is the first reference work in English that covers comprehensively more than 400 years of history, faith, life, and culture of Anabaptism in Europe and world Mennonitism. It will serve as the standard reference work on Mennonitism for years to come.

The Encyclopedia has been jointly edited by historians and scholars of the three major North American Mennonite bodies. European Mennonite historians have made important contributions to the work. In addition to the editors more than 400 other writers have written articles.

This four-volume work contains 3,200 pages in which appear 10,000 articles, 400 illustrations, and over 100 maps of Mennonite communities in Europe, North America, South America, and other parts of the world. Brief articles treat more than 2,000 known Anabaptist martyrs—Swiss, German, Austrian, and Dutch.

An attempt has been made to supply articles on all known existing and extinct Mennonite congregations, institutions, organizations, and publications. Included also are countries, states, provinces, counties, cities, and towns where Mennonites have lived.

The Encyclopedia is a mine of information on the history, theology, culture, ethics, life, and organized activities of all Mennonite bodies. It will serve as an invaluable source for students, scholars, editors, writers, pastors, and all persons active in Mennonite church life. But it is also of great significance to all students of Reformation history and contemporary Protestantism.

The Mennonite Encyclopedia gives a comprehensive coverage of both Anabaptism and its direct descendant Mennonitism. All lineal descendants of the Anabaptists, the Mennonites, though small in numbers relatively, have nevertheless played a significant role in the religion and culture of the Netherlands for 400 years. Less numerous in other countries (Germany, Switzerland, Alsace), they have nonetheless made major contributions in agriculture (Palatinate, Vistula Delta, Ukraine, Pennsylvania, Kansas, and Manitoba), and have been among the great colonizers in South Russia, the Prairie states and provinces of the United States and Canada, and more recently in Paraguay. They have been biblical pacifists through most of their history, particularly in North America. In the past fifty years they have entered extensively into Protestant foreign missions, as well as establishing a significant program of Christian service and relief in 20 foreign countries. The Mennonite Encyclopedia reports comprehensively on their history in various countries of Europe and the Western hemisphere, their principles, activities, institutions, culture, and practices. Congregations and institutions in all times and countries, as well as all outstanding leaders, and over 300 family histories find their place in its volumes. Accounts of over 2,000 individual martyrs are given. It will be the standard reference work on Mennonitism for years to come.

This old pioneer landmark was erected around 1895 on the farm of the late Jacob J. Waltner in the 'East Freeman,' S. D., community. His youngest son, Henry, now lives on the farm. This was the only mill of its kind in the community and was used for grinding grain for about a decade when a storm damaged the windmill wheels on top of the tower. It was never repaired for active use but was later used for storing grain. The mill stones and machinery have been donated to the Freeman Junior College museum.

The Reader Says—

What Does TV Do to the Christian Home?

No doubt more and more Christian homes are getting television sets. There are good programs on TV—but do the good programs outweigh the things which it tears down in our home otherwise?

Television clearly has its place in homes where individuals are compelled to stay at home due to being incapacitated or other reasons. But for the average home with children growing up I should like to offer a few thought-provoking questions.

Isn't the record-player and the beautiful available records pushed in the background? Let us visualize a Christian home when the records which lead our thoughts heavenward, are played. Good music is restful to the ear and quiets the restless spirit. Children playing in the homelike atmosphere—probably asking Daddy to play a game or assemble a toy. Mother may be doing some sewing or darning socks, and offering her helpful suggestions to the game or whatever the activity may be.

Where are the Sunday afternoons and evenings, and weekday evenings, when games could be played with the children? Most childern love to hear a story; do parents have time to read to the children?

While looking at television, nothing else can be done; the eye is fastened to the moving and flashing characters on the screen.

Would that in this "fast living" age all parents, prayerfully consider whether television would be a benefit or a detriment to their family home life.

PREPARING FOR THE CHILDREN

Because of the rapid increase of children in our country, the schools are making a desperate effort to increase their facilities so that these children may be properly provided for. New and enlarged school buildings are going up everywhere. Educators have a real concern that the children's education be not hampered because of lack of housing or inadequate schoolrooms. The colleges are busy figuring percentage of increase they may expect and when, and how to care for this coming increase. Many are making careful plans to meet the coming situation.

And the churches? Are they alive to this increase of children and are they making as thorough a preparation to take care of them as the schools? We fear that many churches are paying little or no attention to the fact that there will be many more children and young people—if they prepare for them. This is no time to be satisfied with our present facilities; this is the time to plan wisely and adequately for the increase of youth ahead, and to thank God for the opportunity of serving in the best possible way the spiritual needs of the increasing number of children.

The church that is unaware or unconcerned about what is happening is likely to miss its finest opportunity in years to render the proper service to the children and young people. The older generation will soon pass, and it is for the coming generation—now the babies and little children—for which we must prepare and plan. The schools are awake to the situation; the churches had better be!

ATOMS FOR PEACE

There are encouraging reports to the effect that the use of the new atomic power may soon be developed for adaptation to peaceful ends. The possibilities of such power sound fantastic. From this newly discovered power energy could be harnessed which could supply the power needed for our commercial and domestic uses. At first it was predicted that this would require twenty years for development, but recent opinions are that it could be worked out, at least in part, within a few years.

It is certainly a hopeful sign when the scientists insist on working in the direction of peaceful uses for the great power that has been discovered. It can be used to bless mankind instead of being a curse of destruction and annihilation. Some picture the hosts of heaven as watching anxiously to see whether man will use this new power for his improvement or for his complete destruction. We have improved power, now we need improved men to make the right use of that power.

DAILY CHRISTIAN LIVING

Being a Christian is so much more than merely giving assent to a creed, attending church, or following the teaching of Jesus when it suits us. It means living as God intended that we should live. It is an awareness of Christ's summons, "Follow Me," and a hearty response. It means personal surrender of our own desires and full commitment to Christ. Christian living must permeate every sphere of life, not merely a few. It must be at the heart and core of life and not merely at the edges. It is making all of life fit into the plan and pattern of Christ; to be at one with God and His will for our lives.

But to be really Christian is a daily affair. Too often we are Christians only in spots. But all of life is of one piece and not divided into seven segments (days), one of which is to be holy and the others to be lived without thought of God. The total life must be constantly under the guidance of God each day of the week.

This kind of living is difficult. The costs are high and the upkeep may be costly. There must not only be determination and consecration on our part, but the entire life must be given over to one great Master. There needs to be a constant contact with our Leader through prayer, Bible reading, meditation, and humble service. We need the full help of the church and the spiritual fellowship to make daily Christian living possible.

But the rewards of such high living are far greater than any price we pay. Our lives become useful to God; tools in His hands. He puts worth and dignity into them. He stands by us to see us through all that life can do to us. Living in His fellowship daily is the only real Christian living.

OLD TESTAMENT CHRISTIANS

Frequently we find Christians who seem to get most of their inspiration and guidance for life from the pages of the Old Testament. Not that the Old Testament does not have its place. It is God's Word as well as the New Testament. Yet with the coming of Christ and the history and experience of the Apostolic Church, the revelation of God has been greatly expanded and unfolded. Why not live in the highest revelation we have? The old law had its place, but we are living under grace, and there is a difference.

Usually those living in the Old Testament do so because there they find more backing for the matters they want to believe. Take one case in particular. Those who hold war as sometimes all right practically always bring their greatest arguments from the Old Testaments. They live by what "used to be said" and not by the "but I say unto you" of Jesus.

Old Testament Christians are apt to be hard and legalistic, without the warmth and forgiving love as revealed in Christ.

The Old Testament gives background to the New. It is the schoolmaster leading us to the proper understanding of the New. It is an introduction and historical development leading to the New Covenant in Christ. May we respect it and use it as such, but check our lives by that high standard set by Christ, the "fulfiller" of the Old Testament.

Is God Responsible?

J. F. SAWATZKY

"Out of all that heard the message of grace, only those who were ordained by the Father's sovereign grace were saved. What was thought out by sovereign grace in eternity was wrought out in time. The foundation of our salvation is God's eternal election. We were not elected because we would be saved, but we are saved because we were elected. In eternity God moved by nothing but His own sovereign will, chose those who would be saved."

The above are the words of one who holds to the theory of election. They are based on Acts 13:48, James 1:18, and Rom. 9:16. We must admit that these Scripture passages are shrouded in mystery and are beyond the comprehension of human understanding. We, therefore, will not attempt to contradict the interpretation given above.

According to the above interpretation, God is held responsible both for the salvation and condemnation of the human race. If in eternity, by His own sovereign will, God chose those who would be saved, it follows that all the rest of humanity were chosen to be lost. If such is the case then why all the exertion Christianity puts forth to evangelize? By our very efforts to bring the gospel to all the nations we prove that we do not hold to the election theory.

They that Believe

We thank God that we have many Scripture passages that are undeniably clear on the point that God's salvation is for all, with the condition that they believe. Some such passages we will quote to substantiate our statement.

In the Great Commission, Mark 16:15, 16 we read: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The duty of Christianity as set forth in this commission is to go and preach to every creature. The promise is, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. No condition of election is mentioned. John 3:16: "For God so loved the world, (all humanity) that he gave his only begtten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Whosoever surely includes all. There is no limit in this statement of our Lord. The condition is believing and the promise is everlasting life.

John 4:14 Jesus again uses the expression "whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John 5:24: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." Rom. 1:16 states that "for it (the gospel) is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Everyone does not exclude anyone.

God's Sovereign Will

In the beginning of this article we had the statement of the election theory, that God moved by nothing but His own sovereign will chose those who would be saved. 1 Tim. 2:4: "Who (God) will have all me to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." 2 Peter 3:9b: "Not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." God's will is that all men should be saved. How could it be otherwise? Man has no choice in being born. If then his future destination would be determined from before the foundation of the world was laid, it would be too bad for a multitude of them. Thank God that such is not the case. God holds out to all mankind the salvation wrought by Jesus Christ on Calvary. The choice is with men. They can accept or reject according as they will.

There are powers to influence men both ways. The Word of God and the Holy Ghost are drawing man toward God. John 12:32, Jesus says, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." He has drawn and is drawing by His Word and the Holy Spirit. The other power is Satan, who by tempting to do evil and by coming as an angel of light tries to draw us into sin and vice. It is for us to choose between God and Satan, salvation and damnation.

God has no Pleasure in . . .

Ezekiel 18:23 "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord GOD: and not that he should return from his ways and live?" and in verse 32: "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord GOD: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." Chapter 33:11: "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."

These passages show very clearly that God would much rather see the wicked repent of his wickedness and live than die in his sins and be lost. We therefore conclude that the election theory is in error when it puts the responsibility of man's salvation or damnation upon God.

Let us therefore face the fact, that the Lord has provided a way for us to escape eternal punishment, and to receive eternal life in Jesus Christ our Savior. This way is the way of repentance and faith. It is for me and for you who have heard the gospel to come and receive the blessing; then to go and proclaim the good news to those who have not heard, and testify to the indifferent ones.

May God give us wisdom and power to do according to His will.

Bible Truths Live Again

Gladys and Walter Rutt of Gulfport, Miss., have had an important part in the Mennonite Relief work at Jericho. In fact they have consented to continue in this work for some months beyond their initial two-year term. Gladys has been active in sewing classes and related contacts with Arab refugee women, and she has also helped much in maintaining the Jericho center as a home for the seven Mennonite workers regularly living at Jericho and the additional thirteen who can only occasionally come "home" because their relief assignments require that they live elsewhere. In this article, Gladys calls attention to scenes of today which illustrate Bible truths.

In this country the Bedouins are maintaining the traditions and customs of ancient Bible times perhaps more than any other group. Their tents are made of goats' hair and set up as they were in the time of Abraham, who was himself a tent-dwelling nomad. The larger section of the tent is for the men, and at one end is a smaller section, completely separated by a partition, where the women live. In Genesis 18 Sarah was sitting in the door of her tent where the visitors could not see her, hence they asked, "Where is Sarah thy wife?" However, she could hear all that was being said, and when she laughed they could hear her. Guests are entertained in the men's division of the tent.

This same chapter is a beautiful picture of Bedouin hospitality even today. The bowing and greeting are much the same, and it is a rule that cannot be disregarded that a lamb, a kid, or a calf must be killed and cooked for the guests. If a man should be so poor that he has no lamb or kid to offer to his friends, he may take one from a neighbor's flock without fear of punishment. Traditional hospitality is of first importance with these people.

The dress also has probably not changed noticeably through the centuries. The long flowing robes and the headdress which protects from the desert sun and sand are worn by the men. The women wear mostly black. Their dresses are heavily and lavishly embroidered, and over their heads they wear strings of coins that represent the dowry of the wife. In their noses and on their arms are gold and silver jewels of every description. Covering the head and most of the dress is a large veil that is always worn in public.

Their food is still the meat from their flocks, bread, camels' milk, butter, and cheese. Sometimes the milk is put into skin bottles, hung on a string from the ridgepole of the tent, and then tossed back and forth between two women until butter is made. The women also carry the water from some distant spring or fountain in goat-skin bags. The bread is made from wheat which they grind themselves. The dough is stretched very thin over a piece of metal which is laid on rocks and a fire of thorn bushes built under it to bake the bread very quickly. Only enough bread is made for one meal as it dries and gets very hard.

These nomad tribes move from place to place as they find grass and water for their flocks. In the winter they move close to Jericho and into the Jordan Valley where it is warmer, but in early spring they are off again to the hills where it is cooler. Often a Bedouin tent or two can be seen silhouetted against the sky on the very peak of a high hill. Here they get the cool breezes while their flocks graze the dry herbage on the hillsides and get water from some spring in the valley.

During the last part of March as we were driving to Amman in the early morning, it was our rare privilege to see one of these tribes moving. They were leaving the valley and going westward, probably to the Hebron or Ramallah area. First came flocks and flocks of sheep and goats with their shepherds, one leading the flock and one following, and sometimes a few extra helpers along the sides when the flocks were very large. At times the road was completely blocked and we would have to wait until these clever shepherds herded the sheep or goats to the side of the road so the car could pass.

Following the flocks came the little donkeys loaded with all the household goods and everything else that could not walk alone. On some of them were piled tents, others carried the blankets and a few bright pillows. On the top and around the sides of these were tied a few pots and pans, and two other articles which betrayed the inroads of western civilization: some five-gallon Shell Oil cans and buckets made very cleverly from old tire casings. The cans are used for water and oil or foodstuffs; in the buckets they were carrying the little kids and lambs too young or weak to walk. They seemed completely fearless as their little faces looked over the edge of the rubber buckets at the big wide world. On the very top of these huge loads were the chickens, perhaps three or four together with their legs tied, balancing themselves and swaying contentedly with the rhythmic movement of the donkeys.

Beside these burdened little donkeys that were practically hidden under their loads, the women walked with some of the children. The small children were carried or given a little nook on one of the loads where they could ride. There was a dog or two, tied to a long string, walking dejectedly along beside the procession. It appeared that each family in the tribe had their own donkeys as we passed group after group of these family units.

After all these had passed, the camels came, a large herd, some white, some brownish, with the small calves trailing awkwardly beside their mothers. As we waited while they were crossing the road, we could get a good close-up view of these awkward, loose-jointed creatures who look at men with a superior and disdainful look that commands respect in spite of their appearance.

Breath on Me

I.

Breathe on me, Breath of God—O Lord, I thank Thee that Thou hast created me in such a way that I can receive Thy spirit and taste of Thine own being. Fill me with life anew—that life which is a spark of Thine own life; that spirit which purifies, revitalizes, sensitizes my being and makes me whole. That I may love what Thou dost love—that which is true and upright and lofty; that which is genuine, beautiful and noble; that which is upbuilding; which lifts mankind to Thee.

And do what Thou wouldst do—Lead me, Lord, where Thou wouldst have me go. Let me be Thy feet, Thy hands, Thy heart to all whom I may meet.

II.

Breathe on me, Breath of God—as in quietness and stillness I wait before Thee, softly breathe Thy spirit. Until my heart is pure — cleansed of all unkind thoughts, purged from all selfish motives and impure desires, free from all hypocrisy, malice and hatred. Until with Thee I will one will—speak to me until my own ambitions and personal aims are lost in Thy divine will; until my thoughts are Thy thoughts, my purpose Thy purpose.

To do or to endure—if through active service, use me, Lord; if through trials, tribulations and deep valleys Thou wouldst have me go, may Thy spirit shine through me.

III.

Breathe on me, Breath of God—and as Thou reachest down to me may I ever be open to receive Thee, drinking freely of that gift to mankind which lifts it above all lower forms of life.

Till I am wholly Thine—penetrate every secret fault, every hidden motive; every talent I might withhold, every love for things of earth which rob my love for Thee. Till all this earthly part of me—my temporal body, my finite mind, my wavering, wandering nature. Glows with Thy fire divine—transform this temple in which Thou hast chosen to dwell into a thing of beauty that I may walk with a splendor and radiance which is not of this world but which casts its light to illuminate the darkness of sin around me.

IV.

Breathe on me, Breath of God—O continue to breathe on me. Let me not fall or wander from Thy hand. So shall I never die—with my life a part of Thine, Thy being a part of mine, I cannot find that death should hold me, or the grave bring darkness and fear. But live with Thee the perfect life—the life of peace that passeth all understanding, of hope that cannot die, of joy that is deep and abiding. Of Thine eternity—Thine eternity! That I may share eternally of Thy perfect goodness, O God, grant it in the Master's name.

He Left 168 Million

Recently we read in the newspaper of the death in Scotland of Hugh Richard Grosvenor, the second Duke of Westminster and one of the world's richest landlords. Reportedly worth $168 million in inherited real estate, he owned 200,000 acres of farmland and 600 acres of land in London's West End—include the site of the U. S. Embassy. The duke was a collector of great art treasures, having among his collection the original of Gainsborough's famous The Blue Boy, and many other world-famed paintings worth thousands of dollars.

We don't know who inherited the duke's vast fortune, but we do know that though $168 million dollars is a huge sum of money, it is not to be compared with the infinitely greater inheritance awaiting all who are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for these are "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," Romans 8:17, and Christ is the heir of all things (Hebrews 1:2).

We cannot all be millionaires in the currency of this world, but we can all become heirs of the treasures which enrich the person who has found all in the Lord Jesus Christ by faith; for in Him are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge," Col. 2:3!

Happy is the lot of the man or woman who can say with the hymn writer:

"Why should I charge my soul with care?
The wealth of every mine
Belongs to Christ, God's Son and Heir,
And He's a Friend of mine!
Yes, He's a Friend of mine,
And He with me doth all things share;
Since all is Christ's, and Christ is mine,
Why should I have a care?"

Give Us . . .

Over and over we pray the Lord's Prayer, yet it is profound enough to last many lifetimes. Recently I was pondering the phrase, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Why am I praying this? Why do I ask God to send me daily bread? Never in my life has my food been missing for a day. Wondering where the next meal is to come from is a foreign experience to me. I am grateful to God for always having provided me daily bread. But I am not praying, "Give me this day my daily bread," but "Give us this day our daily bread." Me, and who else? Me, and other Christians? Me and others who need daily bread? Me and Korean orphans? Me and Mexican peasants? Who (Purist may add his own m) does us include? Do I think of us when I pray this phrase? And if so, what effect has it upon my actions? Do I share daily bread more-than-enough for this part of us with the rest of us so that there is enough for all of us?

Responsibility of Mennonites in the Larger Christian Church

(The concluding portion of the paper read by John Schrag of Omaha, Nebraska, at the Study Conference on the Believers' Church, held in Chicago, August 23-25)

If we are to meet our responsibility as a church among other churches, we need to:

1. Know clearly what we as a church stand for and why, especially with reference to our teaching of the church as a voluntary fellowship of regenerated people, the Bible as the true and only foundation for our faith, and our duties as disciples of Christ.
2. Be firm in the principles that are basic in the light of Scripture, but adaptable in matters of minor importance.
3. Present the basic principles of our faith to the larger church, not so much as Mennonite principles, but principles that are based upon Scripture.
4. Be ready always in all humility to re-examine our principles and practices open-mindedly in the light of Scripture, so as to avoid denominational prejudice and dogmatic bigotry.
5. Strive for the unity and fellowship of all true believers, without succumbing to the belief that this can be achieved by mere outward organization.
6. Never sacrifice truth in favor of unity.
7. Earnestly desire, not just to be different, but to be right.
8. Be careful not to become involved in any kind of effort that would compromise our principles, yet be willing to co-operate with any constructive effort when we can consistently do so, especially in reaching the lost for Christ.
9. Be more concerned about the survival of our ideals than the survival of ourselves or our church.
10. Rejoice if the work of God goes forward, even if by the efforts of those who are not Mennonites.
11. Avoid the dangerous errors of complete relativism by keeping firm our faith in God and His Word as our standard for life and practice.
12. As a testimony to the world lead a life that is consistent with our profession, especially with reference to our position of nonresistance.
13. Beware of an interpretation of the grace of God such that it would make good works irrelevant.
14. Strive for a sympathetic understanding of other denominations, without sanctioning or accepting anything that is unscriptural.
15. Without compromising with or yielding to error, be willing to allow others the freedom of conscience that we desire for ourselves.
16. Manifest the love and respect toward others that should characterize the life of every follower of Christ.
17. Pray that God may give us the courage to be true to our convictions even at the expense of suffering and death.

Flashes of Thought

Climbing Upward

Walter Gering

All summer long I have been seeing them; it never dawned upon me that they were trying to teach me a lesson. And then suddenly I realized what they were saying. It was so simple, yet so profoundly true. Even the children passing in and out through the door on their way to Sunday school could grasp it.

It was those vines on the southeast corner of the church which brought home their message. Every spring we saw a repetition of that which had come to pass the previous year. Slowly awakening from their slumbers after a long, bitterly cold winter the buds began to burst and the tiny leaves appeared. Soon the tower was again covered with these clinging vines. The birds sought refuge in their shade during the heat of the day. In the early morning the busy chattering of the sparrows under the leaves could be heard from a distance. So it continued throughout the summer until the first frost began to nip the leaves and dropped them to the ground.

But the lesson I did not see until the summer was all over. Looking up to the top of the tower of the church on Sunday morning I realized the truth. That little vine is one of the weakest of its kind. The thin little branches can be twisted in any direction, yielding to the slightest touch of the fingers; a symbol of utter weakness. Yet as my eyes followed upward along the lines of the tower I suddenly realized that this weak little vine was climbing; day after day it had been stretching its little hands upward. Slowly but surely it had been succeeding. My eyes finally rested at the top of the tower. And there, only a few inches from the very top was the vine. This utterly weak, insignificant climber had reached the heights. While other plants and forms of vegetation had been clinging to the ground, my little friend had refused to be bound to the earth. It had lifted itself into the very heavens.

Yet, not by itself; the secret was the church. Day by day with its tiny fingers, too small to be seen with the naked eyes, it had been clinging to the walls of the church. Higher and higher it climbed as it continued to cling. Its strength was within the church. How foolish it would have been to let go and to endeavor to climb alone.

I thought of others who had carelessly lost their grip; they had launched out in their own strength, convinced that they had no need of the church. Proudly they had boasted of their ability to stand alone. How foolish!

LET THE WORLD DERIDE OR PITY,
I WILL GLORY IN THY NAME

The Open

Below is an article written by our missionary in Jagdeeshpur, India, Rev. S. T. Moyer. Phuljhar is that section of our field in India where this station is located. In our day we hear so much about doors of opportunity closing for Christ and His gospel. When it comes to direct preaching there is a considerable weight of truth in this fear of "doors closing." But when the criterion is "by their fruits ye shall know them," the doors are actually opening up. If we help the Oriental to learn to read, and to find and use better means of earning his daily bread, then the Oriental says, "He loves us." We all know that if the oppressed man feels he is loved, he will listen to what the lover has to say. Was this not Jesus' method? The gospels indicate that it was. Shall we, too, use that method as much as we can? Brother Moyer's article points in that direction.

RURAL UPLIFT WORK IN PHULJHAR

The work on which I wish to report is located 90 miles off the main line of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway centering in Jagdeeshpur, District Raipur. This work was started before the Waltair Railway line was constructed, before the highway was motorable, before the rivers were bridged.

When we came to Jagdeeshpur more than thirty years ago, the only source of water was one medium sized tank (pond). In this tank the buffaloes wallowed; the cattle of three villages drank; the men, women, and babies of these three villages bathed. From this came our water supply to drink, to cook, to bathe, and to construct buildings.

We put down our first well. At first our neighbors would not drink water from this well. They insisted that the water was too flat, that the tank water had a better flavor. We have been digging wells ever since. Today, as lineal descendants of this first well, there are at least thirty-five wells in the immediate vicinity, and many scattered throughout the area.

We planted the first orange trees in Phuljhar, a zemindary (as a county) of some 800 villages. We started the first medical work along scientific lines. We started the first high school, and quite probably the first Co-operative Bank, and first Co-operative Weaver's Society.

This work, now going on for more than thirty years, has been built on certain well defined principles, as follows:

I. It is the work of a team, not of an individual. This concept is the meaning of the world "we" used in the above statements. This team consists of men and women. It is a team of Indians as well as foreigners; a team of workers in all phases of work, of workers in all levels of activity.

II. The best progress is believed to come from self-help, through guided inspiration.

III. At all times the dynamic has been that of a living, crucified Savior as the center of the work.

IV. The program has been to develop a full-orbed human personality, with healthy bodies, intelligent citizens, with souls aflame to the greatest loyalties.

The idea of the team and its program may be thought of thus—God has given as gifts to His people apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers, and various kinds of ministries, including medical and economic. God has given the gift of men, so that their fellow men may attain knowledge, as well as grow into the full stature of manhood. This team of workers and the work done may be illustrated by the wheel:

—In each wheel there are six pairs of spokes. These represent the economic, the spiritual, the mental, the physical, the social, and the national, or patriotic.

—In each wheel there is the rim, the bond of fellowship, binding all together in love.

—In each wheel there is the hub, which is God revealed through Jesus Christ, without which the wheel collapses.

—The pair of spokes illustrate the necessity of action, as well as of knowledge; of works, as well as of faith; of practice as well as of theory; of growth, as well as of initial enthusiasm and initial promise.

Let me begin first of all with the school, in the Janzen Memorial Middle and High School, where my interests at present are centered. We attempt not only the full government syllabus, but also a series of extracurricular "shop courses" which definitely tie in with the basic economic needs of the people. Thus there is a continuous program for the boys and girls from 6:30 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Every student is expected to take these shop courses unless excused for good reasons. These shop courses include the following: (a) carpentry; (b) weaving, (c) sewing for three groups, one for boys, one for middle school girls, and one for high school girls; (d) printing; (e) gardening and farming, (f) bookkeeping, accounting and typewriting.

Go with me to the village of Sanpoli. The leaders of the village are a Gond family. Their son, Puhup, had been a student in our middle and high school. His father will show with pride all the door chaukets, tables, and chairs which the son has made. Where did Puhup learn this? In our extracurricular carpentry course. Come with me to Kursipahar, to the home of Joseph Tandi. We enter through a very fine doorway, chauket (door frame) and palla (door), made by Master Tandi. Where did he learn this? In his shop courses. When the local church decided to build their own house of worship, they asked the village schoolteacher to make the door and window frames and panels. Master Joseph Tandi did a very acceptable job.

All through this area will be found former students, who, having left school for some reason or other, carry on the ancestral craft of weaving, a cottage industry. Those in charge of dehat (rural) work will tell you that the school had encouraged, helped to preserve this cottage industry, not discouraged nor killed it.

r for Christ

What has a commerce course, a course in accounting, in bookkeeping, in typewriting and business methods got to do with rural economy? Much indeed. If we are going to have financial accounts of a co-operative society which pass government inspection, of Primary Schools which meet the scrutiny of auditors, of treasuries of church, and Christian Endeavor and Sunday schools, which meet the approval of committees—then young people ought to learn how to keep proper accounts in student days. This they do who elect to take this course. Mathematics is a prerequisite. It is taught by a former student of the Lucknow school, headed up two or three decades ago by Dr. E. M. Moffat.

None of the desks and benches in the school has been purchased from the outside—the students have made them. When the jungle plot set aside for a playground had to be cleared, the roots dug out, the ground leveled, the students under the leadership of the headmaster, principal, and staff did the job—they dug out the roots, leveled off the ground, and today we have a beautiful playground in a fine natural setting. When it comes time to plant rice by the Japanese method, the students with headmaster and agricultural teacher, Mr. N. R. Sona, get down into the mud and water and do the planting.

An integral part of the school is a dairy; also a farm with an orchard of some sixty citrus trees, mostly oranges, and other fruit trees. These things have been a constant source of inspiration to the entire community for miles around. Students have gone out and encouraged their fathers to start new dairies of milk cows, finding a ready source of additional income from the sale of milk in the growing town of Basna to its tea shops. Roshem Lall of Raipur, and Baikunto of Jagdeeshpur, are two illustrations of this. Our orange orchard has been copied by others, including Joseph Nag of Sirko. The income from our orange orchard in normal years is about Rs. 1000.

When we started thirty years ago, little if any gardening was done in the surrounding towns and hamlets. Now our nearest villages, Sitapur and Chanodihi, are surrounded by gardens and recently dug wells. Our latest project has been to dig our farm tanks deeper. Headmaster Mr. Stephen has plans all laid out to stock this with fish seed as an additional source of food supplies and cash.

We have been planting trees, though it is supposed we are in the jungles. Sersua (a kind of good fuel tree) has been planted for future source of fuel; bamboo as the poor man's roofing timber has been scattered about. This year Headmaster planted some fifty saigon seedlings to provide for future supply of wood to make school furniture and for our carpentry shop.

Three years ago we began experimenting with the Japanese method of rice production. One of the best fields on the farm known as the Lord's Acre became one of those used in the experiment. The returns from this field are turned over to the treasurer of the local church. At once the church treasurer reported that the income from this field has been better than in previous years, though the rice crop generally has been only a partial success. When for the second season running we were satisfied that the results of the Japanese method were above average, then we took it to the dehat. There we staged a booster meeting. Villagers from three villages were called. Only a small handful from one village came. One of these, a deacon, volunteered to try this out. Though he promised his best field, he retracted and gave his second best. A group of 18 high school boys under the leadership of Mr. Sona walked six miles on August 14, to show how the planting should be done. After working all day without remuneration, a labor of love, they walked home again. This field in 1953 yielded 25 khandies (a measure more than a bushel) of grain worth Rs. 62/8. With only slightly increased costs the yield in 1954 was almost threefold. This sparked the effort in this village and about four times the acreage was put out in 1955.

In April, 1955, before school closed, a middle school student by name of Prem Deep, age about 14 years, came to me and said, "During hot season the people of my village have to walk at least one and one-half miles for all their water for all purposes. Please loan me a sabal (crowbar) and a ghun (pick-axe) so that I may gather together my neighbors to dig a well." I was glad to grant the request.

Adult literacy is constantly being pushed. It may not be pushed with the vigor of some places, but it is constantly going on in less pretentious ways.

Every rainy season a supply of surplus plants, shrubs, seedlings go out from our personal gardens to those who come for them, together with helpful instructions of how and when to plant.

The mission station itself is the hub of this work, the center of activity, and illustrates the team in practice. Around this is built the well co-ordinated work of the church, of the school, of the hospital, from all of which much economic uplift effort has gone forth.

From the hospital go forth medicines with church pastors, roadside clinics, health lectures, and many showings of pictures, and a great stream of patients filling to overflowing the recently built local hospital.

There were only four primary schools in that zemindary when we arrived in 1922. They were there before we came. But our own first primary school grew into a middle school, then into a high school. This high school is now sending forth a stream of matrics who are finding a place in some seventy other primary, middle and high schools of the area,

The Found Week End

BURTON G. YOST*

"You never know all the joys you can receive until you actually try it yourself," said Violet Keiser after a recent week end spent working at the clothing center of the Mennonite Central Committee. She had taken part in a week-end service project sponsored by the Eastern District Peace and Service Committee.

Violet with sixteen other young people from the churches of the district really found a week end. This is what happened.

It began on Friday evening, August 5, as we pulled into the parking lot of the Akron, Pennsylvania, headquarters of the Mennonite Central Committee. Here we received our first big challenge. Settled on the lawn we watched the film, "Again Pioneers" and thought about our reasons for serving Christ.

Early Saturday morning found us at the nearby Ephrata clothing center receiving instructions for our day of work. Violet with the other girls inspected and stamped the clothes donated by many churches and families. Others sorted them into separate bins and prepared the clothing for baling.

Here the fellows took over, doing the baling, weighing, and stenciling necessary for shipping. Christmas bundles, layettes, coats, blankets, and

On a week-end service project we thought about our reasons for serving Christ. First row (left to right): Burton Yost, Donold Nester, Don Mease, Lodnor Geissinger, Kermit Nester, Clark Wetzel. linens were among the many things that went into the heavy bales.

Relief work became much more real to us when we saw the materials and imagined the relief workers and the people who would receive them.

"My eyes were really opened," exclaimed Kermit Nester after he had taken part in this project. "In the past I failed to realize the vast amount of work that is accomplished by MCC and the wide variety of duties that it performs."

We all experienced this same feeling as Bill Snyder, MCC assistant executive secretary, showed us the offices from which the world-wide program of Mennonite relief is directed. We received valuable insight into the total program as we saw the map marking relief stations, mental hospitals, ships carrying personnel and material aid, and volunteers in all parts of the world.

Devotional periods, recreation, discussions, and visits to nearby churches filled out our week end. It was a thrill to sing and pray together and think seriously as Christian young people seeking to know and do the will of God in our lives.

A new vision of what young people can do and a joy of having a part in serving others in the name of Christ were the final results of this week end service experience.

This was no lost week end; this was a found week end.

Open Gates At Paivika

Camp Paivika, for crippled and handicapped children, is on the top of "Dawn" Mountain, in the mountains north of San Bernardino, Calif. It is an Easter Seal Camp sponsored by the Crippled Children's Society of Los Angeles County. Five two-week camp sessions throughout the summer bring 750 handicapped persons ranging from the Young Adult Group (20 and older) to seven-year-old children. Many of the youngsters come from broken or unhappy homes where the parents consider the crippled child only a bother.

Seven Mennonite young people gave this summer under MCC VS to serve at Camp Paivika as counselors, along with twenty-one other college students from California. Each counselor was responsible for four to six campers—responsible tc dress, clean and feed those in braces, wheelchairs, body casts. He was responsible to help these four to six campers enjoy swimming, horseback riding and all the activities they could participate in.

Shirley Suderman, leader of this summer's VS unit, tells of one evening: "I sat beside Bobby in his wheelchair beneath the stately pine trees and watched a cloud creep over the face of the moon. After sitting quietly for five minutes, Bobby turned to me and said, 'You know, that silvery cloud looks just like the gates of heaven opening.'

"Only a few months ago Bobby walked; now he is in a wheelchair and it is becoming increasingly difficult for him to speak. I couldn't help but wonder how near Bobby actually was to those heavenly gates. I do know he is looking forward to that glorious day when he will enter those gates to be with his Savior.

"Let Thy great love be reflected through me to some sad and lonely little child. . . . Give me the patience to listen and the ability to understand a child's problems and feelings. . . . Help me to help him learn to know Thee. . . ."

Members of this summer's VS group were: Adena Enns, Hutchinson, Kansas; Alexanderwohl Edwards, Parkville, Mo.; Kathleen Janzen, Arnaud, Manitoba; Charlene Miller, Millersburg, Ohio; Adella Nikkel, North Newton, Kansas; Ardith Schertz, Lowpoint, Illinois; and Shirley Suderman, Hillsboro, Kansas.

A MODERN PARABLE

A modern parable used by a national pastor in the Belgian Congo is related by Edna Poole, Disciples of Christ missionary:

If a man goes to pick oranges off the tree, he can reach some with his arm, but if he has a long stick in his hand he can reach many, many more.

The missionaries can do much toward the growth of the church in the Congo, but if they have sticks in their hands, they can reach many many more of the people.

We nationals must be the sticks to help them extend the influence of the church in our country.

ONE YEAR FOR TWENTY EUROPEAN YOUTHS

Twenty European Mennonite youths from Holland, Germany, France, and Switzerland arrived in New York Sept. 17, to spend one year in the United States in the trainee program sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee.

After spending a week end in orientation at the Akron, Pa., MCC headquarters, the trainees scattered out to farms and homes in Oklahoma, Ohio, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Nebraska, Illinois, Indiana, and Colorado. Following a midyear evaluation conference each one will move to another community for the last six months to enjoy a broader fellowship and gain a more complete picture of life here.

Each trainee is sponsored by a farm, urban family or an institution—hospital, school or old people's home. He lives with the family or institution staff, assists them in their work and participates in local church and community activities. The purpose of the program is to let the trainee observe American Mennonite life and work and to broaden the fellowship between European and American brethren. The trainees and their sponsors have found that ties of understanding and appreciation for each other grow strong during these six months. Since the program was initiated in 1950, about 120 European youths have participated.

Peter is a graduate of Canadian Mennonite Bible College; is a member of the Canadian Conference Board of Education and Publication; and is a director of the Rosthern Junior College and Bible School. In spite of a heavy schedule, Peter finds an occasional hour for curling and fishing.

Vice-chairman of the board is Korney Martens of Fiske, graduate of Canadian Mennonite Bible College, and actively engaged in his home church. Delphine Martens, Saskatoon, is the secretary-treasurer.

Since 1952 the organization has operated on the threefold youth fellowship plan. For their projects Saskatchewan youth have undertaken the support of the Ben Sawatzkys in India, Esther Patkau in Japan, the Ruben Siemens and Dick Thiessen in northern Saskatchewan. Annual functions include the youth retreats at Rosthern and Elim Beach and the youth rally which is held in conjunction with the business meeting.

"Good teaching does not come automatically from putting material into some person's hands, even if it is the best material. The best leaders plan in advance for an entire course or unit of this curriculum. They begin the final planning for a given Sunday early in the week." —Virgil E. Foster

BETHEL COLLEGE

Janver Krehbiel, Pretty Prairie, was invited to appear as guest soloist for the Seventh District Women's Music Federation Convention which convened at Hutchinson, Oct. 19, in the Trinity Methodist Church. Janver was accompanied by Florine Voran. Mr. Krehbiel has successfully competed in the federation competition for two years and will again compete this coming spring. Janver is a sophomore and a student of Dr. David Suderman.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

A student prayer meeting is held every Wednesday noon. Attendance is entirely voluntary. Students who feel a special need for the fellowship of a united prayer group meet here to pray for their own needs and problems of the school.

Erwin Schrag, a graduate of Freeman, was the chapel speaker last Wednesday. He has been a lay missionary in various sections of the world. He served in Puerto Rico for two and one-half years, in India for five years, and the past year he has been in Mexico working under the MCC in a hospital at Cuauhtemoc, Chihuahua. He related that there are between fifteen and twenty thousand Mennonites in Chihuahua.

Another speaker the past week was Rev. Eldo Ratzlaff, pastor of the Silver Lake Mennonite Brethren Church. He spoke on Progress. Our world, he said, is making progress in material things, in science, and in education. But we are also making progress in Christianity — Church and Sunday school membership is increasing and large areas are being evangelized. Those who take Jesus Christ into this age of progress have a destiny with God. He challenged young people to study the Scriptures, pray daily, and to believe in Christ as they make their way in this era of progress.

Walter Jost, head of the Music Department, had charge of the music at the Hutchinson County Teachers Institute this fall. He taught the County Chorus selections to the group and directed the Teachers' Chorus.

The College Department held the first social event of the year when they sponsored an Italian banquet. Dr. Gross is the sponsor of the College Freshman class and Orlando Goering of the Sophomores.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Bethany Biblical Seminary had its 50th Anniversary celebration on October 3. Bethany Biblical Seminary was begun by the brethren J. E. Hoff and A. Wieand on Oct. 3, 1905, with twelve students. Today the institution has sixteen instructors and two hundred students. Dr. Vernon Schwalm, president of Manchester College, gave the jubilee address. He spoke on "Bethany Biblical Seminary and the Church of the Brethren."

The Seminary student body held its election of officers on Wednesday, Oct. 5. Curtis Janzen and James Waltner were elected to the student executive. Ernest Neufeld and Don Kaufman were elected to represent the studies at inter-seminary meetings. Elected to the Staff-Student Council were; Ramon Jantz, Roy Henry, Eleanor Wismer, and Waldemar Janzen.

Reports from Rev. John Neufeld who is suffering from a heart condition continue to be favorable. He has passed the critical period and his condition is improving.

Visiting friends and relatives at the Seminary were: Rev. and Mrs. Olin Kerhbiel, Berne, Ind.; Mrs. Mary Krehbiel, Newton, Kan.; and Mrs. Albert Kirchhofer, Berne, Ind.; Edgar Reimer, Winnipeg; Calvin Redekop, Hesston, Kan.; and Dr. Royer from Manchester College.

Andrew Shelly spoke at the Eastern District Conference Mission Conference on Oct. 14-16. He together with Mrs. Shelly also served at the Western District Conference held at Beatrice, Neb., Oct. 18-19. On Oct. 21-23 he visited the Wayland, Iowa, churches.

The Men's quartet includes: Marvin Dirks, Jr., freshman from Lombard, Ill., and Bill Simmons, senior from Dayton, Ill., tenors; Neil Stretcher, freshman from Trenton, Ohio, baritone, and Gary Stenson, freshman from Carlock, Ill., bass.

Jan Musselman, senior from Orrtanna, Pa., was chosen by the student body to reign over the annual Homecoming activities which were held on October 15. Chosen to accompany the queen were Joanne Sloter, junior from Souderton, Pa., and Nancy Hostetler, sophomore from Wooster, Ohio.

Dr. Lloyd Ramseyer, president, was one of the speakers in a symposium held at the eighth annual Ohio Conference for Speech Education in Columbus, Ohio, October 22. The question for the symposium was, "Resolved: That the federal government should guarantee higher education to qualified high school graduates through grants to colleges and universities."

If God has called you don't look over your shoulder to see who is following you.

Inspiration in private devotion can never be replaced by perspiration in public service.

The man who lives for himself could not be engaged in any small business.

What is in the well of your heart is bound to come up in the bucket of your speech. —H. W. Wiebe

MCC news & notes

KOREAN BUDGET

During the past month there have been official changes in the economy of the Republic of Korea which drastically increases the costs of our MCC program there. In the past U. S. money was exchanged for Korean at the rate of about 680 hwan to $1. Now the government is putting into effect a 500 to $1 rate. Of course, wages and prices remain as high as they were when the exchange rate was 680 to $1.

Donald Klippenstein, director of MCC in Korea, writes: "This increases our costs drastically. . . . The 500 to $1 exchange rate is not realistic in comparison to prices. This is a double blow to the Vocational School (for orphans) at a time when they should be raising the wages for all employees. The average monthly wage for teachers at the Vocational School is 25,000 hwan whereas the monthly wage for teachers in Taegu is 40,000 hwan."

HAN VAN DEN BERG LEAVES INDIA

Han van den Berg, director of MCC in India, was scheduled to leave India before Oct. 13 because the Indian government refused to extend his residence visa. Han is transferring to the MCC program in Vietnam, and Edward Benedict will take over direction of the work in India.

Han began service with MCC in Java in 1952 for a six-year term. In August, 1954, he transferred to India to open and direct a relief program among the refugees in northeastern India.

After seeing this sight it was easy to understand how Abraham in Genesis 12 moved from Haran to the land of Canaan "with all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls they had gotten in Haran," and how Jacob when he feared to meet Esau arranged his moving tribe to protect his beloved Rachel. We looked at them with wonder not unmixed with reverence, as though we were permitted a glimpse into the lives of those who people the pages of God's Holy Word.

—Jordan Relief Notes

We have come on a generation of teaching that simply holds before men various truths and says to them, "Reach your hand into the basket and take your choice." I know the reason for this. It encourages men to think for themselves and to be able to say, "This truth is mine." This method of teaching, however, can be as false in its refusal to share the deepest and the truest that generations have known as the other method which sought merely to cram undigested truth into the mouths of gullible students. In an endeavor to adapt truth to life we have forgotten that life must be brought to God through Jesus Christ.

and beyond. Some of them are doing outstanding work, as Priscilla Kumar in primary school at Janjgir, and Paul D. Singh, in the middle school at Bhilai Bazaar, Korba.

In the early days a co-operative banking society was started. Though it no longer functions, it did much to enable shareholders to buy land, dig wells, build houses, buy cattle and seed. This co-operative bank was also in those days a definite factor in breaking the hold of money lenders, as they, with exhorbitant interest charges, sucked the life blood from the people.

Side by side was operated a co-operative weaving society. This too broke the strangle hold in those days of high priced thread and terrific interest rates. As a lineal descendant of this Christian Weavers' Society, there operate today two main societies, and seven branches, all purely indigenous by this time. Some have gone on the rocks due to poor management. One of these at Sirko is said to keep its books in first-class order, and the inspector is delighted with the excellent condition of the society, the result of sound management.

Staying by the principles above outlined, we are constantly pushing on into new areas. Just at present we are getting ready to establish a number of new village libraries, to maintain literacy, and to encourage the joy and profit of reading. Also we are working at the matter of youth clubs, on the order of 4-H clubs, following the program of the wheel. The groundwork of these is being done, and we hope to have them operating before long.

Jottings

—Beatrice Church, Beatrice, Neb.: We are happy again to have a full time minister and his wife with us. Rev. and Mrs. Ralph K. Weber arrived July 1, and a reception for them was held in conjunction with our Sunday school picnic on July 10. On Aug. 14, an installation service was held for the Webers, with Jacob T. Friesen and P. K. Regier participating. Missionary J. R. Duerksens were here recently and gave us an interesting report on mission work in India. We are looking forward to the Western District Conference which is to convene here at Beatrice, Oct. 19-21, sponsored by the two local churches.—Mrs. Elmer Frantz, Corr.

—Willow Creek Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: Joyce Schultz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Schultz, was married to Eugene F. Ens of Reedley, on Aug. 27, with Edward Toews officiating. Many relatives and friends attended the happy occasion. Many forest fires have been raging but are reported under control again. The Santa Barbara was considered one of the major fires. Much valuable timber has been destroyed which brought estimated damage up to several million dollars. Two other fires were in the Sequoia National Forest. They were considered the worst fires in California's history. We had several weeks of very warm weather with the thermometer up over 110 degrees for several days. Even the nights during that time didn't cool off as usual. Little Karen Evonne was born to Mr. and Mrs. John J. Claassen, Sept. 17. The young people's retreat at Lake Sequoia took place Aug. 13-20, and the family retreat at Cambria Pines from Sept. 3 through 5. It was a privilege to all who could attend.—Mrs. Frank Hamm. Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Pratum, Ore.: "Giving thanks always unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," Eph. 5:20. Truly we have much to be thankful for to our Heavenly Father. We have enjoyed a nice summer here in the Pacific Northwest. He has blessed us with another bountiful harvest. We have also been enjoying a blessed spiritual harvest. September 18 was Missionary Emphasis Day. John Nichols, missionary to Africa was guest speaker during the Sunday school hour. Our pastor, Frank Harder brought the missionary message, taking his text from Isaiah 54:2. In the evening the film "To the Regions Beyond" was shown, following a choir selection and testimonies. Great blessings were ours this day. On June 7 pastor and Mrs. Harder and family left for Butterfield, Minn., to attend the 50th wedding anniversary of his parents. During Rev. Harder's absence, Rev. Talbot, missionary to the Chemawa Indian School spoke. Peter Becker, in charge of the American Sunday School Union in this area, and the Gideons also had charge of a service. Other speakers during the summer were Rev. and Mrs. Lubin Jantzen, missionaries from India, Gerald Stucky, missionary from Cachipay, Colombia, South America, William Gering, YPU representative, Phil Thatcher, a converted criminal from Folsom State Prison in California, spoke and showed pictuers of his work with juvenile delinquents. Pastor Harder and Elmer Widmer, officers of the Pacific District Conference, attended the study conference which was held in Chicago, Ill., August 23-25. Dale Herr, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Herr, spent his vacation at the home of his parents. Dale spent the past year attending the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. He left Sept. 15 for the Rio Grande Institute in Edinburg, Texas, where he will be learning the Spanish language in order to teach missionary children in South America. This being his home church, we always welcome him back and appreciate his services to us. He is also a former pastor of Silver Street Church. Rev. Yoder brought us inspiring messages from the Gospel of John, based on the theme, "The Light for Christianity." The family of Rev. Allen Yoder had a potluck dinner on Oct. 2, in honor of Rev. Yoder's 81st birthday which was Oct. 1. During the Sunday school period on Oct. 2, the children presented a program in connection with Promotion Day exercises, with Mrs. Joe Yoder and Mrs. Lewis Koerner in charge. Our church observed Holy Communion on Worldwide Communion Sunday, Oct. 2. Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen, our missionaries to India, were with us for the evening service on Sept. 25. They gave a very interesting presentation of their work at the Union Bible School at Janjgir through pictures, curios, and speech. Mr. and Mrs. Joe Yoder, Rev. Allen Yoder, Allen Smoker, and Pastor Graber attended the annual business and inspirational meeting of the Congo Inland Mission in Chicago on Oct. 11. At this meeting, a citation was read in appreciation of Rev. Allen Yoder's long and outstanding service as a member of the C.I.M. board. He was a charter member of the board and has continued to serve faithfully on it throughout the years. A certificate on which this citation was printed was presented to Rev. Yoder during the morning service on October 23, by Rev. A. E. Kreider. Mr. and Mrs. Regier are missionary candidates for the Belgian Congo. The ordination of Pastor Daniel Graber to the gospel ministry took place at our church on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 23. Rev. Robert Hartzler gave the ordination sermon and Rev. A. E. Kreider performed the ordination. —Bethel Church, Mountain Lake, Minn.: There were two very special events for the young people of our church in August. For the Youth Fellowship it was the low German play, Utwaundre, which was given on two evenings in the high school auditorium. For the Junior High Fellowship the big thing was the week end retreat at Swan Lake in South Dakota. On Aug. 28 the mixed choir under the direction of Rev. Orlando Schmidt sang the Messiah. In spite of the hot weather there was a good audience to hear the music. Miss Marie Peters was home on a two-weeks vacation from Ponsford, Minn., where she works with the Chippawa Indians. Two of our families from our church left for service under MCC in September. Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Fast and daughter went to Reedley, Calif., where they will be connected with the mental health program. Mrs. Edna Schroeder and family left for Akron, Pa., where she will serve as cook for headquarters under MCC.—Mrs. Henry Kliewer, Corr.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Buschman Aug. 28. Sister Jake Boese who is seriously ill was taken to Oklahoma City, had been in the Perryton Hospital for several weeks. Let us remember her in prayer.—Mrs. J. B. Friesen, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: With the majority of our members taking their vacations in the summer—a number of them out-of-state—church attendance suffered its usual decline, but it has been rising again through September so that the church was well filled for Harvest Home services on Sept. 25. Dr. Maurice Troyer, Tokyo, Japan, will be the vesper speaker Sunday, Oct. 16, as one of the homecoming events. He is now vice-president of the International Christian University of Japan. The Indiana Women's Missionary Conf. will be held in the Berne church Oct. 20. The western Ohio Societies are invited to attend. Oct. 23 is the date for the Ohio-Indiana Music Festival to be held in Founders' Hall on the campus of Bluffton College. We have had religious films at two of our Sunday evening services recently. Both brought fine messages to us.—Mrs. B. D. Smucker, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kan.: The wedding of Shirley Ann Croy of the Church of God of Loveland, Colo., to Merlin D. Wiens from here took place in Colorado on Sept. 4. Rev. and Mrs. J. P. Balzer told us of their work and visits to Mexico on Oct. 2. They also showed slides. Mr. and Mrs. George T. Doerksen celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary Oct. 9. New arrivals are a daughter, Marilyn Sue, to Mr. and Mrs. John F. Enns, Sept. 13; a son, James David, to Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Flickinger, Sept. 19; a daughter, Sheryl Jean, to Mr. and Mrs. Walter Friesen, Sept. 20; a daughter, Debbie Sue, to Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Regehr, Sept. 22; a son, Benjamin, to Mr. and Mrs. Willie Friesen, Oct. 5.—Corr.

—Woodland Church, Warroad, Minn.: Elmer Ortmann is again at home from the hospital feeling much better. Mr. and Mrs. John C. Dick of Henderson, Neb., were visiting at the home of their daughters, Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Ortmanns and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Thiessen. They also attended the wedding of Melvin Ortmann. Sept. 30 Joyce Elaine Unruh became the bride of Melvin Ortmann. The double ring ceremony was performed by his father Rev. Ortmann. Our Sunday school teachers' meeting was held at the Ed Unruh home Oct. 7. The Lord again has given us an opportunity to have Harvest Festival. The guest speaker was Henry Rempel of Steinbach, Man. Mrs. Rempel and three daughters furnished the music in songs. A fellowship luncheon was served. We received a great blessing through the whole day. The offerings went for missions.—Mrs. Nick Fast, Corr.

—Zion Church, Kingman, Kan.: Sept. 25 was perhaps the brightest dark day the writer has ever seen. After three years of drought the rains came and by 2 o'clock p.m., it was so dark that we needed lights. Here in Kingman County, according to our oldest residents, we have experienced the poorest summer crops in their memory. Very little wheat, milo, oats, and feed was raised. Hay and native pasture was also very scarce. Typical of the often disappointed yet ever hopeful farmer we are now hoping for wheat pasture, which could greatly relieve the feed shortage. If these years of drought have had any benefits, it must be that we were made more aware of how completely dependent we are upon God's mercies, and how utterly helpless we are when He withholds them. May these days of scarcity keep us humble and unselfish in years of plenty.—R. A. Graber, Corr.

—First Church, Beatrice, Neb.: July 31, Bernard Penner was called to his eternal home. Memorial services were held Aug. 3. Aug. 21 was the final Sunday with our assistant, Arthur Dick. The same evening Laura Wiebe and Gustav Wiebe exchanged marriage vows. Last Chautauqua Park Union Services were held Aug. 28, and Sept. 4 we began our Christian Endeavor meetings. Family church night, which also was discontinued during the summer months, began Sept. 7, with a fellowship evening and a film, "Voice of the Deep." Sunday evening, Sept. 18, Cornelius Wall, who has been principal of the European Bible School at Basel, Switzerland, spoke to us. Missionary J. R. Duerksen from India visited the two churches and a joint service was held Sept. 19, at the Beatrice Church. On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Duerksen spoke to the ladies at a joint meeting in the Beatrice church. Sept. 25 was preparation Sunday for our Communion Service the following Sunday. We were encouraged to spend time in personal preparation.—Helen G. Jantzen, Corr.

—First Church, McPherson, Kan.: Three intermediates attended retreat at Camp Mennoscah. Robert Koehn served as business manager on the camp staff. The Christmas bundles as well as the Java bundles for lepers, were projects this summer and fall. Several carloads of men helped with construction work in the Udall area. One group also helped with the MCC Relief Center at North Newton. The Ladies' Friendship Circle has purchased and placed 26 Mennonite Hymnaries in our church. The Circle also sponsored a layette shower for Mrs. Goossen. The ladies of the Friendly Hour placed ten books in the library; also sold "Remembrance Plates" with a picture of our church, and are sponsoring a rummage sale. A son, Duane Allan, was born to pastor and Mrs. Henry Goossen on Aug. 21. Sunday school officers and teachers have been elected for the coming year. Mrs. Alfred Goering was elected president of the C. E. The MYF with Mr. and Mrs. Willard Stucky as sponsors, has been active through the summer. Five young people are attending the catechism class. Seven ladies attended the all-Kansas Mennonite Women's Meeting at the Eden Church. Eleven members joined our church Sept. 18 by letters of transfer. Mrs. Walter Juhnke from the Hopefield Church gave an interesting talk on mental health at the fall meeting of the L.F.C. Prof. and Mrs. S. M. Dell from McPherson College, who served under the Brethren Service Commission in Europe during the summer, showed pictures at the C. E. meeting Sept. 25.—Corr.

—First Church, Upland, Calif.: Aug. 14, our pastor, Paul Goering, used Isaiah 44:10, which was a spiritual questionnaire to every listener. A group of our young people, also Nathaniel Cross, pastor Goering and family, attended the young people's retreat. Nathaniel Cross served as dean and Mieka Willis as dining hall hostess. Minnie Horsch and daughter, Byrna Mae, left for Wadsworth, Ohio, where Byrna Mae will teach in public school. They are greatly missed in church, being active and always willing to use their musical talent. Leonard Wiebe and family have moved to Orange Cove to pastor the Evangelical Mennonite Brethren Church. Sept. 4, evening, an interesting panel report of the young people's retreat was given under the direction of Mieka Willis. Sept. 18, Gordon Kaufman preached for us in the absence of our pastor, who, with his family, was on vacation. We extend our sincere good wishes to Mrs. Leonard Wiebe, our former Women's Bible Class teacher, in her new field of labor. Mrs. Fannie Chapman has consented to be leader and teacher of the class.—Mrs. Joel Bachman, Corr.

High Work

Though lowly here our lot may be,
High work have we to do—
In faith and trust to follow Him
Whose lot was lowly too.

To duty firm, to conscience true,
However tried and pressed,
In God's clear sight high work we do,
If we but do our best.

In Quietness and Confidence

Superficiality is a barrier to peace of mind and peace of soul. Depth is required for unity of personality and repose of spirit. Silence is essential to growth in the inner life. It takes time to be holy, time for solitude and time for unspoken worship in a group and in the sanctuary. Many of our homes much of the time are as noisy as miniature boiler factories, with strident voices, ringing of the telephone, the shouting of radio and television hucksters, clamor from the street and incessant sound beating upon us.

A marvelous experience awaits the family whose members will sit quietly together in the evening, with radio and television turned off, with newspaper put aside, and engage in meditation and prayer. Thanksgiving flows for the divine gift of the home with all its affection and hallowed associations. Determination becomes stronger to be a more worthy member of the household. As the moments pass the invisible world of the spirit becomes more real, the presence of God and of the living Christ is felt more vividly, and the soul is filled with deep yearnings.

You have the time. The use you make of it decides whether you remain superficial or enter into the deeps of life. In the words of Marguerite Wilkinson, make confession:

Love deep as Heaven
Offered to men
Over and over
And over again.
Words deep as Heaven
Spoken until
Anger was answered
On Calvary Hill.
Life deep as Heaven
Given for food—
Shed for our drinking—
The body and blood.
Lord, whose forgiveness
Is seventy times seven,
I am too shallow
For deep things of Heaven.

LUNCHROOM INCIDENT

The Atlanta lunchroom was quiet except for the occasional sharp crack of an eggshell in the counterman's expert hand, the sputtering of frying bacon, and the bored voice of a customer, ordering more coffee.

More than twenty citizens were lined up on the stools. There were college students, a somber-looking man with a brief case, two young nurses, a little rumpled and hollow-eyed after a night on duty at the nearby hospital, a family with a little girl, and a sullen teen-ager.

And then at the end of the counter the little girl said in a carrying voice: "Mother, don't we ask the blessing here?"

The counterman stopped wiping the already spotless counter and grinned at her suddenly.

"Sure we do, sister," he said. "You say it."

She bowed her smooth little head. The young counterman turned and glanced firmly at his customers and bowed his head too.

Up and down the counter heads went down, the nurses, the students, the man with the brief case, and then, slowly, the teen-ager.

The breathless little voice was loud in the room:

"God is great; God is good. Let us thank Him for our food. By His hand we are fed; He gives to us our daily bread. Amen."

Heads went up along the counter. Eating was resumed, but somehow the atmosphere had subtly changed.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN

The stories of healing, both physical and spiritual, which we find in connection with the earthly life of Jesus should never lose their appeal to us. He healed bodily ailments when there was faith on the part of the patient. He healed their spiritual sickness when they showed that they were sincere in desiring such restoration. Lepers, whether physical or spiritual, could find their cleansing in Him.

In the case of Levi, he left his task—considered disgraceful by good Jews—and followed the Master. He proved his sincerity by inviting Jesus to his home. He felt his deep soul need and was confident that Jesus could meet that need.

So with us today. To long for cleansing and forgiveness, and to be willing to follow Him as He calls us is to be made whole and healthy. For Jesus came not to call those self-righteous who sense no need, but those who are aware of their sins and sincerely want spiritual healing.

CANADIAN YOUTH INTERESTED

The editor spent a week on the campus of the Rosthern Junior College, Rosthern, Saskatchewan. It has been an encouraging experience to meet the enthusiastic youth and the fine staff of teachers. Those visiting with the Canadian young people frequently remark about the eagerness and enthusiasm of the youth in their interest and concern for the Church and for active Christian service. This recent visit at Rosthern has confirmed this impression.

The power of a church lies to a great extent in the young people; their hopes and ambitions, their devotedness and consecration to the cause for which the church should stand. Age frequently brings on a tendency to be satisfied with things as they are or a desire to hold from further change. Youth lives in the next generation and senses trends and possibilities which may open up to them. Even though their enthusiasm may sometimes be misdirected, at least they have an earnest desire to adapt themselves to the actual conditions in which they work and live. Since these conditions often differ from those in which their parents grew up, there may be misunderstandings. But older people need to remember that in their younger days they, too, were eager to go forward in a practical Christian way. But what to them was a way of progress may no longer be so.

The Canadian churches hold tremendous possibilities of service and Christian power in the form of their eager young people. The youth seem serious and dedicated to the higher causes of the church. May they be given the proper encouragement and guidance to move ahead into greater fields of Christian usefulness.

MENNONITE CO-OPERATION

The evident success of the Mennonite Central Committee in matters of relief, mutual aid, hospitals, and the work for peace has raised fond hopes that such co-operation might also be experienced in fields of publication and education and other lines of work. Some progress has been made in the field materials for our Sunday schools.

As is now quite generally known, during the past year serious consideration has been given to the possibility of co-operation in the field of theological training schools. For two summers there have been joint sessions of instruction. Committees from various groups have been "exploring the possibilities" of working together more closely on the regular seminary level. By the time this reaches the reader our own Seminary Board will have met in its regular session at Chicago. One of the major items of consideration will have been this proposed co-operation.

It is extremely fortunate that at this period of history, instead of further tendencies to pull apart and divide our forces because of minor differences, the trend now is in the opposite direction. There is more good will and frank understanding among the various groups than formerly. Particularly do the younger people seem inclined to minimize our differences and express a desire for further co-operation. May we be sensitive to the Lord's leading in these matters.

CHURCH-SEATING MANNERS

Why is it that people will insist on sitting at the very end of the pew when they know full well that others will have difficulty in getting by them to sit further in. Perhaps if it is very urgent that we must get away quickly after the service there might be some justification for hugging the end seat, but surely this can not be the case with everyone monopolizing that particular aisle seat.

Is it that we are just thoughtless and careless and unthinkingly block the way for all others who must be placed on the same pew with us? Much could be made of the argument that to be a habitual end-seater is illogical, unkind, selfish, and even unchristian.

It would be a real treat to attend a church service sometime where the first ones to a seat would walk to the center of the pew, leaving the ends unobstructed for the convenience of the others coming later. Why not improve our seating etiquette at least this much.

Evangelism in Catechism

A. J. NEUENSCHWANDER*

Catechism is a method of teaching the principles of the Christian religion by questions and answers. A majority of the young people in our congregations have had the advantage of growing up in a Christian environment and with the further advantage of receiving instruction in Sunday school and worship experiences, from infancy. Such children are familiar in a general way with the vital principles of the Christian faith. In many of our Sunday schools children from nonprofessing homes are brought into primary and junior departments. In due time these children respond to the appeal to join the Catechism Class. Such children have a much more limited knowledge of the Bible and the essentials of the Christian faith. Although some seem "nearer" to the Kingdom than others, all need to go through the conversion experience.

Evangelism, if it is to accomplish its desired end—the salvation of souls, and their growth in the Christian life—must have a solid foundation. Evangelism at times operates in an atmosphere of emotion. Although emotion has a worthy function to perform, to put feeling into our Christian conviction—a healthy growth in Christian life requires more than emotion. This can best be obtained by careful and serious study of the basic tenets of our Christian faith. Pupils, even those who grow up in Christian homes, need to learn to make these fundamentals a part of their own thinking and heart experience. This must go much deeper than quietly listening to family devotions, the explanation of Sunday school lessons, or the hearing of sermons, which many think are directed to other persons than themselves.

In Catechism the pastor usually has a class of pupils who are approximately the same age and development. The intimacy of the classroom lends itself to bring the vital truths of: The Bible, God, Jesus Christ the Son of God, the Church and the Christian life, to the pupils in such a manner that it makes a personal appeal to each individual. It takes weeks and months to present, drill on, and understand reasonably well, these essential facts; so that the pupils can easily make personal applications of the things that appertain to their own lives. If and when the way of salvation is made clear as recorded in Scripture, and the seriousness of waywardness and sin has been made clear, there is a natural and inevitable reaction in the souls of these young people that they want to "get right with God."

It is at this point that great effort, time and prayer is needed to indicate to the pupils that much more than to "make up his mind" is needed, to defeat and unseat Satan from the heart. Scripture indicates that the mind is not the final seat of man's decisions, but the heart. Jeremiah 17:9-10 gives us a vivid picture of the evil that can be and is in man's heart.

When a person opens his heart to the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, confesses his sins, desires to be forgiven, and asks to be accepted as His follower, Christ will enter and give to that person a new nature, 2 Cor. 5:17. "Ye must be born again" surely includes a new mind and a new heart.

No human being can accomplish this divine work alone and unaided. The pastor and the pupil need to seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit so that the heart of the individual might become dissatisfied with his own state and devoutly seek aid from the Lord in taking the necessary steps that culminate in a glorious conversion. All that the teacher can do is to lead the scholar in the "way of the Lord" and let the Holy Spirit lead on to the blessed transforming experience.

The writer has had many classes in Catechism. There are no simple rules that can be followed in every case. Since God made each person an individual the above principles must be applied in each case as the Spirit leads. The results have not always been the same. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart," 1 Samuel 16:7. It depends to a great degree on the willingness and readiness of the individual to respond to the wooing, leading and guiding of the Spirit. "Let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not," Gal. 6:9.

BLESSED ARE THE LOWLY

Nowhere in the Scriptures are Christians commanded to be snobs. Nor is the fruit of the Spirit sham and artificiality. Solomon did not say, "Seek the favor of the famous and ignore all common people. Have friends who will increase thine own prestige. Ride not in day coaches, for the big names are not met there."

Rather the Scriptures commend the lowly, the humble, the meek, the poor in spirit. Jesus said that when we are invited to a wedding, we should not take the best seats. There may be people present who are more worthy than we. We should take the poorest seats. If the host wishes, he will invite us to "go up higher." Jesus also taught that it is better to serve other people than to exercise authority over them. The greatest person is the servant. (You can read this advice in Matt. 14:7-11 and Matt. 21:25-28).

So the next time you are slighted because your clothes are shabby or not quite right for the occasion, because you are from the country or a small town or the wrong side of the tracks, because you are merely a woman (or man!), because you are not president of any organization, because you haven't quite enough education, rejoice and be very glad. On the other hand, do not let praise "turn your head" and make you proud.

Because you are a lowly person and know it, you can always "go up higher." Because you are poor in spirit, the kingdom of heaven is yours. Because you are humble, the Lord can give you grace.

Why I Am a Christian

We are all men and women with a past. We have done things of which we are now ashamed—acts and words and thoughts which plunged us into conscience-stricken guilt. God does not ignore this evil and merely ask us to try to forget it. He takes it away through the blood of Jesus Christ. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins" (Col. 1:14). He thereby justifies the guilty, lifting up the eyes that were cast down in shame. I am a Christian because Christ has taken care of my unlovely past.

Christ provides victory over the evil in my nature and in the world about me. Man is enslaved and wants deliverance. Evil habits and powerful passions drive man helplessly before them. The evil which he would not, that he does; and the good which he would, that he does not. Through the power of the Holy Spirit, Christ breaks the shackles and makes possible a holy life. I am a Christian because there is no other way to triumphant living.

Christ satisfies my heart hunger. "He shall give thee the desires of thine heart." My happy home, my friends, my daily work, the beauties of nature, the best in music, art, and literature—these are mine through the favor of Christ who, "though he was rich, yet for your sakes . . . became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. 8:9). I am a Christian because I have experienced life to be utterly disappointing without Christ.

Faith in Christ and His way of life, solves life's problems. Like Job and Habakkuk, when we take to God the swarming problems which we meet everywhere, we find a satisfying answer. Even amid world-shattering events and bewildering uncertainties, the believing Christian walks with sureness. I am a Christian because the unchanging Christ is a fixed guiding point in life.

Life in Christ gives me worth while activity. It keeps one from the blind alleys which end only in disappointment and cynicism. At the end of much human business there is nothing but sweat and toil and tears. I am a Christian because Christ gives tasks which are significant for time and eternity.

The Christian's mind is lifted above the vileness and triviality of the newsstand, the radio show, the movie, and neighborhood gossip. For him there are the challenging morals of the Mosaic law, the spiritual realism of the prophets, the startling freshness of Jesus' teaching, the profound depth of Paul's philosophy, the outlook of John's visions. He who would know the pleasure of great thinking must be a Christian.

And then Christ gives us a permanent anchor of the soul. "The world passeth away." "The old order changeth, giving place to new." "Change and decay in all around I see." But all that relates to Christ is changeless and eternal. He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. Above the wrecks of time, His Cross still towers. To be saved from impermanence, we must attach ourselves to Him who is the beginning and the end, the One who shall reign forever and ever over all the kingdoms of this world.

I am a Christian because the Christian life makes sense. It is the only constructive basis for morality. It ends here without apology, and is the only passport to glory. Who would be so foolish as not to be a Christian?

Invisible Means of Support

Near Canon City, at the eastern edge of the Rocky Mountains, is a small ridge. Along the crest of this ridge has been built a one-way mountain road, rising from the floor of the valley where the wide highway runs. From the top of the ridge one looks down upon the fertile valleys and the busy city below, gaining a perspective astonishing to those who have lived only in the lowlands.

There are people who love the ascent on such a road. They marvel at the ingenuity of the road builders. They are grateful for the physical energy which enables them to climb to the heights, or they trust the mechanism of the automobile which takes them there. As they pause at the end of the climb, they are struck with the beauty of the scene below. That pause is filled with awe and gratitude and new insight into the nature of the land through which they have been traveling. Others there are who are fearful of that which is unknown and who long for nothing so much as to go quickly below to the familiar road. After returning from this particular drive, a person unused to such roads and such sights said anxiously, "There we were, on a road right on the top of the mountain with no support at all to hold it up!"

No, there were no posts, no railings, no wood nor steel to protect this road. There was no visible means of support whatsoever — save the mountain itself. Could one ask more security than that afforded by the mountain which had endured these tens of centuries?

There are those who go joyfully and trustfully on the road of life, willing to endure the rigors of the climb for the reward of the vistas opened before them, and who descend again, refreshed, into the valleys where their labor takes them. Others there are who fear the obstacles raised before them, who say, "But I see no means of support in such a life!" No visible means of protection may be there, but God is there! Need one fear to trust himself to the road he takes when that course has been designed by the Creator himself?

Relief Distribution to South Jordan

Vernon Frey, a PAX worker from Newton, Kan., is one of several Mennonite workers who assist in the distribution of food and clothing and other supplies to needy ones in Jordan. His description of the work reflects his intimate contact with the work and with problems arising in the work; it likewise reflects a deep and sincere concern that the supplies should reach those most needy. It is not unusual to find that where the need is greatest, there also the problems in effective distribution are also most difficult. Vernon and the others of the distribution team ask your prayers that through this work the love of Christ may be exemplified.

What will be the outcome of the new project to distribute American surplus food to be undertaken by the MCC and other agencies in Jordan? The people who have a claim on this food shall be poor nonrefugee local Jordan fellahin (peasants) and Bedouins. What is happening is that the refugees who are fed by the United Nations in Jordan are on an average almost better off than the poor local fellahin and Bedouins who have always lived here.

This land has always run on a low economic rate, and this year the crops have almost failed because of insufficient rain. This means that the Bedouins, or shepherds who own the sheep and goats, also do not find enough green vegetation for pasture. Their flocks cannot find enough plant food on mountain sides, nor sufficient water. This leads to a serious food shortage in all of Jordan.

The American government has announced a program called "American Surplus Food for Jordan." In this program the American government is taking the responsibility to send the goods on ship to the seaport of Jordan. From the port the agreement is that the Jordan government is responsible for transportation within this country to the different distribution points. At the distribution points the voluntary agencies are responsible to supervise. The foods include cheese and butter, and possibly later there will be wheat or flour.

Jordan has been divided into four districts and in each district one of the voluntary agencies in Jordan is responsible to hand out the supplies to the respective receivers. The MCC has been given the assignment of the Southeast part of Jordan.

You must keep in mind that Jordan is now a new Arab country, with many problems in addition to the refugee problem itself. In the American Surplus Food Program there are many details that need to be made clear between the government of Jordan and the voluntary agencies. The government tries to help us as best they can but there is a lot of red tape connected.

The American surplus food distribution may begin about in August if plans work out. Our Mennonite distribution team has recently gained some advance experience in this kind of distribution work. Because of the drought, the government has made special appeal for immediate help to poor people in the Southeast part of Jordan, with food and clothing supplies which MCC and the other voluntary agencies have on hand at present. (The same lists of receivers will be used later for giving out American surplus food).

We of the MCC distribution team went out from Jericho on March 21 for the first round of the special distributions. The goal was set according to supplies to accept 50,000 persons (or 10,000 families). Plans had been made in co-operation with the government to distribute to these families in three

Globetrotters With a Message

VENTURE FOR VICTORY by Don Odle. 184 pp., Berne, Indiana, Light and Hope Publications, $2.00.

Teams may tour the nation to bring honor to themselves and their school. Teams may travel to distant parts of the world to provide entertainment and reap monetary gain. But when coach Don Odle took a Taylor University basketball team to the Orient, he had a different purpose in mind; he wanted to win men to Christ. How well they succeeded in their goal, and the experiences they had make up Venture for Victory and provides a book that is strikingly different from any I have read.

Paul said: "To the weak became I weak. . . . I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some," (1 Cor. 9:22). Don Odle was persuaded he might be able to reach men for Christ if "to those that are athletic minded we became athletes." In answer to an invitation from Youth for Christ a team left for the Orient in the summer of 1952 to play basketball and preach Christ. The project was considered to have enough merit to be continued the next summer. In all 171 games were played under all sorts of conditions. Some 500,000 people were reached in half time intermission and 10,000 people signed decision cards. Men who were neither preachers nor theologians had an opportunity to meet different religions and to speak to thousands about their soul's salvation.

This is missions with a new twist. It reveals a way of getting an audience and conditioning them favorably toward you before giving them the message you have to present. Obviously there are questions that can be raised. Author Odle implies that their message was enhanced because they had a practically unbeatable team. Does the superiority of our message depend on the superiority of our basketball team? Can we best show our testimony by playing rough when the situation demands and not let "them push us all over the place"? But all in all, we have a vivid account of a venture which cannot help but challenge us to consider ways of broadening our approach to missionary work.

Summing up: A new approach, but not without probems.

—Kenneth Shelly

Flashes of Thought

The Real Appearance

Walter Gering

For some time I had been watching the procedure. I was tempted several times to remove it, just to see what would happen. For years it had been hanging in the same place on the wall near the steps leading into the choir loft. If suddenly it should be removed, would they miss it? What would be their reaction if it should not be in its usual place on Sunday morning? After all these years, it had come to be a permanent fixture, an opportunity for that last look before entering the service. It would be of interest to watch the expression on their faces, confronted with that bare spot on the wall.

You see, it was that mirror on the wall which had raised the thought. In single file the choir members pass through the study into the choir loft. The organ is playing the processional, the congregation is seated, prepared to enter the worship of the hour. Everything is in readiness—everything but that one last look. As the choir members pass the mirror that final glance is made to make certain that the appearance is presentable to the waiting congregation. Satisfied that all is in order they slip into the choir loft.

It would be amusing to see what would happen if suddenly some Sunday morning they should glance at the wall to see only a bare spot. Certainly it would be worth the experiment.

Musing upon the thought the question suddenly arose: why remove it? After all is not that the purpose of the service—that we might see ourselves as we really are? To be sure, the mirror reflected only the outer appearance, the physical features and order. But might it not also be a reminder of the inner appearance of the soul? From this passing glance at the outer appearance we were to go to an hour of meditation under the sound of the Gospel; an inner view of the soul as God sees it. There in the quietness of the hour we were to see ourselves in the mirror of God's Word. That was the real purpose of our entrance into the sanctuary. Not what we had seen in the mirror of silver but in the mirror of Holy Truth was what mattered.

The mirror remains—a symbol of the greater view which is to come in the hour of worship.

As all coupons on railroad tickets are marked, "Not good if detached," so fruitlessness in Christian living must be based upon our union with Christ: "For without me ye can do nothing."

Our South American Mission

Dear Readers:

Here follows a report from our Colombia mission field. It is amazing how brave our missionaries and Christians are. It reminds a person of the Christians in the first three centuries of the Christian era. Persecution did not stop them. Let us earnestly pray that such courage may continue. Our Christians are also human and to become scared is human. Yet our Heavenly Father gives strength for sustained course and love for the work.

SCHOOL

1955 has been an uncertain year for evangelical education in Colombia. All schools are now required to have a government license in order to continue in operation. No evangelical school has been able to secure a license during this year although nearly 100 schools have made application.

Roman Catholic parents are now denied the right to educate their children in non-Roman Catholic institutions unless these schools provide an ecclesiastically approved teacher of religion.

On the basis of not possessing a license attempts were made on two occasions to close the Cachipay school. Thanks to the intervention of the U. S. Embassy, the doors have remained open at least for this year.

Although a few students of Roman Catholic background dropped out of school the third quarter, the majority of parents signed a statement expressing their conformity with the teaching of our school and at the same time declared themselves to be non-Roman Catholic in religious conviction.

It is encouraging to continue to see the spiritual, physical and mental growth in the children under the care of the Mission in the Cachipay home.

EVANGELISM

Anolaima:

Anolaima continues with a very faithful nucleus of literate alert Christians. Special meetings usually find the chapel filled with sympathizers who because of fear and a love of worldly pleasures fall short of identifying themselves completely with the evangelical movement. Since last reporting there have been two baptisms. Others expect to be baptized in December.

La Mesa:

On April 24 two uniformed policemen interrupted the Sunday afternoon worship service of the La Mesa congregation in an effort to intimidate the believers with threats of imprisonment. As a result of this attendance fell for several months, but the majority, accustomed to opposition, were strengthened in their testimony for Christ.

Armando Hernandez, a member of the Cachipay congregation now in training for the ministry in Bogota, lived in La Mesa from January to May in order to teach in the school and minister to the believers as well as engage in active personal evangelism. Forced to close the school by order of the mayor, he continued teaching the children in their homes until his own school term began in June.

For two months Vernelle Yoder lived in La Mesa. She was able to open the school and co-operate with the congregation in their Christian work and worship. In July the school was closed again and Miss Yoder returned to teach in Cachipay.

Another student pastor, now on vacation from his school work in Medellin, is now working in La Mesa. He continues to teach the children in their homes and does most of the preaching.

Three new members were added to the church by baptism on October 9.

Cachipay:

During these months Cachipay has shown a renewed interest especially due to the stimulus of new believers from the country. Most of the new evangelical Christians are from Pena Negra, a former hacienda located three hours from the village. Several of these people are anticipating baptism and church membership later in the year.

As soon as materials are available the Cachipay Church plans to begin an addition to their chapel with the help of the church building revolving fund.

La Esperanza:

All of the evangelical families from La Esperanza have now moved to La Mesa or Cachipay where they are active in the work of the church.

Girardot:

Girardot is a rapidly growing liberal city on the Magdalena River. Bible classes are held weekly for both children and adults. Alice Bachert is active in visitation work and nursing.

Voluntary Service:

We have been greatly helped by the visit of two workers during these months. Peter Klassen came to us from Hague, Saskatchewan, and Huldah Myers from Omaha. Their contribution to the work of the Mission has not been small. Their visits have strengthened our relationship with the home churches.

Just now we are enjoying greatly the fellowship of Rev. and Mrs. Walter Dyck. Not since the visit of Rev. and Mrs. J. J. Thiessen has a Board member been on the Colombian field.

We are confident that we shall profit by their spiritual counsel and suggestions. At the same time we are happy that a Board member has an opportunity to observe what the Lord is doing in Colombia despite an extremely difficult period of time for evangelistic activity.

We thank God for His goodness and constant guidance. We are grateful to the Board and the constituency for their sacrificial support of this work and their ministry of intercession.

Among the Jews

Here is a brief report of one of our mission areas which we feel our Lord has assigned to us as a conference duty and opportunity. We should not forget the "brethren of our Lord according to the flesh." Other areas of opportunity in our Conference responsibility are among migrants, Negro people in our southern States, our American Indians, and to those in our city missions, etc. In the regions beyond is our work in India, Congo Africa, Japan, Colombia, and Formosa. Then our churches in China. Let us not forget this entire responsibility.

REPORT OF THE ONTARIO HEBREW MISSION

"THIS IS THE LORD'S DOING: IT IS MARVELOUS IN OUR EYES," Psalm 118:23. With praise and thanksgiving to God for His manifold blessings, we submit our annual report to the General Conference Board of Missions. The four avenues of our testimony to Israel are, the summer camp, the distribution of tracts, visiting in homes, and sending relief to Israel. The following is a brief resume of these avenues of service.

The Camp Ministry

Camp evangelism is an unusual and unique method of reaching Jewish families with the gospel message. These people come to camp in family groups, and are under our care and instruction for periods ranging from one to four weeks.

In the spring of 1954 a new site for the summer camp program was secured and named CAMP SHOLOM (Camp of Peace). During the summer of 1955, 101 Jewish souls spent their vacation at Camp Sholom. Daily Bible study periods for the adults and religious instruction for the children are an important part of the camp program. Again this summer one Jewish girl made an open profession of Jesus Christ as her Savior.

The Tract Ministry

A well-prepared piece of printed material placed in the privacy of the home is the only way to bring the claims of Christ to the attention of a large number of Jewish people. Numerous Jewish-Christians testify of the important part the reading of a gospel tract or a New Testament had in their conversion.

Our mailing list has grown until now our "Tracts-by-mail" are being received in nearly five thousand Jewish homes in fourteen cities and towns in southern Ontario, as well as in a number of Jewish homes in the eastern United States. It is our desire to place a thought-provoking piece of gospel-centered printed material in each of these homes at least four times a year.

The Personal Work Ministry

Constantly we are visiting in homes where we have the opportunity to tell of the saving and keeping power of Messiah Jesus our Lord. Many times we are able to cheer in time of sorrow, counsel in time of trouble, and help in time of need, always pointing to Him who is able to meet every need and overcome every problem.

The Relief Ministry

Again this year a number of parcels of food and clothing have been sent to help relieve the ever-present need in Israel. These parcels are sent as food, clothing, and money are especially designated for this purpose.

We covet your continued prayers as we serve in this corner of His vineyard.

Humbly submitted,
s/ Ross and Shirley Goodall

Work With the Indians

Here is a short report from one of our mission workers in Oklahoma, among our Arapaho and Cheyenne Indian churches and people. Temptations are great among our people. The degrading elements so often want to captivate our Indian brothers and sisters. Our intercessions are constantly in place for our dear people in our Indian mission fields.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
BOARD OF MISSIONS

At the beginning of September the broom corn harvest started. This will be followed by cotton picking. Many of the Indians have gone as far as Texas and Colorado. They camp out in groups at this time. Even though they earn a good living many do not profit from this because it is expensive to live away from home and that which is left is too often spent on drink. Besides this other temptations come, so that they are worse off than when they went to work.

We have been much concerned about our younger families. Many of the parents are drawn into lives of drunkenness, which leads into neglect of the children. Help us pray for them and us that we may be led by God to find ways to help them.

We had a very encouraging Indian Church Worker's meeting in our Thomas church. The theme of the day was "What the Church Means to Me." Most of those present took part in the discussion. It was decided to have quarterly meetings of this kind.

The Believers' Church

THE THREE COUSINS

The Church was at work in the lives of three men. Here is a story that will start you thinking.

"Klaus came home drunk on Saturday night again," the chairman of the church council said to Roger as they both sat waiting for the other members to arrive for the monthly council meeting.

Roger bit his lip. Yes, he knew all about it. And he didn't like it. Not just because Klaus was his cousin. After all, half of the people in the church were his cousins, and those who weren't were second or third cousins. It was bad enough that Klaus had been drinking more than usual during the last months. But if the church council was going to approach him about it, it might make matters worse.

The sound of the chairman's voice left him feeling that there was something in the wind. Yes, he sounded casual enough; almost too casual.

"Hi, Roger. Look at me; I'm here!" sounded a laughing voice.

Roger looked up to see Max crash land on a chair on the other side of the table. This was Max's first council meeting as a new trustee. Roger had been speculating on Klaus so much that he had failed to greet Max when he came into the room.

"What's on your mind, cousin?" asked Max.

That's right, Max was another one of his cousins. But how different he was from their other cousin, Klaus. Yet they both had this in common that they were both quiet fellows. People often said they were individualists. But Klaus could never seem to get along with people too well. He tried to make friends, but never seemed successful. It was perhaps his stern expression, but perhaps it was the fact that he never seemed to have much to say.

Max used to be much the same way, but lately he had been changing. Perhaps that was why he had just been elected a trustee.

"Oh, not much," replied Roger to the question that had been addressed to him.

Well, yes it is quite a bit, thought Roger. But then he didn't want to discuss it in the presence of the council chairman.

"Glad to see the way your Sunday school class is coming along, Max," said Roger, shifting gears.

And Max was really doing things with the class. Lately he and a few others had been visiting folks in the community inviting them to the class and to the church services. They had brought a family to church that had never attended before.

"Well, I feel good about it too," answered Max modestly. "Because we have been able to bring a few new folks into the church, we feel like we are doing something worth while."

By this time the rest of the council members had arrived, and the chairman began to open his Bible, which was the sign that he was about to call the meeting to order.

The meeting went along quite smoothly with nothing but routine matters to be cared for. But then it happened, just as Roger feared it would.

It began when the chairman said, "I feel we ought to do something about Klaus. We all know that he has been drinking, and it is giving the church a poor reputation. After all, we're a Mennonite church."

"But what can we do?" asked Max.

'Well, we can put him out of the church if he doesn't stop," replied one of the deacons. "The constitution says we can, and we did it once before."

"But we have to send somebody to talk to him about it first, don't we?" Max asked.

The deacon nodded his head.

"Yes, but it won't make any difference," said the deacon, nodding his head. "It won't change him. When a man gets started that way, he just doesn't change."

"That's just what bothers me," ventured the minister who had been silent on the subject up to now. "Klaus was one of the first members I received into the church after I came here ten years ago. And he gave as clear a testimony for Christ as I have ever heard. And I feel he still believes. Now I know that he hasn't been as active as some of the other folks, but he is one of our members."

This gave Roger courage to speak up. Even though he was the Sunday school superintendent, the others were older than he was, and he hesitated to express an opinion that was contrary to that of his elders.

"You know," Roger began, trying to find the right words, "Klaus has talked to me more than to any other member in this church. We often meet down at the mail box because our farms come up to the same corner. One time when we were talking about the church, he told me that he felt strange in the church. He sort of had the idea that people weren't interested in him.

"The Church is where Christ is living and reigning in the midst of His gathered people."*

"Now this sort of surprised me because I always thought our church was the friendliest in these parts. People have always said what a big difference there is between our church and the churches in town.

"But after that I kind of noticed that people were avoiding Klaus just a little bit. Now I know it is partly his fault because he always looks stern, and never says much when you talk to him. It isn't that he doesn't want to have friends and have people like him. I know he wants that real bad. But he just hasn't learned how to respond to people.

"And you know he feels bad about the way his folks and some of the others in the church carried on when he went to the army, and his father had always been a little hard on Klaus and the rest of the boys while they were growing up.

"With all the problems that he has now I'm afraid that if we go at him in the wrong way that we'll hurt him more than we'll help him."

Roger stopped talking. He was afraid that he had said just a little bit more than he had intended to, and he hoped he hadn't been too sharp.

"Well, what do you think we ought to do?" asked the deacon.

It was said kindly enough, but Roger knew he was on the spot, and he might as well admit it.

"I really don't know what to do," he said humbly, wrinkling his mouth. "But I know we won't help Klaus by fixing it so that he will leave the church. And I don't think we will be helping ourselves by putting him out. Maybe we can say then that we don't have any drunkards in our church, but inside of ourselves we'll know that we haven't been able to find a way to help people who have problems.

"I know that the way you suggest is based on Matthew 18 and that is a good way, and I think we ought to practice it. But I also know that Galatians 6 says that when our brother is caught in a fault, we should correct him in a spirit of meekness. And I don't think we have that spirit yet. I know some folks think that Klaus is the biggest sinner in this church, but I'm not so sure. I've had some bad feelings against some folks in the congregation and perhaps in the sight of God those things are as bad and mabye even worse than what Klaus is doing.

"Really the only thing I can say," continued Roger, "is that we pray about it and study what the Bible teaches. We need to pray for Klaus so that we can understand him, but we also need to pray for ourselves."

The group was silent. Out of the corner of his eye, he could see Max nodding.

"You're right that we should go slow with Klaus," the minister agreed. "Not because we want to be easy on sin. We never want to do that. But we have a responsibility to help the members of our church when they are in spiritual need just as much as when they are in physical need. I would suggest that we follow Roger's suggestion and pray for Klaus and try to understand him. And we should try to get to know him better. He's grown up in this church, but I'm afraid no one has noticed him until he started going wrong."

The minister looked at Max and addressed him. "I like what you have been doing in your class, Max. And I know you have been trying to help Klaus by getting some of your folks to contact him a little more."

Looking toward the rest of the group, he continued, "That's what the rest of us have to do too. And I like Roger's suggestion that we study the Bible some more. I think we would get some light for our problems if we would make a study of the New Testament Church."

There was some other discussion about the matter, but it was getting late and it was time for the council to adjourn. But before they did, they spent some time in prayer for the work of their church.

After the meeting broke up, and the others had left, Max and Roger stood by Roger's car to talk a little more about this.

Max spoke first. "Say, I'm glad you spoke up for Klaus this evening. It's really hard to understand people's problems. I've just been reading a book about psychology, and it's very interesting, but I can't find all the answers to Klaus."

Yes, Roger thought, that was just like Max; always reading books. That may have been the reason he had been so different. He used to get his religion from books instead of from the church. But Max kept on talking.

"And this thing about the church helping people is a good thing. You know, I never thought too much about the church. I've been a Sunday school teacher ever since the time I was a senior in high school but I just went to church because I thought I ought to set a good example. After all, I thought this thing of being a Christian was pretty much an individual matter. It was up to each person to live his own life.

"But after meetings like this where we pray and study together, I feel something is happening that I never experienced when I pray alone."

"That's right," agreed Roger. "And I think that's what a church should do to you. A church is more than a club. It's the body of Christ and that makes it different from all other organizations. We can expect things to happen when God works through the church."

ABOUT THE PROGRAM HELPS
These program helps were written by Maynard Shelly.

Are You Interested?

"I can't get interested in missions," a young girl exclaimed as she left a missionary meeting with an older companion.

"No, dear, it isn't expected you should—yet," came the surprising response. "It's just like getting interest in a bank; you have to put in a little something first; and then the more you put in, the more interest. Time, or money, or praying, it doesn't matter which, but you have to put something in or you never will have any interest. Just try it!"

Building A Program

The preceding story can serve as the heart of your program about the Church. Your study program should have two parts: the presentation of the story, The Three Cousins; and the study of meaning of the church for these three men.

Presenting the Story. You may have one of the able readers in your group read the story aloud. Or you may have a number of people read the story, each one reading the lines spoken by the persons in the story and one person reading the descriptive material.

Studying the meaning. The meaning of the story can be brought to you in one of three ways: A series of talks on the meaning of the church to each of the three cousins; a panel discussion in which each person speaks for each of the cousins, defending and criticizing the cousin's point of view; or a question and answer series in which the leader asks the group to give him ten questions arising from the story which ought to be discussed, following which each of the questions are examined.

Regardless of which approach you use, you will find the following analysis of the cousins' points of view a helpful guide:

Klaus: What kind of a church member is he? Is he a Christian? What are his problems? What are some of the causes of his problems? How can the members of the church help him?

Roger: What did he believe about the church? Was he satisfied with all the things his church was doing? What things did Roger want his church to do? What did he feel should be the church's purpose for its members?

Max: What was the change that took place in Max's life in relation to his attitude toward the church? Why does Max value his experience in the church more than the things he learns from books? What is his aim for people who are outside the church?

Follow-up. You may wish to have a second meeting on this theme in which you study some of the scriptural passages on the church, such as those mentioned in Statement of Findings. If your church is studying the teachings on the church in its midweek meeting or some other session, ask the minister or the leader of the group to make a statement about this meeting to your youth fellowship and invite the young people to attend.

Resource Material. The Statement of Findings of the Study Conference on the Believers' Church gives in brief form some of the Mennonite beliefs about the church. You can get a free copy for each member of your fellowship by writing to: Central Offices,

BETHEL COLLEGE

The past week witnessed two significant events at Bethel College, Founders' Day and Homecoming Day.

Featuring the Founders' Day observance was the visit of Dr. Frank C. Laubach "world apostle to the illiterates." Dr. Laubach spoke briefly at the Mennonite Life Tenth Anniversary Dinner where he commended Bethel College for its effort in preserving and interpreting Mennonite heritage through the Mennonite Life magazine. "You have what the world needs now," he stated.

At the Founders' Day service in the auditorium of Memorial Hall Dr. Laubach challenged his audience to respond to the need of teaching the illiterate masses of the world to read. "To help people unlock the treasures in books is to give them 'know how' of raising their standards of living."

Homcoming Day featured the football game with Bethany, won by Bethel 26-6, and the Homecoming banquet with Herold Regier* as speaker. Mr. Regier spoke on "Placing Our Loyalties." He defined loyalty as a desire to be faithful and a willingness to sacrifice for a cause. The speaker commended the spiritual and moral contribution of Bethel in helping students develop and exercise leadership qualities.

The Homecoming parade in the afternoon featured the homecoming queen, Joan Schrag of Kingman, and her attendants, Lucille Peters, Henderson, Neb., and Aida Reyes of Puerto Rico. Colorful and ingenious floats by the various dormitories lent a holiday atmosphere to the parade. Bands from Goessel, Lehigh, Moundridge, and Valley Center marched in the parade and played during the homecoming football game.

Dr. Robert Kreider, dean of Bluffton College will present the annual Menno Simons Lectures, Nov. 6 to 8, according to Dr. E. G. Kaufman, chairman of the lectureship committee.

Dr. Kreider will speak on "Anabaptism Speaks to Our Day," beginning his series at the morning worship service of the Bethel College Mennonite Church on "The Road, the Table, and the Guest."

A graduate of Bethel College Dr. Kreider received his master's degree from the University of Chicago in 1941 and his doctor's degree at the same institution in 1953. He spent the years 1946-49 in Europe in the service of CRALOG and the MCC. He also did research in Anabaptist origins at European universities.

The subject of Kreider's dissertation at the University of Chicago was, "The Relation of the Anabaptists to the Civil Authorities in Switzerland, 1525-1555." This work was done under the direction of Dr. Wilhelm Pauck who gave the Menno Simons Lectures in 1953.

The Menno Simons Lectureship was inaugurated in 1952 with a series of lectures by Dr. Roland H. Bainton of Yale on "Sixteenth Century Anabaptism." Last year's lectures were given by Dr. Franklin H. Littell, who spoke on "The Free Church."

The complete schedule of lectures by Dr. Robert Kreider follows: Nov. 6, morning, "The Road, the Table, the Guest," evening, "God's Creative Minority." Nov. 7, morning, "The Touch of Greatness," evening, "The Anabaptists and Great Issues." Nov. 8, morning, "The Art of Communication," evening, "The Anabaptists Face Opposition."

All morning lectures except the one on Sunday will be held in the college chapel. Evening lectures will be given in Memorial Hall.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

The annual Bible Lecture Week will be held this year from November 13-18, with Dr. George M. Gibson, Professor of Preaching, McCormick Theological Seminary, as the guest speaker. Dr. Gibson will give two series of addresses, one in the college chapel in the morning and the other in the First Mennonite Church in the evening.

At present Dr. Gibson is also Preacher-pro-tem of the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and has held pastorates in Methodist, Congregational, and Presbyterian churches. In 1954 he was an exchange preacher to the British Isles.

In addition, Dr. Gibson was General Secretary and Editor-in-Chief of The Pilgrim Press, Boston, from 1946-49 and has been active in the peace movement and other social and civic problems. He is the author of "The Story of the Christian Year" and "Planned Preaching."

Ten students were approved by the faculty to be included on the exempt list for the first semester 1955-56. Students included on this list must be juniors and seniors who have obtained a "B" average both semesters last year and have received faculty approval. Included on the list are: Marion Keeney, Edmund Leech, Diane Lora, Janet Musselman, Omer Nisley, Reldon Schirch, Carolyn Schnell, Shirley Shelmadine, William Simmons, and Gerald Yost.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

On October 10 a lecture by Dr. Frank C. Laubach, honorary president of World Literacy Inc., opened this year's Community Concert and Lecture Series. Laubach's outstanding contributions toward increasing the literacy of backward people all over the

MCC news & notes

AID TO CELEBES, INDONESIA

Concentrated in the central costal area of the Celebes Island, northeast of Java, are about 93,000 refugees. These people had to flee their homes because guerrilla bandits attack anyone who is unable to protect himself. Battalions of soldiers are able to give protection to the towns, but in this mountainous region they are unable to do anything about the insecurity outside the towns. It is unsafe to travel except in army convoy.

Robert Miller, leader of the MCC unit in Java, visited the Celebes in August to investigate the need among these displaced people. He reports:

"The only camps or refugee villages I saw were in Palopo. In the center of the town, on a low piece of ground near the square, there is a camp or village of 400-500 refugees. Their houses are poorly built bamboo structures, damp and dark. There are usually two or three beds in one house, but since there are 15-20 people living in one house, many people must sleep on the ground floor.

"Some of the refugees eat rice, but there are many who eat a sort of broth made from corn. In this particular camp the sanitation problem is also quite serious—that is, poor water supply, poor drainage. As a result there are many people sick from malnutrition, malaria, or dysentery. The doctor found several people who were seriously ill, but he could not take them to the hospital as it was already overcrowded.

"Some of these people were forced from their land as early as 1951, and almost all of them have been refugees for at least a year. A very few of them are able to find rather good jobs, but most of these refugees have no work at all or only very temporary jobs. They are dependent on outside help for a living.

"The government social office has been giving them some rice, 300 grams per person per day. But they only receive rice at intervals and cannot depend on it regularly. The lack of good food in the towns is shown by the following incident.

"A few months ago the army brought 500 persons from their land in terrorist area to the safety of Masamba. When they came to Masamba they were in good health and normal weight. Only two months later they were all very thin.

"They need food, they need medicine, and they need clothing. Some of the villages could be moved to a more healthy area, or steps taken to improve the sanitary conditions. This would require a certain outlay of funds."

MCC has sent 100 bales of clothing and some canned meat for this area. They are also co-operating with Church World Service in setting up milk kitchens.

CHANGES IN AKRON STAFF

J. Harold Sherk, of the Peace Section, is now also serving the Voluntary Service Section part-time. In this capacity he recently visited the VS unit at Wiltwyck Boys' School in Esopus, N. Y.

Velma Rupp and Carol Burkholder, Archbold, Ohio; Edna Heide, Mt. Lake, Minn., and Henry and Betty Penner, Vancouver, B. C., began service at Akron MCC headquarters this month. Velma, Carol, Edna, and Mrs. Penner work on the housekeeping staff; Henry Penner is maintenance man. The Penners are members of the Fraserview Mennonite Brethren Church at Vancouver; Velma and Carol are members of the Central Mennonite Church at Archbold; Edna is from the Bethel General Conference Mennonite Church at Mt. Lake.

Rosella Buller, Kremlin, Okla., has transferred from Akron headquarters to serve as matron of the MCC unit at Cuauhtemoc, Mexico.

weeks. The plans failed us in part since we did not receive all the help that was promised us by the government. In the different villages that we came to we found the officials had increased the numbers of the receivers, and as a result we could not finish the time allowed. Also the government transportation did not work as they had promised. After our three weeks were over it was Easter and we came home to Jericho on April 7. Our distribution had only been two-thirds finished. Now we hope to finish in the near future but no time has been set.

In some villages the lists of the poor people, which the officials had handed over to us with the promise to be good and straight, proved to be in bad shape. For example, in one of the first villages we had allocated for 800 families to be poor needy cases that should have a claim on the supplies. When we arrived with our supplies and looked at the list ourselves, the number was 1043 families. After a lot of discussion we accepted the list hoping that the next place would have a better list. Among these 1043 families we found out later there were people who were in high offices of the villages, some land owners and other people who owned stores. Then they requested that we keep some clothing and food back for some very destitute people. Now what do you think of the official and the list! The list is supposed to contain only poor people but instead includes the more well-to-do, and at the end they enlarge the list so that some of the very poor can also be included. We hope these poor people did not have to pay the official to have their names included in the list!

Another place in Wadi Arba the story was different. We came with our supplies to the poor people. When we saw the list it was also increased, but the people who were there were very poor. These people actually were at the point where they ate grass and whatever they could find; they had only a few rags on their backs. Here we thought the list and the claim of the people was good and we could give a good report on this village.

We see there are many very needy poor people in this country and they need help. Where should we draw the line as to how much the rich person should receive so the poor person can receive the help he needs? There are many questions unanswered as to how we can make the gap smaller between the rich person and the poor person.

world are well known. A missionary in a real sense, he uses every opportunity to help illiterates to read and at the same time to know Jesus. As a result of his proficiency in creating simple word-picture language lessons and his effective method of teaching, the governments of some 60 countries have asked him for help in setting up their literacy programs. His now-famous "each one teach one" technique has set up a virtual chain reaction. Literally millions of people are learning to read for the first time.

One can not meet Dr. Laubach without becoming aware of the fact that one is in the presence of a person who has learned to walk close to God. This was especially evident when he led the Chapel services the next morning. He inspired the feeling that he was talking from personal experience when he spoke.

Make a decision for God, he urged. Live to give and not to get. Go where God needs you most. Go where the battle is hottest for Christ and against evil. Before making this decision two things need to be done, he stated. First—you must understand the Lord and His method and His will for you. You can give no more than you have. Walk closer with the Lord so that daily He lives more and more in you. Let the Lord make you like himself. The second step is to make a careful study of the whole world—a devout and earnest study which seeks to find out where you are needed and what you can do.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The E. B. Hoff Lectures were given on Oct. 11-14 at Bethany Biblical Seminary by Dr. Halfor Luccock. Dr. Luccock is Professor-Emeritus of Preaching at Yale Divinity School. He has written a number of books with which the students had become familiar and it was a real privilege to hear him in person. Dr. Luccock spoke two messages daily. The lectures were attended not only by students and faculty but also by other ministers from outside of Chicago who came in for the lectures.

The Central District Conference Ministers met at the Seminary on Oct. 12 in which they continued the discussion begun in the Conference on the Believers' Church this summer. The meeting was well attended and several of the Seminary students also took part in the meetings.

Visitors at the Seminary recently were: Bill Gering, Newton, Kan., a graduate of last year; Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Ewert, Hillsboro, Kan., who were here for the Congo Inland Mission Conference; and Orlando Wiebe, Dalmeny, Sask., who was visiting with Mr. and Mrs. Louis Janzen.

The Seminary student body discussion meeting centered around the report given by Dr. Pannabecker on the discussion held about the future of the Seminary.

The President's Thanksgiving Proclamation

The custom of devoting one day each year in national thanksgiving is a wise and an ancient one, hallowed by observance in the days before we became a Nation, and sanctioned throughout the succeeding generations. It is therefore in keeping with our oldest traditions that at the fruitful season of the waning year we turn again to Almighty God in grateful acknowledgement of His manifold blessings.

At this time of thanksgiving, may we express our deep appreciation of those forebears who, more than three centuries ago, celebrated the first Thanksgiving Day. Through their industry and courage, our Nation was hewn from the virgin forest, and through their steadfastness and faith, the ideals of liberty and justice have become our cherished inheritance.

May we lift up our hearts in special prayers of gratitude for the abundance of our endowments, both material and spiritual, for the preservation of our way of life, in its richness and fullness, and for the religious faith which has wielded such a beneficient influence upon our destiny. May we show our thanks for our bounty by remembrance of those less fortunate, and may the spirit of this Thanksgiving season move us to share with them to alleviate their need.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER, President of the United States of America, having in mind the joint Congressional resolution of December 26, 1941, which designated the fourth Thursday of November in each year as Thanksgiving Day and made that day a legal holiday, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the twenty-fourth day of November, 1955, as a day of national thanksgiving; and I urge all our citizens to observe the day with reverence. Let us, on the appointed day, in our homes and our accustomed places of worship, each according to his own faith, bow before God and give Him humble thanks.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this eleventh day of October in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eightieth.

FILM REVIEW

GREAT DISCOVERY, 16 mm. Black and white, 80 minutes. Rental $25.00, Christian Youth Cinema, Inc., Glenside, Pa.

Connie is working in Europe after graduating from high school. During the summer she meets a woman and a young man who are missionaries there. He is a student at Westmont College in California.

Largely because this young man is a student at Westmont College, Connie enrolls there. Many problems develop for Connie because she is not a Christian and is living in a Christian environment. Through the interest and prayers of her roommate she becomes a Christian and only then begins to enjoy the Christian fellowship she had missed before. She and the young man begin to develop an interest in each other and decide to go to Germany as missionaries.

The film is well done and has a tremendous appeal particularly for young people showing both how a person becomes a Christian and the joy of a person's Christian experience.

The setting of the film is in a background that is different from ours and there are a few items in the film which are different from our approach. Yet, the film would serve a real need in practically all of our churches.

INTER-MENNONITE CO-OPERATION IN SEMINARY EDUCATION

During the past year the question of inter-Mennonite co-operation in seminary training has been receiving careful study and consideration. An exploratory committee has met from time to time both separately and in connection with representatives from the (Old) Mennonite group and at times with representatives from other Mennonite groups as well. The whole question of the possibility of some practical working arrangement has received very careful thought. Progress reports were presented at all of our district conferences by the president of our seminary so that people might be kept informed on this issue. Attempts were also made to ascertain the thinking of various groups concerning such a move.

At the recent meeting of the Seminary Board in Chicago (October 25-26), the exploratory committee presented its findings, and the Board gave careful and prayerful consideration to the progress made and the possibilities for the future.

The vision of an inter-Mennonite educational program seems to have caught the imagination of the people in the various Mennonite groups. Many important points of agreement have been reached by the parties interested and concerned, and "in principle" there is remarkable unanimity. On the matters of doctrinal basis, organizational relationship, integration of curriculum, and other matters, it would seem that satisfactory arrangements could be worked out.

However, on one important point there has not yet been found an answer satisfactory to all concerned. That is on the matter of the location for such an associated venture. The recent meeting of the Board calls for a united prayerful further study of this important matter in an attempt to find a "location that would be mutually acceptable."

Since this seems to be the one obstacle now in the way of further progress in the direction of mutual co-operation, it is to be sincerely hoped that God may definitely lead in finding the right solution in this important question. May our united prayer be that as further meetings are held to endeavor to find a satisfactory solution to this problem, we may be divinely led to the proper answer, so that this God-inspired vision of unity may not come to naught.

BURNING THE CANDLE AT BOTH ENDS

It will not work in a candle, but how often we try to make it work in life. We load ourselves down with more work or obligations than we are meant to bear. In our eagerness to "get ahead" or "to make ends meet" we fail to take the proper balance of work, recreation, and rest. We drive ourselves furiously and must neglect things needful for full living.

The matters we are likely to neglect are often the most vital parts of real life, such as giving our spiritual life the proper food and exercise to grow normally. To achieve material gain and possessions we often suffer spiritual loss.

Very likely less things than we generally imagine are really "needful." Jesus called Martha's attention to this fact. We may lose the "good part" because of being cumbered in a maze of duties, some of which would not actually be essential to full living.

The matter of choice and discipline must be rigorously applied in planning our daily schedule. The matters of eternal worth dare not be neglected. Burning the candle at both ends may seem a way of accomplishing what we want, but it is not the mark of a wise man.

MEN ORGANIZED FOR WORK

One of the important recent developments in connection with our church work has been the organization of Men's Brotherhoods, both in the local congregation and among the district conferences. There lies a tremendous force in a group of organized men ready for various types of Christian service. A surprisingly large range of projects and types of service open up to men of vision and consecration.

Brotherhoods should be encouraged to continue to advance along the various lines of serivce as opportunity opens new fields of work. To help in the church locally, to help the need, to pledge assistance for young missionaries and others in preparation, to undertake various types of lay-evangelism, to back projects on the mission field that are outside of the immediate scope of the Mission Board—all these and many more opportunities open up to men who are ready and willing to work.

What a loss in both work accomplished and blessings received would be experienced by any organized brotherhood, whether on the local or conference level, if they merely met occasionally with no worthy challenging projects to engage all their powers.

THE HARVEST

The Scripture verse, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," is too often used as a dire warning of what we will suffer at harvest time for what we have wrongly sown. Herein is indeed a sober truth.

But we should notice the opposite side. For good seed is also productive as well as the bad. To sow through the years acts of thoughtfulness, patience, understanding, kindness, and unselfishness, will in due time come back to us as a bountiful harvest. Many who have lived full years are experiencing this and find a real joy in old age.

The poor harvest in later years comes as a result of having failed to sow seeds of eternal worth all through life. But the rich and full years of many older Christian people is a joyous harvest as a result of their Christian living through the years. Such pilgrims are an inspiration and a joy. They have lived deeply and fully. They have sown the seeds of righteousness and God gives the increase. Old age can be beautiful.

Sent into the World

ARNOLD EPP*

Condensed from the president's sermon to Western District Conference

It has often been said that "we are saved to serve." Certainly this is substantiated by the entire record of Scripture. The purpose of salvation is broader than a mere escape from the confines of hell and the inheritance of an eternal reward, it is for us to be a witness so that through it others may be won. Thus working with Christ for the salvation of souls is a privilege that believers have enjoyed since the time that he chose the twelve apostles and sent them forth.

Mark significantly says, "Then Jesus BEGAN to send them forth." Ever since that day He has been giving similiar work, and qualifying similiar representatives. Thus He has also sent you and me into the world. He haid, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Christ did not say to His followers, "Go ye into all the world and CONVERT everybody," He said "preach the gospel!" That is the command of the Lord. We are not sent into the world to entertain, delight, or please the people, we are to preach the gospel to the people. This includes the love of God as well as the wrath of God. Sin, judgment, and hell are unpopular subjects, but nobody can deny that these subjects are soul-shaking attributes of the gospel of Christ. I wonder whether we haven't often neglected the full counsel of God. We have entertained and delighted the people when we should have been concerned with the proclamation of the gospel. We have been concerned with the whims, wishes, and desires of the multitudes, and have placed man's desires before the Lord's command to "preach the gospel." When we preach the gospel we are fulfilling the purpose for which we are sent into the world.

When Jesus sent forth the seventy, He told them, "the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few," Luke 10:2. In John 4:35 He adds, "lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." Yes, there is a great field waiting to be worked. But how many of us have become tired and unexpectant, and are doggedly going on day by day without much hope for any results.

On every hand we see evil apparently triumphant, goodness mocked, churches neglected, the Lord's day profaned, and God's Word spurned. We become discouraged and fail to see in these conditions the fields white unto harvest. This is not the first time in the history of the Church that conditions have degenerated to near hopelessness. History reveals that before the evangelical revival of the 18th century, the clergy seldom preached. They hunted, drank and gambled instead. It is said that Archbishop Cornwallis was commanded by the king to quit using the episcopal palace for balls and drunken revellings.

Then take a look also at the conditions on earth at the time that Christ sent forth His disciples to teach and preach. Religious leaders were worldly, corrupt, proud, self-indulgent, full of unbelief and hypocrisy. The Temple was "a den of thieves and robbers." The chief priests hated the Lord Jesus, their own Messiah, and at last crucified Him to get rid of Him. Yet it was under conditions like these that Jesus said in Luke 10:2, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." It was in these existing conditions that our Lord saw the great harvest fields. Let us not fail to see them in our day.

I fear that too often our view has been obstructed, our vision needs to be re-focused. We look for a harvest among the few who attend our particular church, whereas Christ looked out on the world of man. He looked at men like Zacchaeus and Matthew for whom the religious world had no place, or men like the Samaritans whom the Jews bitterly hated. We need to have our vision purified, and enlarged. We need to look at souls through the eyes of Christ and we will see men as souls for whom Christ died.

We are mistaken if we look for a harvest field only within the walls of our particular church, or within the framework of our particular conference or denomination. When Jesus sent forth the twelve He told them (Matt. 10:5, 6) not to go to the Gentiles, or Samaritans, "but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." He restricted them to their own people; but when He spoke concerning us He said: John 17:18, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." The WORLD is the field to which we are assigned, and when we look outside the doors of our churches, the harvest field becomes as wide as the world. We find our way into homes we have never entered before. We speak a word for the Lord in the market, the store, the shop, or wherever it may be.

There was a time when John Wesley felt it to be improper to preach outside of a church, but the day came when preachers refused to let him occupy their pulpits. Then, at the invitation of George Whitefield, he preached for the first time in the open air. Later he said, "I know my commission and see no other way of preaching the gospel to every creature," thus he chose the open fields as his cathedral.

Oh that the Holy Spirit might touch our spiritual eyes and help us to recognize the fields "white unto harvest" that are before our eyes.

"Untold millions are still untold,
Untold millions are outside the fold.
Who will tell them of Jesus' love,
And the heavenly mansions awaiting above?"

I am indeed happy that the picture on the level of the local church has changed considerably in the last ten years. At that time there were forty General

"Hokabon" dwellings are the illegal homes of Korean refugees. They cluster along the river bank, along the railway tracks, along canals and sewage ditches and along many streets. They are illegal residences because the refugee did not own this land on which he put up his little shelter of mud, pieces of tin and other scrap materials.

In August the police in Taegu forcibly moved 6000 of these families or 30,000 persons. The city provided areas for resettlement far from the city center and generally on hills and waste lands. Each family was given 15 days' grain ration and 60 boardfeet of lumber.

Any family who could possibly afford to pay the high city-center rents would not move because most of these people depended on occasional day labor for a living. However, the poorest ones, 3000 families, moved out to these resettlement villages. Robert Lee, MCC relief worker, reports on October 5:

"During the past two weeks we have made a rapid survey of the 13 resettlement areas. We discovered that many people are facing serious food and shelter problems and, as the weather cools, serious bedding and clothing problems. What impressed us most was the fact that there were people starving; as high as 55 per cent of the people in most of the villages were facing critical food shortages. Almost everyone was without regular work. . . .

"To meet this urgent need MCC purchased 24 sacks of barley and distributed canned MCC beef and surplus shortening to 565 families who were the most urgently needy of this needy group. These people will receive canned foods regularly every week to ten days. However, no more grain is available. MCC is also arranging for a bedding and clothing distribution to be held in October after the next clothing shipment arrives. . . .

"The most urgent problem in all these new areas is food. Although our canned food distributions will help, there will be many families in critical need of food this winter, especially where the principal supporter is missing or handicapped. In all the camps many people are begging to live from day-to-day. In the worst camps the people often pool what little grain is brought into the camp to prevent starvation. . . .

"Since the city's resettlement program has concentrated the poorest people into 13 distinct areas, eight of which are extremely bad, an entirely new field of relief and welfare work has opened up. It is an excellent opportunity to provide assistance and services with a strong Christian witness. . . ."

The PAX men in Korea plan to help some widows finish their houses and build a milk kitchen in one of these villages. This project can be duplicated in the other villages as time and money allows.

Conference churches without ministers, nineteen of which were in the Western District. Today there are only fourteen General Conference churches without ministers, of which the Western District has only one.

Though we are strengthened at home, this is no time to let up on the oars—this is still the hour of greatest urgency. We are challenged by the multiplied millions of the mission fields of the world. They need Christ and the message of salvation. In addition to these there is the vast unevangelized population of our country. Look at the vast colored population of the south; visualize the teeming thousands in cities of our land. All of these areas lie before us as the fields "white unto harvest." They are a part of this world into which Jesus sent us.

"Have your eyes caught the vision?
Have your hearts felt the thrill?
To the call of the Master do you answer, 'I will'?
For the conflict of the ages,
Told by prophets and sages,
In its fury is upon us, is upon us today."

Renewing the Covenant

Come, let us use the grace divine,
And all, with one accord,
In a perpetual covenant join
Ourselves to Christ the Lord;

Give up ourselves, through Jesus' power,
His name to glorify;
And promise, in this sacred hour,
For God to live and die.

The covenant we this moment make
Be ever kept in mind;
We will no more our God forsake,
Or cast His words behind.

Thee, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
Let all our hearts receive;
Present with the celestial host,
The peaceful answer give.

To each the covenant blood apply,
Which takes our sins away;
And register our names on high,
And keep us to that day.

Hospital Witnessing

Below are a few snatches of experiences in our Jagdeeshpur (India) hospital. What a joy it is when people who do not know of God's wonderful revelation for our salvation—Jesus, begin to see, and seek, and then find the way. India with all its turmoil and adjustment problems is very worthy of our intercession.

"He hath put a new song in my mouth" . . . and the words of today's song are, "The entrance of thy word giveth light." Wonderful promise! It giveth light! For some time it has impressed me that so many "sit in darkness." The things of the true God are so foreign to them.

During our daily service for the patients, one of our nurses went quite regularly to see a little girl who was unable to leave her bed. She told her about Jesus. And then the nurse asked, "Whom have I been telling you about?" "Who knows?" the little girl answered. Again after several days she asked the same question. The girl hesitated. Then slowly, and with great effort, she answered, "yi - - - Yi - - - Yishu Masih." The precious name of Jesus was just beginning to be known to her.

The young wife of a rich landowner was very ill. The nurse also went to have devotions with her. One morning the nurse asked, "Who has sinned?" "Why I don't know. Who has sinned? Has anyone sinned?" So answered the patient. Sometime later the nurse missed going to her one morning, and when she came later to give her an injection, the patient asked, "Why didn't you come to me today and tell me about your songs and Scriptures?"

Recently a very distinguished looking man came to our ward service. Before he sat down he very politely greeted us. A few days later he joined us in singing at the ward service. When his wife was dismissed he came to say "salaam." He hesitated a bit as though he wanted something. Dr. Alfred asked, "What is it?" "Could I buy a song book?" he asked. How happy and thrilled we were that he wanted it—and how happy he was to possess it! His actions and his face spoke, "This is something I've wanted for a long time and at last I've found it!"

Without a doubt the greatest joy during the past year has been to see God's Word given in printed form and in preaching. I thank you for your love in Christ and your prayers. I always need your prayer help—that the Word may enter and give them God's light, Jesus Christ. It is so easy for us to forget or to become so busy that we sometimes forget the needful—the Word.

In April Helen Kornelsen left for her furlough. We shared two and one-half happy years together. Now God has given me another Canadian partner, Anne Penner. She is taking over the work at the hospital and according to present plans I will spend more time in the villages.

Among the Migrants

Here is a brief excerpt from a report from our missionaries among the migrants in Arizona. Our workers pay much attention to the children, as it ought to be. So often the prophetic word: "A little child shall lead them," is found to apply in our day. The children arouse their parents to pay attention to Christ, and so often induce them to seek and find Him. Let us pray for our migrant work.

Another month and another quarter is at an end. During this time many things have happened. For us here with the starting of school it has meant changing our schedules from the summer when we try to visit each camp and have a Bible class with the children twice a week to having it once a week either after school or on Saturdays. It also means cotton picking has begun and more and more people are coming in for the picking. It also means that some of the camps that we dropped earlier in the year because they were vacated we are glad that again we are able to reach more children and adults. Some of the same people that come back year after year are back again. It is a joy to see some of the same ones. One wonders just who will be back and who will be some of the new ones. In this changing area one never quite knows what to expect.

The trailer loaned by the Pacific District Conference in which Miss Heppner is to live arrived today. P. K. Dirksen and Herbert Peters brought it out. It has been placed and connected to the electricity, and water lines.

We made 22 calls during the month. Quite a number we made as a family, and both of us made some separately. We were deeply grateful to God on Tuesday evening, September 27, 1955, when one man with whom Mr. Habegger had dealt accepted the Lord. It is our prayer that we may help him grow in grace and knowledge of Christ.

Eastern District Laymen Meet

Bringing to a close a year of many and varied activities the Eastern District Brotherhood gathered for its 38th annual meeting at the Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania, Oct. 8.

Reporting on his activities, President Norman A. Geissinger, Zionsville, commended the various committees and individuals for their consecrated effort in getting things done, because "you have worked, played, and prayed together." He announced the completion of our $2,000 project for the Education of Albert Bauman, as a pharmacist, preparing for the mission field. Also that the Brotherhood was undertaking an additional year's support on the same project.

Further emphasis was also put on the desirability of some definite organization for disaster or relief units so as to be available at short notice. A good many of our laymen took part in this work during the recent floods in this area of the state, with other Mennonite groups.

He recommeded a further study of the boys' work program being introduced by the General Conference Mennonite Men by the new executive committee and local congregations.

Walter Landis, chairman of the recreation committee, reviewed its work and the successful soft ball league season made up of teams from our local congregations.

Other activities were carried on prior to the baseball season. Our experience has been that playing together as teams creates a closer Christian fellowship among our churches and especially our young men. Each game is opened with prayer.

Stanley R. Fretz, Lansdale, reported on the music committee program and suggested some excellent ways to improve our usefulness in the field of sacred music.

A unique phase of the Brotherhood's program is our PRAYER FELLOWSHIP. This emphasizes the need of "going deeper" before going further in our work. Our motives must be born of conviction. Norman Wismer, chairman of this group reviewed the schedule of monthly meetings held during the year at various places, and re-emphasized the importance of the family altar and family worship in our homes. This work has been a real blessing to many.

One of the major meetings during the year is the Laymen's Bible Conference held each year over the Labor Day week end. This was the tenth year; and was well attended, especially by the younger folks. Arthur Weiss, Philadelphia, served as chairman.

Addressing a joint meeting of the Women's Organization and the Brotherhood in the evening, the Rev. Lester Janzen, pastor of the Bethel Church, Perkasie, followed the theme of "The Supreme Test of a Brotherhood" for the basis of his remarks.

The new officers for 1955-56 are: president George Scheifele, First Church, Philadelphia; vice-president, Nevin Yost, Hereford Church; secretary, Henry Mohr, Upper Milford Church; treasurer, James Miller, Upper Milford Church.

Flashes of Thought

Growing Old

Walter Gering

No wonder the papers were full of it; it was indeed a breathtaking sight. For days the papers had been preparing us for the annual event. Motorists were looking forward with anticipation to a thrilling week-end cruising along the highways, drinking in the beauty of the sight. From all indications this was going to be an experience long to be remembered. By the middle of the week it was apparent that this was the week end.

We were fortunate; within a few feet from the church this gorgeous display was being presented. It was there for all to observe as they went about their tasks. Early in the spring there had been nothing more than bare limbs slumbering through the wintry days. But once the rays of the sun began to take on new strength there came a change. The slumbering buds burst forth into new life, leaves covered the ugly limbs and the park was covered with a canopy of green. Family groups gathered under its boughs, enjoying the shady cool; our feathered friends filled the air with their music as they sang forth their praises to the Creator. The squirrels leaped from limb to limb, enjoying the heights. There is something about the charm of a village park which inspires the heart of all who take the time to linger for a few moments.

But this tremendous display over the week end was the climax of it all. Day after day those leaves had been clinging to the bough; they had been drinking in the warm sunshine, the refreshing summer showers. And even in the extreme heat of an unusual summer they had refused to lose heart. There they remained, a symbol of life in their beauty.

Now came this climax; at the end of the summer, as the leaves began to fall, we suddenly witnessed this breath-taking display of color. Instead of withering away in defeat, these leaves were taking on a brilliance such as only the Creator himself could ordain. As I walked past the park my heart was thrilled. What a sight to behold!

And in the moment came the thought: what a beautiful way to grow old. All summer these leaves have been growing, fresh and pulsing with life. Now the time has come for them to go. The summer is over; the wintry blasts shall soon take over.

But not without a challenge. All summer long these leaves have held their grip; even in the fury of the storm they have refused to let go. Now as they bring their little journey to a close they are ready to go; but not without one final display of beauty. I guess that is the way God wanted them to be. He wanted them to be most beautiful in their old age. I guess that is what He wants of all of us. And surely a life lived in fellowship with Him will grow more beautiful with age.

LORD, HELP ME TO GROW OLD AS THE LEAVES —BEAUTIFUL

Missionaries: In

A RUSS

In his daily search for what is news in India, the New Delhi correspondent of a major western newspaper or press association may learn that the Indian Government has refused a visa to a missionary, hopeful of representing his church there.

Rightly he files a story, and it appears next day in a thousand newspapers.

Theoretically this may happen, and doubtless has happened, a dozen times in two or three years..

It has also happened that other stories cabled to the West have cited extremist statements by Right-Wing Hindu nationalists, condemning the whole Christian missionary movement in India as 'imperialist' or 'colonialist' and calling for wholesale expulsions. These utterances, too, were news, and as such have been carried by the dailies of western nations.

Now in their primary function of telling us what happened yesterday, if not today or an hour ago, newspapers and newsgathering agencies haven't the remotest responsibility to give us also the whole context along with the news nugget. They may have to wait for a feature story or columnist's commentary, which the casual reader of nuggets doesn't always catch in his read-and-run day.

Wrong Deduction

The unhappy result of this, as far as the missionary movement in India is concerned, has been the growing impression that India has no place for Christian missionaries, and that in fact, the day of missionary endeavor there is fast drawing to a close.

The truth is the exact opposite. Missionaries are needed and wanted in India today. The door is open. Large numbers of missionaries are freely carrying on their ministry of preaching, healing and serving.

True, they are doing this, not as their fathers did, with the entire responsibility resting with themselves and their boards back home. They are working in co-operation with their colleagues in the new, and ever strengthening, Indian churches. But they are there, they are working freely and usefully, and they are welcome.

That the role of the foreign missionary has changed, all will agree. He now goes not only as a partner to work side by side with the Indian Christian. He goes at the invitation of the churches within the country.

Moreover, recent conversations and developments between leaders of both church and government in India give clear indication that we may anticipate manifold opportunities for the free and open preaching of the gospel in the years ahead.

During her visit in America not long ago, Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, the Minister of Health in the Indian Cabinet, said, "India is not anti-missionary in spite of rumors to the contrary."

Another distinguished Indian leader who believes we should face the future with confidence is Mr. P. C. Mathew, a member of Parliament from the state of Travancore-Cochin, and recently a member of the India delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations. At a luncheon given by the South Asia Committee of the National Council of Churches, Mr. Mathew said, "I take pride in the new Indian constitution which guarantees to all freedom of religion; freedom of belief, of worship, and freedom to propagate." He added that recent decisions in the Supreme Court have supported this guarantee. "This fundamental right, 'freely to profess, practice, and propagate,' must prevail for all who live in India," Mr. Mathew said, "and must not be denied to foreigners as some Hindu leaders have insisted."

India Is Independent

Christian people in the West must look at India, at the role of the missionary, and at the task of carrying on a Christian witness, in the light of the startling changes that have taken place since India achieved her independence in 1947. Change in itself is no guarantee of progress, but in India the progress that has accompanied the change has been notable. Under the leadership of Prime Minister Nehru, the Indian nation has established itself as a sovereign, independent republic. India has adopted a constitution consistent with the aims of a secular state. Untouchability has been legally outlawed, economic and social reforms have been carried out, and India has taken her proper place in the United Nations as an equal partner with other nations and as the ardent champion of those nations which are still subject to colonial rule. In 1952 India held her first nation wide elections. In a dramatic demonstration of political democracy 107 million people went to the polls to elect representatives to national and local offices.

The Christians of India, numbering close to ten million, have not remained aloof from this change. They have been a part of it and, to a degree out of proportion to their numbers, have been instrumental in the progress so far. They are concerned that their life in the churches shall evidence a similar growth. The churches of India are anxious to achieve complete independence and autonomy, to build up Indian leadership, to develop their own ways of witness and worship, and at all points to be free of foreign control.

The Missionary as a Partner

These are worthy goals. They are goals which both the churches and the missions must seek to realize. Toward that end the missionary from the West is welcomed as a 'partner in obedience.' In that partnership and in that obedience the Christians of East and West will find their place in a fellowship that can never be limited by national boundaries, a fellowship that is world-wide.

’s Door Is Open

NSON*

The missionary is necessarily one who is sent. In fulfilling their missionary obligation the Western churches have been sending their representatives to India for a period of over 200 years. This involves the churches in dealings with other governments and those dealings have become increasingly complicated, particularly in the years since the last war.

We can be grateful for the large degree of freedom and opportunity that has been accorded to missionaries during the years that they have served in India. The missionary has travelled widely, he has founded institutions, established churches, and proclaimed the gospel. That God has blessed these efforts is evident to all. Christianity is firmly rooted in India.

Political and Religious Tensions

Today, however, the Indian nation is caught up in the tensions that prevail the world over. There are political and religious tensions within the country. Giving voice to India’s special religious tensions is the highly vocal Mahasabha Party. Through this party, Hindu extremists are openly working for the establishment of a Hindu state, a state that would deprive religious minorities of equal rights and would establish Hinduism as the national religion. These extremists charge that missionaries act as political agents, that they win converts by offering material inducements, and that the adoption of Christianity is tantamount to giving up Indian nationality.

It is encouraging to note that Indian Christians have protested against these irresponsible attacks. The New York Times of January 2, 1955, reported on the resolutions formulated by the All-India Conference of Indian Christians. They warned government leaders that these attacks against foreign missionaries are widening into attacks against Christianity itself. In its statement the Conference declared, “Foreign missionaries will be welcomed as valuable co-workers.”

The government also faces external tensions. Communist-dominated states lie to the north, and to the east and the west lie the two sections of a country with which an uneasy truce still exists. Missionaries are foreigners and the government considers it necessary to be informed of the activities of foreigners living within the borders of India. We must, therefore, be sensitive to the situation which the presence of missionaries creates.

The government has made it clear that certain restrictions are in order. Missionaries will be most severely restricted in those border areas where foreign agents seek to penetrate or where unrest is caused by dissatisfied tribal groups. Missionaries must not on their own initiative and without due clearance, open work in new areas. Should expansion be planned, use should be made of Indian personnel, unless the need for a foreign missionary can be demonstrated. Further, mission boards should not anticipate an increase over the number of missionaries now in India. Instead, every effort should be made to train more Indian leaders. Where possible, work should be turned over to Indians. Lastly, it should be left to the churches of India, together with the National Christian Council or some such body, to invite the missionary and to establish with the governments the need for his presence.

Mission Board Policy

The Southern Asia Committee of the National Council of Churches recently adopted a statement in which it set forth certain basic principles to govern the entry and work of American missionaries. These principles should come as no surprise. They recognize the changes that have taken place and yet they are not born purely of expediency. They are principles that have been supported by missionary statesmen who, from the earliest times, have sought to build up strong, independent churches free of foreign control. It will be noted that in two instances (Item 2 and 4) the statement of principles is in complete agreement with present government policy. The principles are as follows:

(1) In all matters affecting the work and development of the Christian churches in India the primary place of authority and responsibility rests with them.

(2) The development of Indian leadership must continue to have priority.

(3) Missionaries should be intellectually and spiritually strong. They should be prepared in every way to make a positive contribution to the well-being of the people of India.

(4) It is primarily for the churches in India to state how many and what kind of missionaries they need, and to present those needs to the government.

(5) All concerned should continue to uphold the principle that the Christian belongs to a world-wide fellowship. By the very nature of his allegiance to the Head of the Church, he has the duty to share his deepest convictions with all who care to listen and observe.

The Church Wants Missionaries

The door is open in India. There is a place for the missionary, a place that is recognized by leaders in both the government and the churches. That place was well defined in the words of Mr. Mathew, who in addition to his government responsibility is a distinguished layman in the Mar Thoma Church. He said: “The Christian Church is supra-national. When some Christians in our country therefore speak of having a purely Indian national church one can only think that it is because they have not grasped or appreciated the Church’s universal character. Most of the churches in India want the help and continued presence of their fellow workers from foreign countries who are here not as masters but as comrades and fellow workers.”

While one "faith" prepares to divide the world, what can Christians do to span the gaps?

Christian Unity for a Divided World

DWIGHT WIEBE*

Here in Germany, where one lives on the very edge of today's divided world, a sense of urgency begins to grow within you. The future is so dark and holds so much of the unknown. A few weeks ago I heard a minister in Holland tell his congregation that Holland should forget about making plans for the future in the event it were hit by an H-bomb. If Holland were hit by one H-bomb, there would be no "afterwards" for the little country reclaimed from the sea.

Never before has the world been forced to accept such an unknown future. Crushed by defeat Europeans are looking desperately for a new hope in life. Only one with "faith" could live joyously in the present and plan for the future. Here in Germany I've watched one "faith" prepare for the years ahead.

The Communist Plan

Recently I previewed an authentic documentary film prepared by the Communists for indoctrinating their youth. It pictured boys and girls ten to twelve years old giving self-prepared speeches on the merits of Communism and praising Stalin, their great war hero and leader. If their three-minute speeches proved that they believed in Communism, they were accepted into the youth movement of the Communist party. There they prepared to serve the party in earnest.

The next section showed 15 and 16 year old boys and girls in party uniform learning how to use the army rifle in combat training. Here the youth prepared to fight and die if necessary for Communism.

Occasionally pictures were shown of Stalin Allee, the only completely rebuilt street in the Russian sector of Berlin. The film stated that every city under Communist influence would be rebuilt in equal splendor before Russia would consider the rebuilding program completed.

Never once did they show the heaps of rubble which lie within 100 yards of Stalin Allee. Only because I have seen the Stalin Allee could I recognize the false impression given in this film. Certainly the young people behind the Iron Curtain who have little opportunity to travel would never realize that this one street in East Berlin was rebuilt only for propaganda purposes.

Throughout the film one saw preparation for the future!

The story about this film is as unbelievable as the film itself. Many of the details are still missing, but it can be disclosed that the person largely responsible for preparing this film brought an original copy out with him when he fled his home country.

I have spoken with more than 20 young people who still live behind the Iron Curtain. Their reports all verify the story of this film. The refugees who continually trickle out from behind the Iron Curtain also corroborate this as a true picture of Communism.

Communism on the Move

Why does Communism present a growing concern for the Christian world? There are of course many reasons, but the following three are becoming increasingly important:

---

*MCC PAX director for Europe

1. Communism is training its youth for the future. Its thorough educational program includes the Russian youth as well as those of its satelite countries. There is no room for those who object to this teaching. Ten years of mute submission is moving the pendulum in the direction of silent acceptance.

2. Young Communists are inspired and willing to pay any price for their convictions. Many firsthand reports tell of parents and friends whose opposition to Communist doctrine has been reported to the police by youth—son, daughter, or friend.

3. Communism has definite plans for the future. There are other forces such as materialism which are just as anti-God as Communism. But Communism poses a greater threat because of its intense organization. Everyone who has read the writings of Marx, Lenin, and Stalin knows of the ambitions of Communism.

What About Christianity?

Christianity is the "faith" which has historically claimed to offer hope for the future. Does the Christian Church of today have a light for those who say the future is too dark? Or is Christianity only a shadow of a once-glorious hope? A faith with no answer for today's fears and no plans for the unknown future? Does Christianity have a message for the Russian people? Or does the gospel widen the gap between East and West?

If the Christian Church of the 20th Century is to continue its witness, it must be prepared to answer the following questions:

1. Are we youth training for the church of tomorrow? Does the crucified Christ live in our hearts?
2. How much are we willing to give up for the sake of our Christian convictions? ". . . let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me," Matt. 16:24.
3. What is our plan for evangelizing the world with the gospel of the love of Christ in this 20th Century? What are our plans for reaching Communists with this gospel? "Go ye therefore and teach all nations . . ." Matt. 28:19.

Prayer Spans the Gap

Is it possible that we have permitted ourselves to believe that a divided world is a necessary evil and an automatic phenomenon of this atomic age? Have we forgotten that all men were created in the image of God and that with God there is no North and South or East and West?

In the 17th chapter of Acts we read: "And he made of one blood all nations of men to live on all the face of the earth . . . that they should seek the Lord, in the hope that they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us." It is not sin alone which divides the world and prevents us from being brothers. Are we, the disciples of Christ, free from the influence of greed, pride, prejudice and self-righteousness?

Are we living the gospel of love? Somehow, we fail to realize that less than three per cent of the 220 million people living in Russia are members of the Communist party. Our ignorance helps to widen the gap and we feel that there are millions opposed to Christianity. It is then much easier to condemn and criticize than to pray for those whom we do not understand.

The hope for the future does not lie in the acceptance of a divided world which is continually in danger of drifting further apart. Only a true spirit of Christian compassion such as Jesus had when He saw the multitudes can motivate us to build a bridge of prayer which can span this gap. This is the hour in which Christians everywhere must unite in prayer for a Peace which will permit a hearing of the gospel without the restrictions of man made boundaries and barriers.

PENCIL POINTS

STUPID CHICKENS

Egg laying contests for chickens are the only competitions in the world in which the top prize goes to the most stupid contestant. For a newspaper question and answer column has just revealed why the hen continues to astound with the number of eggs she can lay in one year. She's stupid.

The secret of developing a chicken that will break all egg production records is not to pick the strongest bird or feed her the richest mash. All you need to do is to find the fowl with the fewest brains.

About the only thing that the witless hen knows is that she should lay eggs until the nest is full. Well, she makes a good start. But while she is out for lunch the farmer's wife comes along and scoops up Biddy's initial investment. Is she discouraged? Not a bit. She goes right on laying eggs, seemingly never realizing why the nest never gets full. Because her memory is so poor and her "forgetory" overdeveloped, this victim of the nest-robbing ruse is, pound for pound, the earth's most productive creature. And far from the hennery generations of dietitians and hungry boys have risen up to call her blessed.

Now this kind of stupidity can be an asset to those who want to live successful lives.

When we have laid one egg of forgiveness, it would be well for us to forget when and where we have laid it. That's the lesson Jesus gave to Peter. Our Lord suggested seventy times seven for frequency. Well, the hybrid hens haven't broken that record yet, but maybe we can out-nitwit them if we're really serious about Christians having a forgiving spirit.

And when we have laid several eggs of good deeds and they haven't developed as we expected, we should risk being exploited and do those good deeds again. Instead of saying, "It doesn't do any good to help those Europeans" we would forget how deep we dug before and dig even deeper this time. The world may say, "Brainless!" but I think I can hear another voice saying "Blessed!" In the process we will become fruitful servants for the Master.

When after a heroic struggle someone has proven how dull-witted I am (a fact that was so obvious to him) I take courage in the depth of my remorse. What difference does it make if I am stupid, if I am stupid in the right way? In fact, we could all be bigger blessings for our Lord if we could in some way double our denseness.

If there is a poultry standard version of the Bible, I am sure 1 Corinthians 1:27 would read something like this: "The Great Farmer has chosen the paltry-brained birds of this world's flock to confound the wise old owls."

Oh, to be as stupid as a hen! My point may well be dull, but that's because my petition is, "When it comes to giving fragments of forgiveness, make my memory of past pardons proffered as dull as a Plymouth Rock's intellect; and when my Christian commitment leads me to serve where I feel I have been duped before, make me as anxious to donate myself as a Leghorn who after months of being cheated out of what belongs to her is as eager to lay the hundreth egg as she was the first.

LEARN THE SMALL WORDS

It is no accident that such passages as The Lord's Prayer, the Twenty-third Psalm, and the Gettysburg Address contain many one-syllable words. Ease of understanding, and not beauty of thought alone, contributes to the place which a passage wins in the hearts of men.

Spurgeon told his students that "the costermonger cannot learn the language of the college." That was obvious; no one would dispute it. But many preachers dispute—in practice if not in theory—the conclusion drawn by the evangelist. Granting that market place and college are poles apart, Spurgeon threw down the challenge: "Let the college learn the language of the costermonger!"

Long, technical words are costly. They provide ready-made opportunities not only for lack of understanding, but also for positive misunderstanding. There is a tale to the effect that young Benjamin Franklin had a taste for highflying words, and once confronted his mother with the statement: "Mother, I have imbibed an acephalus molluscous." Frightened out of her wits, the good woman promptly forced him to take a huge dose of an emetic. Recovering from the effects of the potent medicine, the boy protested that he had eaten nothing, but an ordinary oyster. Angry at having been deceived, his mother gave him a sound thrashing. So Ben made a resolution that he'd never again use big words where little ones would do.

Josh Billings has a famous "affurism" that might have been coined for the pulpit. "Young man," he warned, "when you have tew search Webster's Dickshinnary tew find words big enuff tew convey yure meaning yu kan make up youre mind that you don't meant mutch."

Serving with him on the CYO Executive is Peter Klassen from Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, as vice-president. This year Peter is a student at Canadian Mennonite Bible College. Anne Giesbrecht is the organization's secretary. She does office work for a business firm in Winnipeg. Anne is a former student of CMBC and has also served with the MCC in Europe.

Frank Epp serves as the editor for the Jugendseite, the youth section in our church paper Der Bote. Frank is completing his work at Bethel College this year. The advisor is Peter Harder, secretary of the Canadian District Conference and field secretary for the Canadian District Board of Education and Publication. His home is in Arnaud, Manitoba.

At their annual meeting in 1954 the CYO revised its constitution. One of the changes made was the acceptance of the three-area-emphasis fellowship plan. Chairman for Faith and Life is Nick Dick from Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario. At the present he is a senior at Bethel College. Menno Epp from Abbotsford, British Columbia, is the Fellowship chairman, another CMBC student. Service chairman is Joe Neufeld, president of the Alberta Youth Organization.

Since most of the youth work in the Canadian Conference is carried on by the provincial youth organizations in Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, and Saskatchewan, the CYO concentrates on co-ordinating their activities. In addition to this they sponsor a youth page in Der Bote and are sponsoring a project to raise funds for a new chapel at Canadian Mennonite Bible College.

The CYO sends Canadian Mennonite subscriptions to all young people who are working abroad.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Dr. Robert Kreider, who came to Bethel Nov. 6-8 to present this year's Menno Simons lectures was the first Mennonite scholar to be presented in this noted series.

In previous years the lectures have been given by Roland H. Bainton of Yale, Wilhelm Pauck of Union, and Franklin H. Littell, formerly of Boston University.

While doing his graduate work at the University of Chicago, Dr. Kreider studied under the guidance of Wilhelm Pauck in his research pertaining to the early Anabaptists of Switzerland.

Beginning his series of lectures Sunday morning, November 6, in the Bethel College Mennonite Church, Dr. Kreider spoke on, "The Road, The Table, The Guest." In the evening he spoke on "God's Creative Minority."

On Monday morning he spoke in the college chapel on, "The Touch of Greatness," and in the evening in Memorial Hall, "The Anabaptists and Great Issues." His subjects for Tuesday, November 8, were "The Art of Communication," and "The Anabaptists Face Opposition."

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Tuesday, October 4, saw the college doors wide open once again and many students streaming in to register and plan their course. Fifty-nine students have enrolled so far, nineteen from B. C., seven from Alberta, ten from Saskatchewan, fourteen from Manitoba, and nine from Ontario. Classes began on October 5. The faculty this year consists of: Dr. I. I. Friesen, Rev. H. Wall, Rev. J. Adrian, Rev. G. Lohrenze, Rev. D. Janzen, Rev. H. Poettcker, and Mr. and Mrs. G. Wiebe.

"Praise to God" was the underlying theme of the opening program which was held on Sunday afternoon, October 16, at the First Mennonite Church. The choir, led by George Wiebe, rendered "Mit dem Herrn fang alles an." Rev. Friesen, president of the college, made the opening. Based on Proverbs 9:10, he emphasized the thought that true wisdom consists in a fear of the Lord as our Creator, Redeemer, and Judge and in a recognition of our responsibility to Him. No true instruction can be separated from a fear of God.

Scholarships of $30.00 each were awarded Margaret Voght of Kelowna, B. C., and John H. Neufeld of Aldergrove, B. C.

The highlight of the program was the message by Dr. J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon. He spoke on the well-known passage, Matt. 11:28-29, emphasizing particularly the words of Christ, "and learn of Me." He showed our great need today for more schools and colleges which provide a sound Christian training and also for more students to attend them.

CORNELIUS WALLS RETURN TO EUROPE

The Cornelius Walls returned to Europe aboard the "S. S. United States" Oct. 28. Brother Wall is returning to serve as principal of the European Bible School as it opens in November for the sixth term.

The Walls came to America in August to visit the brotherhood in Canada and the United States for two months. On this tour they described the Bible School, in Basel, Switzerland, and its place in European Mennonite church life.

In parting, Brother Wall said, "We appreciated the keen interest in the work and the warm welcome we received from the churches we visited. We are only sorry that the time was too short for us to visit all the churches." Folders describing the European Mennonite Bible School are available from MCC, Akron, Pa.

WITH THE MIGRANTS AT COALINGA

As the cotton ripens in September, the migrants return to the camps near Coalinga, Calif. The Voluntary Service unit at Coalinga teaches Bible classes, directs crafts projects and sponsors recreation among these migrants. Mrs. Carl Wolgemuth, R.N., of the unit is Public Health Nurse for the area. She also teaches a weekly class in mother-baby care.

Doris Zook, Strasburg, Pa., who joined the VS unit in August, describes two of the camps: "Camps 28 and 9 contain about 280 one-room cabins. The ground is simply hard-packed earth—there isn't a blade of grass around. . . . The windows are screened with board flaps that are propped up to allow for light and ventilation. There is quite often a brisk breeze, and the dust sifts in and settles in layers! . . . The whole family, often including teen-age children, live in this one-room cabin. What do you think the moral conditions would be under such circumstances?

"This is the situation in which I am trying by my words and deeds to proclaim the saving love of God. This privilege is so wonderful that we forget the heat and dust, the sores and running noses, the unpleasant smells, the small space in which to work and see in them dear people whom God has created and for whom His Son died. . . ."

Other members of the VS unit at Coalinga, Calif., are Mr. and Mrs. Carl Wolgemuth, Elizabethtown, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Friesen, Buhler, Kan.; and Elson Sommers, Uniontown, Ohio.

She gave a report of her work which was very interesting. The topic of a recent sermon by our pastor was "The Lord, Who Is in Advance." He ponited out how God meets every situation before we come to the point which looked so dangerous and fearful to us. When we have a burden to carry, if we go to Him in prayer, our Lord and Savior is right there and He carries the largest load for us. lives acquiring knowledge, Mr. Brown stated, we need something more, we need wisdom. Wisdom is knowledge organized and applied in a practical way in life. He closed with the prayer that God might help us to acquire knowledge and the wisdom to apply it in our lives so that God may be pleased.

A recent week's chapel activities presented a program of varied activities. On Monday Kenneth Deckert spoke on "How to Study." Tuesday the Dramatics Class presented several skits. Wednesday Rev. Lester Hostetler was the speaker. He told of his experience this summer when he and Mrs. Hostetler took a camping trip to the different Indian Reservations of the Southwest. He emphasized the contributions which the Indian culture has made to American life. He also stressed the contributions which Christianity can make to the Indians and invited young people to spend a summer teaching vacation Bible school among Indians. He also suggested that the teacher-training students might consider teaching in a public or government school among the Indians and help along with the work of the mission churches in the area. On Thursday the academy freshmen presented a well rendered program for student chapel. Friday the Music Department played some Bach recordings including an organ number played by Albert Schweitzer the well-known missionary doctor.

The Rev. Henry Bartel, pastor of the Bethlehem Reform Church of Freeman, and Dr. Carl Krueger, president of Mission House College and Seminary of Plymouth, Wisconsin, visited on the Freeman campus last week. Mission House College is pleasantly remembered by the Freeman College Choir for the fine reception they were given there on their choir tour last spring.

President Ronald von Riesen, Dean Harold Gross, John Ewert, registrar of the college, and Gerhard Buhler, principal of the academy attended a secitonal meeting of the North Central Accrediting Association held on the campus of Augustana College. Some forty high schools and colleges from southeastern South Dakota participated. Among discussion leaders were: W. Marvin Kemp, state director of Vocational Guidance; Robert Johnson, secretary of the Greater South Dakota Association; John VanWhy of the University of South Dakota; and Collin Winston, educational director of N. A. M. Among pertinent topics discussed was a panel discussion concerning the articulation between the college and the high school.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The seminary makes a concerted effort to combine theory and practice in theological education. Each student is expected to earn a minimum of nine credit hours in the Practical Work Department before graduation. At the beginning of the year each student is assigned to his work in which he can earn a credit hour each quarter.

Rev. Andrew Shelly who is the director of the Practical Work Program has made assignments for students to work in six different types of work. Ten students are serving as Sunday school teachers in the three Mennonite churches in Chicago. Seven students teach in the weekday Bible schools. Four students serve in the capacity of supervising Sunday schools or supply preaching arrangements. Two of the students are active in visitation evangelism and church visitation, one in the tract and literature ministry, and three students assist in the St. James Community Survey. Two of the students serve in Student Pastorates. One student also serves in the area of Christian Journalism and reporting.

Rev. John T. Neufeld spent several hours at the office on Friday, Oct. 21. Rev. Neufeld has been away from the office for several months recovering from a heart attack which he suffered in August. We are glad to report that his condition is improving.

Film Review

VILLAGE OF THE POOR, 16 mm. Black and white or color, 28½ minutes. Rental black and white $8.00; Color $12.00. Produced by Broadcasting and Film Commission. Available from Religious Film Library, 220 W. Monroe, Chicago, Illinois.

This film tells of three lives that were transformed in the Village of the Poor in India. This village was a Christian village motivated by Christian love.

The first life that was transformed is an Indian dancer, a girl who was dedicated to the Hindu God, Rama. She became sick with malaria and through the Christian native doctor she regained her health. Through her contacts there she became a Christian and becomes instrumental in helping others to become Christians.

The second life that was transformed is an illiterate farmer who was cheated by a moneylender. Through contact with this Christian village he was helped to start his life over again as a farmer and then also accepted Christ into his life.

The third life that was transformed is a young boy who was wandering about aimlessly because he had no place to go. The farmer mentioned above discovered him and brought him to the village and there he received a home and in time also accepted Christ as His Savior.

The film is exceptionally well done and shows in a very impressive way how the gospel of Christ is transforming lives in India. This film is produced to show the power of the gospel through missions and has no specific denominational emphasis. The reviewing committee was unanimous in its feeling that this film would meet a real need for general audiences. Persons from junior high on up would get more of the real message but it could well be used for a family night service.

NOTE THE EVIDENCE

When John the Baptist, from the gloom of his prison cell, sent messengers to Jesus to inquire if He were really the Messiah, Jesus did not give a direct answer. Instead He told the messengers to return to John and tell him what they had "seen and heard." The evidence was so strong that mere words were unnecessary.

If people wish to know whether we are Christians, they do not need to depend on a "yes" or "no" answer—they have only to note the things they hear and see us do and say. It is the evidence of a life that counts, not merely whether we attend the First Church or not. It all confirms the old saying, "What you do speaks so loudly I cannot hear what you say."

The real evidence as to whether we are Christians—Christ's people—is shown in our daily living; the attitude we have toward our daily work; the way we think of and treat others; the concern we have for God's children and His work; the matters of conversation; the way we stand by and support the church; our home life with the family; in these ways we prove to the world whether we take our religion seriously or not. How convincing for God is our life and conduct?

"Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me; may the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord my strength and my redeemer."

PREPARING FOR THANKSGIVING

The editor anticipates the somewhat unusual experience to live through two official Thanksgiving Days this fall—the one in Canada on November 10, and the one in the "States" on November 24. In both cases the governments of two great countries request that we pause to give thanks to Almighty God for the blessings that have been ours through the year. If our governments consider such a day important how much more should the churches observe it in special ways.

Usually a good deal of preparation goes into a Thanksgiving vacation. That is, planning for travel and visits and meals. More preparation should go into the deeper life of gratitude; in remembering the comfort, guidance, love, and joy that our Heavenly Father has brought us. Remembering, too, the lessons He has been teaching us the past year; calling to mind His patient guidance, His loving forgiveness. We should remember also how much we owe to other people, the members of our immediate family, our friends, and neighbors, the people of our church.

Preparation for Thanksgiving should go deeper than merely planning a trip or a big meal. Where it includes a preparation of heart and soul we will be able to celebrate the day in a real spirit of gratitude. To thank well is to think deeply.

TO KNOW GOD'S WILL

The great desire of all true Christians is to be kept in the center of God's will. We recognize that God has a definite place for us and are deeply concerned that we may find this place, and there fit into God's plan. That He has a plan for everyone is certain. As Spurgeon once said, "God has no time to make nobodies." In His plan all are important. It is only as we ruin our lives in defiance of His plan that we become nobodies.

Starting with the assumption that God is more ready to reveal His will for our lives than we are to accept His plan, it is evident that we need to hold ourselves in readiness to hear His voice. He can speak to us in various ways: through the Bible, through circumstances, by means of our friends, or through deep inner convictions that will not be silenced. We need to be willing to do well the task at hand for this day with the conviction that, at the proper time, He will reveal the next step. Our difficulty often is that we become impatient and want to see the whole way ahead. But God usually does not lay before us the complete plans for the rest of our lives, He expects us to take one step at a time, in faith.

The promptings of the Holy Spirit should be quickly heeded. For the Spirit endeavors to lead us in the will of God. Prayer, and the quiet moments of devotion will help us hear His voice when He speaks.

But it is very important that our whole attitude be one of complete consecration to God and a full willingness to follow His leading wherever it may be. To such as earnestly seek to do His will, He will certainly make it plain in due time.

A PRINCESS DECIDES

The whole world had been watching to see how Princess Margaret of Great Britain would decide the important question of choosing between her feeling of love for a man and her obligation to royalty and the church. The Established Church, of which her sister the Queen is head, does not favor marriage with a divorced person. Almost twenty-two years ago, her uncle, then King Edward VIII, faced a similar choice. He abdicated the throne to marry a divorced woman. But Princess Margaret made her painful choice otherwise; she decided to stand by the teachings of the Church.

The Princess' decision is both hailed and lamented. Some severely blamed the Church and the church officials for being too strict; others feel she has made a great choice in upholding the high morality of the church's teaching. We believe her choice was dictated by her conscience, and has done much to hold high the moral standards of the church. To sacrifice one's love for another because of a greater loyalty to the church and its teachings should bring its rewards, greater than its pains. Such a choice is not easy, but it has great consequences.

Spiritual Opportunities in College

CONNIE DILLER*

During a Sunday afternoon retreat for freshmen at Bluffton College this fall, four of the new students shared their thoughts on the subject, "What I Hope to Receive from College." The desire for spiritual growth was high on most of their lists.

For the many students like those freshmen, who are sincere in wanting to develop a firmer Christian faith, college furnishes plentiful opportunities. It would be hard to ignore the fact that during college a person holds perhaps the greatest chance he will ever have to become acquainted with spiritual realities and to develop a strong faith.

College years are times of decision. Whether it is consciously or unconsciously, the college student either walks more closely with Christ or drifts farther away from Him every year.

Unfortunately, a great number of students don't realize this until they have come to the end of their college life. It often seems much more important to fulfill academic and social obligations than to keep from "backsliding" in spiritual growth.

What causes this failure to recognize the importance of growing in the Christian faith? One reason might be that people run into difficulties sooner when they neglect academic and social responsibilities than when they ignore the spiritual side of life.

Another explanation for this lack of awareness might be that spiritual truths do not actually seem real to many people. The depth of a college student's religious life is determined mainly by whether he has a basis for believing in God. Usually a person is unable to get a glimpse of the true spiritual realities until the love and power of God have entered his heart and become the foundation for his faith.

How, then, does a college provide the individual with a chance to know God better? Part of the answer to this question can be found in looking at the nature of college life. For example, almost every student is acquainted with the perpetual "bull sessions" which are an indication of the constant thinking done by students on all sorts of subjects. This type of atmosphere provides a golden opportunity for personal study about Christianity and sharing of Christian experiences.

Another way in which the college gives a person a good chance to grow in Christianity is in the organized religious activities. Christian Associations affiliated with the YMCA and YWCA are present in many colleges. Through these, the students are able to participate in a world-wide program of Christian co-operation. At larger colleges and universities, denominational foundations are established to meet the spiritual needs of the student. Daily chapel services, organized prayer meetings, and special religious emphasis weeks are important contributions of church-affiliated colleges.

Whether they realize it or not, college students are in an excellent position to discover the spiritual truths and to build a firm Christian belief. It would probably be wise for a student to realize that the unique spiritual opportunity to be found in college life knocks but once.

A Saturday Nightmare

MRS. LEROY WEIDNER

"Hello. Is your husband there?" "Just a minute please." This was the third call in an hour that had begun this very day. They had all ended the same way too.

The call from the teacher of the young people's class had been first. He and his wife had decided to spend Saturday with friends in the mountains. When evening came, the wonderful autumn weather and the friends' importunity persuaded them to stay and spend Sunday revelling in the splendor of God's wonderful world. 'Would my husband please teach his class tomorrow?' 'Yes, of course he would.' He replaced the receiver with a groan. He had just returned home from a day's work. Tired and dirty, he had planned a quick shower and a little session with the children before their bedtime. Then he would set up his program for the Sunday school worship service and perhaps give his wife a hand with last minute preparations for Sunday dinner when they would entertain the visiting minister and his family, and finally to bed. Now, added to this, there was a Sunday school lesson to prepare. Also, the uncomfortable guilt feeling that he would be presenting an inadequately prepared lesson to a group of young people who needed to be challenged to live useful Christian lives.

While he was in the shower, the telephone began its insistent ringing again. The teacher in the beginners' class had come down with a severe cold. "Could my husband find a substitute please?" He was sure he could. "Thank you for calling." A hurried call to a regular substitute took care of this emergency.

The final worried call from the husband of the superintendent of the children's department was more involved. The teacher of the junior class was sick. His wife had planned to substitute. Now she was in bed feeling very miserable herself. What could be done? My husband assured his caller that everything would work out all right. He felt very little of the confidence he was trying to impart. After

Lord, We Thank Thee

A. A. LEHMAN

Lord—for Thy love beyond compare
And for Thy constant tender care—,
For keeping watch o'er us alway
Where'er we were by night or day,
For Thy so strong protecting arm
Which shielded us from every harm,
For knowing Thou wast always near
As we lived through this passing year—
We thank Thee.

Lord—for the seasons of the year—
The spring, the summer, fall, now here,
For winter which ere long will come,
When we may rest, if work is done,
For sunshine and for weather, fair,
A token of Thy loving care,
For rain in season to prevail—
Thou'st said all these shall never fail—
We thank Thee.

For hay and oats, and wheat and corn
From fields, now garnered in the barn,
For apples, cherries, peaches, pears,
That luscious fruit the orchard bears,
For all the crops from garden plots
Now stored away in cans and pots,
For all these blessings rich and good
Which come from Thee our loving Lord—
We thank Thee.

For a good home where we may dwell
And live with those we love so well—
For children—sons and daughters, dear,
Whose presence always brings us cheer,
For friends, who love and kindness show
Where'er we meet them, as we go,
For all this friendly attitude
Inspired by Thee, our blessed Lord—
We thank Thee.

But most of all we thank Thee, Lord
For spiritual blessings. Thy holy Word,
It serves us as our guide each day;
It tells us trust in Thee always;
Reminds us Thou art ever near,
And trusting Thee we need not fear.
It promises Thy spirit's power
Shall be with us each day, each hour—
We thank Thee.

Lord, grant that this Thanksgiving Day
We may bow reverently—to pray;
Acknowledging Thy grace and love,
Praise Thee for blessings from above.
For temporal, spiritual blessings, we
So helpless creatures, look to Thee.
Again this year Thou'st granted both,
Supplied our needs as Thou always dost.
We thank Thee.

The bounties we've received from Heaven
From our good Lord, so freely given,
Were not designed for selfish use.
These gifts we dare not to abuse.
But we must share the gifts with others;
Help helpless neighbors, needy brothers.
This done in love, the God-planned way,
He knows we mean it, when we say—
We thank Thee.

Grant, then, O God, that we may see
That Thou hast blessed us, so that we
In turn may help the ones in need,
And prove to them a friend indeed.
Help us to share Thy blessed gift
And give the needy souls a lift.
May we assist them so that they Find cause to sing their joyful lay—
And thank Thee.

Relief Center Building Dedication

Dedication services for the new MCC Relief Center building recently constructed at North Newton were held Sunday afternoon, Nov. 6. The first portion of the program was held at Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kan. Robert Kreider, former director of MCC Relief in Europe and presently dean of Bluffton College, Ohio, gave the dedicatory address. Following the dedicatory address the group moved to the new building for the remaining dedication ceremonies.

This new building will be used as a clothing center and cutting room for garments to be sewed for relief and missions. The round-top building formerly used as clothing center will meet an urgent need for taking care of canned foods.

On Nov. 5 an MCC workers' reunion was also held. In the afternoon the new relief center was open to visitors and the German art prints were on exhibit. A potluck supper was served in the basement of the First Mennonite Church at Newton, followed by an evening program.

Taichung Babies Home

MRS. GLEN GRABER

The Babies Home in Taichung, Formosa, continues to be a busy and active place. There are at present fifty little ones in the home and it is very interesting to watch them grow and develop. The home was opened two and one-half years ago and has a capacity for fifty small children. The home was filled eighteen months after it was opened and has continued to be full until the present time. Now there is a waiting list of children that would like to be taken into the home.

There are five amahs who care for the children. They have been trained to give them the proper physical care and also the love and affection necessary to a child's growth and development. Naturally the children grow very attached to their amah as she is their mother. Each age group of children are together and one amah is assigned to them. Other workers may come in and help her with the children but the actual care of the children is her responsibility. Besides the amahs there are two cooks, two laundry ladies, a matron, and a gardener. These eleven workers make up the staff for the home. They are dependable and reliable workers who are working here because they feel they can make a real contribution as they serve in the name of Christ.

Ages of the children vary from newborn babies until five years of age. When they reach five years of age they are given a party and are sent to the CCF Orphanage, also in Taichung, for older children. The children taken into the homes are foundlings, some we do not know anything about their backgrounds, and we have even had to give them names.

Others are complete orphans while others are from broken homes where neither parent will accept the responsibility for the child. We also have some who are not wanted in the home because of superstitious beliefs, an example of this is twins. They are not wanted because people believe they will bring bad luck and a member of the family will die. When they are born in heathen homes like this, especially if both children are girls, one or both of them are just left to die.

With smaller children coming into the home the problem is sickness. They are often very tiny when they are born and from birth many of them never receive the proper care and food. This is either due to ignorance, poverty, or neglect. As a result of this they come to us undernourished and weak. When a child is received in this condition proper feedings are very important. As their physical condition improves these children usually adjust to life in the home very well. Children over eighteen months or two years are usually not taken into the home but they are accepted if they are needy cases. At present there are several who have entered the home when they were about three years of age. These are from broken homes and the adjustment they have to make is more difficult and often it takes them several weeks before they can relax and feel like this is their home. They are withdrawn and do not trust anyone. Usually this can be overcome by special attention and making them feel they are a part of the family.

The older children all attend a nursery school. This is held daily and it helps all of them to talk sooner and makes them used to other children. Other than Sunday school this is the only contact they have with outside children and we feel it is a valuable contact. They all enjoy going and in the morning they dress quickly and eat their breakfast so they can go early to play.

Please pray for the little ones in this home. The responsibility is a big one and those in charge need your prayers. Also pray for the workers, that they may continue to give the children the love, care, and affection which is so necessary in their lives. This work is your work also.

Report from Hotevilla

When from our yard near the outskirts of Bacabi, one can see crowds of people looking down into a Kiva (a Hopi underground place of worship and ceremony) and knows that there must be many participants inside; when one compares this number with the few who come to our Christian services, it is natural to be somewhat discouraged. Yet we know that they are in heathen darkness and that we have the light. We are also aware that the god of this world has blinded them who are lost.

There are not only discouragements, however, but reasons to praise God. Practically all of our mission school pupils come to school regularly and are cooperative. Daily they hear the Word and God has promised: "So shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This does not mean that attendance at our school or our services will guarantee that the pupil will accept Christ. Some do become Christians as a result of influences at school, vacation Bible school, Sunday school, or church services; others will later, even though it may take years. There will always be those, however, who continue to reject our Savior. This is because God has given to all the privilege to decide for or against Him. Concerning those who decide for Him, there is joy in heaven before the angels of God. Concerning those who continue to reject there must be sadness in the heart of the One who wept over Jerusalem and had occasion to exclaim: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not. . . ."

For those who accept Jesus as Savior and Lord

Board of Christian Service

Berne Peace and Service Committee

Because both the relief and nonresistant concerns grow out of Christian love, the Berne, Indiana, congregation has found it advisable to combine these two emphases in one committee on Peace and Service. This combined area now includes the disaster work, bringing fresh-air children from Chicago (as they did this summer) and assisting promotion of Voluntary Service and various 1-W and peace concerns. One member of the committee is the Peace and Service representative who receives literature from Newton, Akron, and Washington to keep him informed and able to assist the pastor in peace and Voluntary Service counseling.

Peace and Service Representatives in Congregations

When this present draft law in the U. S. went into effect several years ago many General Conference congregations appointed a Peace and Service representative. This was to be a lay person to assist the pastor in peace counseling and in general to be informed and helpful in the congregation on Voluntary Service as well as peace education.

To date at least seventy-five congregations in the U. S. and Canada have such a lay representative. Although these have generally been men, the second lady to be appointed just recently was Mrs. D. C. Ewert at the First Mennonite Church in Hillsboro.

Congregations who have existing peace committees (active or inactive) are encouraged to designate one of their number for these various mailings of information from the General Conference, MCC, and the National Service Board. Send the name to the Board of Christian Service office in Newton.

Congregations not yet organized with a Peace Committee, or a Peace and Service Committee, should consider appointing a Peace and Service representative. If interested write the Board of Christian Service or your district peace committee members for more information.

Migrant Work in California

Sunday school and church work are recent developments in the MCC sponsored service projects among migrant camps in the Coalinga, California, area. In addition to Voluntary Service workers, who assist in the recreational and welfare projects, Mennonite churches in the Reedley area, as well as other church groups, have been promoting the mission interests in the migrant camps. Through the Board of Christian Service the Women's Missionary Association of the General Conference contributes $60-$120 a month, which is about one-fifth of the total California migrant budget.

Flashes of Thought

Harmony Indeed

Walter Gering

I could hardly believe my ears; was this what I had looked forward to with such anticipation? Could it be that this was music? For weeks I had been looking forward to this occasion. Having been privileged to come to the city for several weeks of study it was but natural that there should be points of interest to be visited. Museums, churches, and other activities were on the list. Not the least of these was the desire to attend one of the summer evening concerts given for the public in the city park. The announcement in the paper had been most encouraging.

But this jumble of discord was surely not music. One by one the musicians had come into the band shell; I can still feel the effect of those moments. The orchestra was composed of accomplished musicians, men who had devoted their lives to the profession of music. For weeks they had labored hard to prepare for these evening concerts. Yet as they took their places upon the stage, picked up their instruments and began to play there was discord. It seemed as though all the sounds of the universe had been let loose in a single moment. It was not music; it was a jumble of notes coming from the strings, the reeds, horns, and drums. The longer it continued the more distracting it became. It was as though every instrument was trying to outdo the other. Was this what I had come to hear with such anticipation?

Then suddenly there strode across the stage from out of the background a solitary man. Pausing at the center of the stage he faced the orchestra; for a moment he lifted his hands—there was a deathly silence. Then with the downstroke of those hands there poured out of that band shell music that thrilled the hearts of those who had come to listen. For over an hour I sat and listened to some of the finest of the world's music.

So it is in life. It seems as though everything is disharmony and discord. There does not seem to be any underlying melody which can be heard throughout the journey; just a confusion of sound. Then the Master appears; at the center with uplifted hands He cries out: "Peace, be still." And there comes a sudden calm; discord becomes heavenly music.

LORD, MAKE THESE DISCORDS
MELODIES OF BEAUTY

That church service is a failure from which people go out thinking about the minister and forgetting about God.

Western District Conferen

MA

Delegates of the Western District Conference met in Beatrice, Nebraska, October 18 to 21 to choose their officers for the coming year and to approve an expanding program of church work. Inspirational programs and periods of Bible study interspersed the business sessions.

The 296 delegates chose Roland Goering, Halstead, Kansas, to be their president for the coming year replacing Arnold Epp, Newton, Kansas; who has been the district's able president for the past three years. Reports given at the session indicated that during the past year the 66 churches of the conference had contributed $32,304.00 for the support of district causes. The total stewardship of the Conference approached $888,000.00 including contributions for all causes; a per capita giving of slightly more than $65.00. With a total membership of 13,637 in its churches in Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Colorado, and Mexico the Western District indicated a net gain of 167 members for 1954.

Other officers elected to serve for the coming year included Harris Waltner, Moundridge, Kansas, as vice-president replacing William Unrau, Deer Creek, Oklahoma. Elected as secretary was Waldo Kaufman, Hydro, Oklahoma, replacing Harold Buller, North Newton, Kansas. Henry Hege, Geary, Oklahoma, was elected to the Program Committee.

At the close of the sessions held in Beatrice's Municipal Auditorium the delegate body adopted a budget of $38,500.00. This budget includes $5,500.00 for the district's youth organization.

Conference Field Worker

Much of the district's work is administered through the office of the conference field worker. Serving in this capacity is W. F. Unruh, who reported that he had given assistance to the Home Mission and Education Committees and young people's organization. He has concentrated in the area of strengthening the leadership of the churches through a number of meetings held in various congregations. One type of meeting which was held in 28 congregations was a panel type program in which conference leaders discussed the trends, attitudes, disciplines, and the great affirmations of the Mennonite Church. Unruh also gave special assistance in co-ordinating the Udall-Blackwell tornado disaster service.

Home Missions

The conference resolved to enlarge the scope of its Home Missions Committee's work by assigning it the task of establishing congregations not only for Mennonites who have migrated to other cities or regions but to establish "new churches in areas which need them."

The Home Missions Committee supports eight churches most of which have membership under 100. The committee has been sponsoring extension work in Wichita in an underprivileged section and also among American Indians there. A survey was made for the committee in Oklahoma City to determine the future of a possible church there. The committee has been contributing $50 a month for the 1-W spiritual ministry at Topeka, Kansas. Re-elected to the Home Missions Committee was Ben Rahn, Inman, Kansas, and elected to a new term was Arnold Epp.

Revolving Fund

Unique among the districts of the General Conference is the Western District's revolving church building fund which has helped a number of congregations in their building programs. Its current fund indicates that it has loaned approximately $24,000.00 to seven churches who are building or have built new structures. The delegates elected to the Board of Trustees which has charge of this fund were Carl Claassen, Beatrice, Nebraska; and re-elected J. A. Heidebrecht, Newton; and Dale Stucky, Wichita.

Charitable Institutions

In addition to hearing reports from its Deaconess Committee and Charity Committee the delegates also heard reports from the three charitable institutions within the district. These include the Bethel Deaconess Hospital and Home for the Aged, Newton; the Bethesda Hospital and Home, Goessel, Kansas; and the Mennonite Deaconess Home and Hospital, Beatrice, Nebraska. These hospitals served over 5,000 patients during 1954. Jacob T. Friesen, Beatrice, was elected to the Deaconess Committee and Curt Boese, Walton, Kansas, was elected to the Charity Committee.

Education Committee

Covering a wide scope of activity the Education Committee reported that it had sponsored a peace retreat during the year and five Vacation Bible School Workshops. It had also sponsored study conferences on two problems: "The Mentally Retarded Child" and "The Christian in Business." Using a similar approach the committee also plans to study special problems facing the farmer, problems of education and philosophy, and Mennonite academies.

Operating under the Education Committee is the Western District Loan Library of which Mrs. P. S. Goertz is the librarian. A total of 2,959 books were loaned to 291 borrowers last year.

Coming within the scope of this committee's work is the Oklahoma Young People's Retreat, the Western District Retreat, Camp Mennoscah, the Young People's Christian Endeavor Fellowship, the Western District Sunday School Convention, the Oklahoma Minister's Convention, the Oklahoma Bible Academy, Berean Bible Academy, and Bethel College.

In reporting for Bethel College, D. C. Wedel suggested that the conference officers arrange for a conference at which the ministers of the Western District Conference and representatives from the college share their insights as to how to secure more candidates for the ministry. Elected to the Education Committee were O'Ray Graber, Buhler, Kansas, and August Schmidt, Canton, Oklahoma. Re-elected was Waldo O. Schmidt, Goessel, Kansas.

The conference nominated Arnold Funk, Hillsboro, and Victor Sawatzky, Pawnee Rock, for the vacancy on the Board of Trustees of Bethel College. One of these will be chosen by the college corporation for this office.

Peace Committee

Reporting on its work in peace education and in the 1-W ministry was the Peace Committee. This committee sent two delegations to Washington to witness for the conference against Universal Military Training. It sponsored a regular program of visitation to men in 1-W service. Because its program of activity has been enlarged the committee suggested that its name be changed to the Peace and Service Committee. Elected to the Peace Committee was William Unrau, Deer Creek, Oklahoma. Re-elected were Albert Gaeddert, Inman, Kansas, and Elbert Koontz, Hillsboro, Kansas.

Other Committees; Auxiliaries

Among the conference's newer committees are the Historical Committee and Ordination Credentials Committee. The Historical Committee has assembled church bulletins and materials from the various congregations. It proposes to establish markers at the sites of the Mennonite Seminary, Halstead; and the Immigrant Houses at Alexanderwohl. Re-elected to the Historical Committee was Anton Richert, Wichita, Kansas. The Ordination Credentials Committee was appointed last February and was voted to continue its service for another year. The purpose of the committee is to provide counsel in the processing and evaluation of ordination credentials.

The four auxiliaries of the Western District Conference met during the week. Meeting on Tuesday was the Western District Minister's Conference which held a discussion on the subject of evangelism with Andrew R. Shelly, Chicago, Illinois, as guest speaker. The Mennonite Men met on the same day with Russell L. Mast who spoke on "Every Layman in the Ministry" and "Keeping Sane in a Mad World." Mrs. Andrew R. Shelly, Mrs. Walter H. Dyck, and Willard

Props for School Problems

Here you are in school. What will you make out of it?

You are not free from temptations. At no age is anyone free from temptation; but perhaps the ratio of temptation is more out of proportion at the high school age level than at any other age.

How does one follow Christ in school? Does it mean that one gives up some things? Does it mean one cannot take part in some activities? Does it mean one needs to stand alone or even stick out as a sore thumb?

Is there guidance we can get from the Bible that would help us in these questions? I believe there is. There are certainly some helpful guides in the Bible, which we can use as props to hold us up in the face of the problems that we meet. They can give us strength to stand for the things we know are right.

May I direct you to the Apostle Paul. He writes two letters to Timothy, who apparently was quite young. His chronological age we are not told, but we know from the way Paul writes that Timothy lacked experience and did not have full maturity. Let me suggest a few pointers.

Someone Remembers

In the first place Paul says, "I remember you in my prayers." Here is an older person much interested in the younger; so much interested in him that he prayed for him. Doesn't that tell a lot? It helped Timothy to know that a man like Paul was remembering him in his prayers. Don't you suppose that even helped to guide Timothy?

ALBERT M. GAEDDERT

Pastor, Hoffnungsau Mennonite Church, Inman, Kansas

Somebody is also remembering you in prayer. I am confident your parents are remembering you in their prayers. Among their prayers for you will likely be a prayer that God may keep you. They pray that when you are tempted that you will not yield to temptation, but that you will have the courage to stand up for your convictions and say "no" when "no" needs to be said.

They also ask God that He would lead you through the days of your school experience so that you will find your rightful place in life's work. They want you to be among those who decide to make something out of themselves. They won't prescribe to God what you shall be. Whether you will be a lawyer, a doctor, a minister, a nurse, a farmer, or a housewife, their prayer will be that whatever you choose you may do that work faithfully and well, and as unto God.

Besides your parents others are praying for you. I know your Sunday school teachers are. They know you well and they are extremely interested in having you become a person who will say with Joshua, "Choose you this day whom you will serve . . . but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

Did you ever suspect that your girl friend (or boy friend) may also be praying for you? For someday she is interested in having a mate whose life will count for the church and for the Christian cause in God's kingdom.

We can't mention all who may be praying for you but don't think that your minister isn't. He has a real joy in watching his young people not only make their decisions for Christ but make a real contribution to some community by putting their talents to work in real discipleship fashion.

You Have It in You

Paul says another thing to Timothy, "I often think of that genuine faith of yours—a faith that first appeared in your grandmother Lois, then in Eunice, your mother; and is now, I am convinced, in you as well." (Phillips)

You also have had a mother and grandmothers, or parents and grandparents who had faith in Christ; and that is good. Let us never minimize the importance of our Christian heritage. But Paul brings out the fact here that this must become our own personal faith; the result of our own personal decision and commitment. Your parents can't give you that. They can't even will it to you in their last will and testament.

No, that is something that you must decide. Whether He will become your Redeemer and your Lord to whom you commit your soul, mind, strength, and all is up to you.

That's your decision; but let me warn you that it is a matter not only of this life, and what you do with it, but a matter of all eternity. Do not ever take this decision lightly, nor feel you can let it ride.

Paul was confident that Timothy had made this faith his very own. You ought also to make your parents, your minister, your Sunday school teacher, and your schoolteacher confident that this faith is yours.

The Inner Fire

Then Paul says a third thing. "Stir up that inner fire which God gave you at your ordination." (Phillips) Paul knew Timothy had it, but apparently Timothy let it fall asleep. Sometimes he just didn't do much with all the gifts he had.

Well, you too have that inner life. Another translation calls it the gift of God within you. Now Paul had already ordained Timothy. While no one probably has ordained you, yet God may be laying hands on you during this very time of your life when you are in school, and saying to you:

"Rekindle that gift within you! I want to use you! You have a gift and you have talent. What will you do with them?"

Here you are in school. What will you make out of it?

MORE OIL, PLEASE

Railroad men tell about the track superintendent in Philadelphia[1] who hired a new worker one day and gave him an oil can with the instructions, "Go down the tracks and oil the switches on the way."

When the hand failed to return at the end of the day, the superintendent concluded that his employee had walked off the job. Several days later the telephone rang, and the voice at the other end said, "What do I do now? I'm out here in Pittsburgh[2] and my oil can's empty."

(If subjected to textual criticism it may be found that the original story had the man calling from Paoli,[3] which may prove that though a little oil may go a long way, the human mind can be stretched even further.)

The predicament of the oiler is identical to the situation in which our missionaries, relief workers, writers, and other church workers find themselves at this time. In this case our conference of churches has sent them up the long track with a little bit of oil to do a big job. And it has been a job thoroughly done.

When I see the work that has been done, I have no difficulty believing the miracle of the loaves and the fishes. The same Lord performs in our day the miracle of the dimes and five-dollar bills feeding the hungry stomachs and souls all around the world. Note that Christ used something instead of nothing to feed the hungry. Granted that He could have banqueted the five thousand without the use of human resources, yet He saw fit to use the loaves and fishes, small and insignificant though they were.

But when you're up the track with all the loaves and fishes, and almost all the fragments used up, or in this situation, with your oil can empty, what then? That's what it means when the Conference budget is unmet.

Instead of suggesting that less work be done, people make proposals that more should be done. At least that is the implication when words like these are heard, "Of course, we take offerings for the Mission to Mars, because the Mennonite church has no missionaries up there." Or, "We use the Monday school monthlies from Miami because our Con-

JANZEN SCHOOL FULL*

Many young people who have left Janzen Memorial School are doing good service for the Lord. While they were with us they buckled down to the discipline of study, fellowship, worship, and play. This was the Lord's will for them.

Enrollment at Janzen School, Jagdeeshpur, India, has gone past the 280 mark. Thus it is thirty more than last year, and fifty more than two years ago. This means that our resources are taxed that much more. To provide shop work for fifty more, to provide room space for fifty more, fifty more desks and seats, and to have a watchful eye over that many more is our extra challenge. The hostels never have had so many in them. The upsurge amongst Christians is greater than among non-Christians.

I personally cannot rest if the school is giving only mental, physical, and social nurture. The matter of confronting every boy and girl with the high calling of God through Christ Jesus is our constant concern. This is done in a number of ways, conditioned by many factors. The series of meetings conducted by Brother Hess from August 28 to September 4 was one of the ways used to help in these matters. Boys who feel specially called to the work of Christian pastor or evangelist are given every encouragement.

There is a silent and very potent influence going out from the school and its total program in many avenues of life; in the economic, in the moral, and religious, in the whole concept of life as service. We are deeply grateful to the Board of Missions, to the Government of India, to the parents, for their continued support. "For God and country" is our ever reiterated slogan.

Some English author has likened youth to a frisky colt in pasture. It runs hither and yon, at times dashes against the wall at the far side of the pasture, perchance stubs its nose. It tends to go out of bounds instead of staying by its main task of taking in pasture. There come times in the work of an institution with young people where here and there a few tend to run out of bounds, stub the moral conscience as well as their own. That is work with youth, whether in school, or camp, or home. Blessed is the youth who learns to bear this yoke during his formative years.

*Here are excerpts from a report from S. T. Moyer, principal of our Mission High School in Jagdeeshpur, India. The students he speaks of are almost all Christians. Kindly note also that the school tries to meet the WHOLE of the life of the students; intellectual, physical, and spiritual. The Moyers will come home on furlough in 1956, and it is hoped that the Lubin Jantzens will get back to India for school work.

THE BREAKING HAMMER

Would Jeremiah have lived in the twentieth century he perhaps would say: "The Word of God is dynamite or atomic power."

Of this undiminished, overwhelming power of God's Word I have been convinced anew. This Word even today breaks up rocks. Seeing in Bible school the clear results of the influence of God's Word I think of the many hard problems our churches are facing.

I shall mention only one problem: the biblical concept of the church. At times when I hear brethren speak of church problems I feel like whispering into their ears: "If only you knew your Bible better, you could not speak this way."

Many of our resolutions at conferences would have been different had our members received thorough and biblical spiritual instruction. But this cannot be accomplished in a few hours. Either we make available to our members a thorough schooling in Bible or we shall increasingly deviate from biblical lines.

The darkness and confusion of our time are growing more and more depressing. Will our churches withstand the storm? Only if they stick to the Word of God unwaveringly. But for this they will have to work intensively and soberly in order to learn to know this hammer that breaketh up the rock and to yield to its influence.

ference hasn't gotten around to producing that kind of material yet."

But it is a little difficult to see how the work can be enlarged when after looking at the conference stewardship chart we find, "No oil."

The instructions of our conference churches to their workers to win more souls, train more leaders, save more lives, and produce more materials are worthy ones. And the Conference has given of its resources but the supply of resources has not measured up to the vision. To curtail resources now is to treat our workers as the Egyptians treated the Israelite brickmakers when they held back on the straw supply.

The point of this is that we need a little bit more oil (straw, loaves, or fishes) for the General Conference; to be specific about $336,445.00 before December 31. And if you would like to catch the branch lines and sidings along the way, a little extra will help.

BETHEL COLLEGE

A personally conducted tour of Brazil via an all-color motion picture and the fascinating word description by Karl Robinson is in store for those attending the first of the current Bethel College Memorial Hall Series on November 18. This true-to-life story of our largest southern neighbor will bring you to Sao Paulo, modern Brazil's North American counterpart; Rio de Janeiro, the Federal Capitol; Ouro Preto, the old colonial Brazil; Manaus, Amazon jungle city; Bahia, where African influence is expressed in costumes and dances.

The varied culture, industry and people of this great land are included in Robinson's presentation. The romance of coffee, rubber, Brazil nuts and the vast cattle industry are all vividly brought to life.

Karl Robinson with his all-color motion picture of Brazil is the first of a series of five programs scheduled for this season in Bethel's Memorial Hall. All programs begin promptly at 8 p.m.

A twelve by sixteen foot movie projection screen has been purchased for the stage of the O. Jolliffe Auditorium in Memorial Hall. It will be installed in time for the first Memorial Hall Series presentation. Karl Robinson's all-color motion picture and lecture on Brazil. The screen, made possible by friends of the college, will also be used for college and community film nights.

Word has come from Wells College, Aurora, N. Y., that Dr. Robert L. Gering, formerly chairman of the natural science division and associate professor of biological sciences at Bethel, has written a non-technical book entitled, "Pet Genetics."

A 32-page booklet by Dr. Gering, titled "Introduction to Pet Genetics," has already been published by All-Pet Books, Inc., of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, which will also publish his more comprehensive book on "Pet Genetics," early in 1956.

The date book of Pres. D. C. Wedel indicates a busy month. On Oct. 17-18 he attended the inauguration of David A. Zook as president of Kansas Wesleyan University, representing the Kansas Council of Church-Related Colleges. On Oct. 20-21, he attended the Western District Conference at Beatrice, Nebraska. On Sunday, Oct. 23, he spoke at Prairie View Hospital and from Oct. 24 to 27 he participated in solicitation efforts of the Kansas Foundation of Private Colleges. The week of Oct. 30 to Nov. 4 he presented a series of sermons on "Jesus' Teaching on Forgiveness" at the Hanston Mennonite Church, Hanston, Kansas.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

In addition to the annual Bible Lectures to be held November 13 to 18 with Dr. George M. Gibson, Professor of Preaching, McCormick Theological Seminary, as speaker, the campus will be the scene of the annual Ministers' Conference and Women's Conference of the Middle, Central, and Eastern districts on November 16 and 17. Featured speakers at the Ministers' Conference will be Paul Erb, editor of the Gospel Herald, Dr. Gibson, and Rev. Ward Shelly, pastor of the Bethel Mennonite Church, Lancaster, Pa.

The semiannual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Bluffton will take place on campus, November 15.

A new book by Dr. J. S. Schultz, professor of teacher education, was recently published by the MCC headquarters at Akron, Pa. "Evaluation of the 1-W Program" is the title of this 71 page book which summarizes research which Dr. Schultz conducted at the MCC headquarters last year.

Seven senior students were recently selected to be represented in the book "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges" for 1955-56. Selection for this honor is made through nominations by the student council and election of the faculty. The students selected are: James Bishop from Souderton, Pa.; John Basinger, Mountain Lake, Minn.; Helen Neufeld, Chicago, Ill.; Diane Lora, Lima, Ohio; Reldon Schirch, Chenoa, Ill.; Joseph Smucker, Goshen, Ind.; and William Simmons, Dayton, Ohio.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Our "Christian Life Week" was one of special significance for the C. M. B. C. students, Dr. J. J. Thiessen was the guest speaker. Besides conducting the morning chapel services, he had personal consultations with many of the students. In a series of three chapel messages Rev. Thiessen exhorted the students with James 1:5-8 to seek wisdom from God who gives liberally to all who ask—wisdom to correctly evaluate life, to choose one's calling and to make all decisions as God wills. He also emphasized Paul's exhortation in Phil. 1:27-29 to walk worthy of the gospel of Jesus Christ, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel.

Peter Klassen in the student chapel service October 20, brought a very fitting message entitled: "Drawing Closer to God through Personal Devotions."

Recently we were favored with a visit from a member of the Dutch Mennonite Peace Group, Mr. Van Gilse of Heerewegen, Holland. He briefly outlined the history of those members of our faith who have through the centuries remained in Holland. He also informed us about the formation and work of the group which has been recently organized within their conference, the "Peace Group."

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The Men's Chorus from the South Church presented a concert of sacred music in Chapel, Oct. 25. The group is directed by Richard H. Graber. Both the director and all of the members of the chorus are either former or present students of Freeman College.

President Ronald von Riesen attended the meeting of the Mennonite Seminary Board held in Chicago, October 25 and 26.

Professor Orlando Goering and the college Sociology class took a field trip to Sioux City, Oct. 21,

RELIEF IN BERLIN

Menno-Hiem, the Mennonite Central Committee center in Berlin which ministers particularly to East Zone Mennonites, reports giving food or clothing or both to 64 people during September.

The Berlin Mennonite Church invites Mennonites living in the East Zone to come to Menno-Heim for a week end of Christian fellowship. Then MCC and the Berlin Mennonite Church share food, clothing, rest, and worship with these people.

J. K. Klassen of Menno-Heim writes: "They enjoy the meals, especially the butter, cheese, and white bread. In the East Zone they must queue for hours to get vegetables, groceries—any kind of food.

"Many of these people are too shy to tell us what they need in clothing. When I asked a small old man what he needed, he answered, 'But I don't have money to pay for it.'

'I have nothing for sale,' I answered, 'only to give you.'

"Then he rose from his chair, stroked both my cheeks and said, 'Oh, my dear man!' We have many experiences like that on such week ends."

GOOD NEIGHBORS IN JAPAN

Every Friday afternoon a group of Japanese women meet at the MCC headquarters in Tokyo for Bible study, prayer, and fellowship. This "Good Neighbors Club" under the leadership of Mrs. Norman Wingert started in September a year ago.

Besides their period of Christian fellowship, many of the members take home yardage material that the MCC furnishes. Then they cut and sew it into finished garments for relief.

To celebrate their first year together, the Good Neighbors made up 75 bundles of clothing to give to some of the poor "rag-pickers" at the Ueno Station in Tokyo. MCC has been serving milk to these rag-pickers every evening, and sometimes they also have singing and Scripture reading.

On this special evening the group first sang "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," in Japanese. Then one of the Japanese ladies read Luke 10:25-28 and lead in prayer. After explaining the Good Neighbors Club, the milk, cookies, and packages of clothing were distributed.

Both the Good Neighbors Club and the regular ministry among the rag-pickers illustrate the close relationship of the material aid program to the Christian witness among the Japanese.

BAIE VERTE, NEWFOUNDLAND

Elaine Brubacher, R.N., Kitchener, Ont., is transferring from the Ailsa Craig Boys' Farm in Ontario to Baie Verte, Newfoundland. In Baie Verte she will assist a United Missionary Church doctor in the medical program for this small village of fishers and lumbermen.

Elaine brings the total number of MCC Voluntary Service workers in Newfoundland to seven. Alison Deckert and Helen Loewen teach school at Wild Cove; William Regehr teaches school at Twillingate and his wife Maurine is a nurse in the hospital there; Bill and Phyllis Miller teach school and Vernon and Ferne Glick serve as pastor and wife for the United Church at Baie Verte.

Since the towns in northern Newfoundland are so small and so isolated, it is very difficult to obtain ministers for the churches and teachers for the schools. Previously one of the laymen read a prepared sermon sent from the head of the church in the capital, St. Johns, for this United Church. And the people slowly lost interest in the church until as Bill Miller writes: "Paying pew rent is often the extent of Christianity.

"The schools are often closed for lack of teachers, or in session but taught by teachers who haven't passed all the grades themselves."

A second problem at Baie Verte is that everyone is strongly denominational, and the churches refuse to work together. The school system is even entirely church (or denominationally) operated. This means that little towns of a couple hundred people have a Roman Catholic church and school plus two or three Protestant churches and schools.

The Mennonite Central Committee Voluntary Service unit is trying to improve the church life by bringing pastoral guidance to people who had been without a minister for years. They are trying to build a stronger Christian community by teaching in the inadequately staffed schools, bringing medical care to the sick and beginning Christian youth activities for all the young people of the town.

PEACE REPRESENTATIVE FROM JAPAN

Paul Sekiya, secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation in Japan, visited the Akron MCC office on Friday, Nov. 4. He spoke in the morning chapel; in the evening he showed slides on the effects of the atomic and hydrogen bombs and lead a discussion period.

Brother Sekiya is a second generation Christian. Formerly he was a clergyman in the Episcopal Church. Following World War II Brother Sekiya became a pacifist and joined the Quaker fellowship in Japan. He is now giving full time to present the Christian basis for pacifism.

Under the auspices of the American Friends World Committee, Brother Sekiya is visiting the United States for about ten months. Here he shows pictures of the devastation wrought by the Hiroshima bombings. Brother Sekiya is concerned for the militarism which seems to be gaining strength in Japan again. He feels that the impetus for this comes from both the conservative element which sees military power as the protection for sovereignty and the U. S. insistence on rearmament. If Japan is to remain pacifist, a Christian basis must be substituted for the sentimental.

Melvin Gingerich, who went to Japan this fall to represent the MCC peace interest there, will probably work with Brother Sekiya as he investigates the possibilities for peace literature and witness in Japan.

where they visited several industrial plants, a settlement house, and numerous philanthropic institutions.

Rev. Ed Duerksen of Butterfield, Minnesota, and Missionary Harry Graber from the Congo Inland Mission had charge of chapel services, Oct. 24. Rev. Duerksen led the devotions and Rev. Graber told of the open door for mission work in the Congo. He urged students to consider the missionary calling.

She is well known in General Conference circles for her work in Voluntary Service and young people's activities. Mr. Graber is the manager of the College Farm where they will make their home.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

For sometime it has been felt that the students did not get enough opportunities to preach during their three years of study at the Seminary. There are more opportunities this year in that two of the students have student pastorates and two churches depend on the Seminary for their preaching services. Daniel Graber serves the Silver Street Church at Goshen, Ind., and Roy Henry serves the Pekin Church, Pekin, Ill. The Summerfield, Ill., and Carlock, Ill., churches are served on Sundays by students from the Seminary.

Daniel J. Graber, a senior at the Seminary, was ordained to the gospel ministry, Oct. 23, in a service of ordination which took place at the Silver Street Mennonite Church, Goshen, Ind. Rev. Marvin Dirks led in a service of song and praise and the Seminary Quartet rendered special music. The message of the service was given by Rev. Robert Hartzler and Rev. A. E. Kreider officiated at the ordination. Rev. Harry Yoder gave the charge to the minister's wife and the congregation.

The students gathered at the Main House on Sunday evening, Oct. 23, in an informal meeting at which time Willard Claassen and Dr. Pannabecker shared with the students some of the proceedings of the Western District Conference and the items that would come up at the Seminary Board's semiannual meeting on Oct. 25-26. On Wednesday, Oct. 26, Dr. Pannabecker took time after the evening prayer meeting to share with the students the decisions and discussion of the Seminary Board in its task to plan for the future.

careful consideration my husband telephoned the woman he had just enlisted a short while before to teach the beginner's class. He felt she was the only one capable of taking over the junior department on such short notice. She agreed. A call to the assistant in the beginner's class persuaded her that she was capable of handling that active group of four and five year olds by herself for one Sunday. This concluded a "Sunday school superintendent's Saturday nightmare."

I admit this Staurday night was worse than usual. I admit that there are last minute emergencies that cannot be foreseen. I admit that this is the task of a Sunday school superintendent — to co-ordinate the school and see that everything is in order. However, your superintendent is human. He is usually a family man who must work for a living. He uses his leisure time to plan his Sunday school program and make necessary calls. Many of his evenings are spent in committee meetings. And he does it joyfully 'as unto the Lord.' He dreams that these efforts will bring forth fruit as Christians grow in grace and others are brought to a saving knowledge of Jesus. Officers who do a conscientious job fulfilling their duties and teachers who attend regularly with well-prepared lessons can turn a 'Sunday school superintendent's nightmare' into a 'dream come true.'

there is peace, joy, purpose, and a feeling of security; for the others there is a mounting sense of futility, lack of genuine happiness, purpose and security.

Council of Boards

A mass meeting in Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, on Sunday, December 4, at 7:30 p.m., will climax the five-day session of the Council of Boards of the General Conference Mennonite Church.

Peter J. Dyck, pastor of the Eden Mennonite Church, Moundridge, Kansas, will speak at this closing session on "Our Total Conference Program at Home and Abroad." A brief preview of the 1957 Mennonite World Conference at Karlsruhe, Germany, will be given by Olin A. Krehbiel, Berne, Indiana; president of the General Conference.

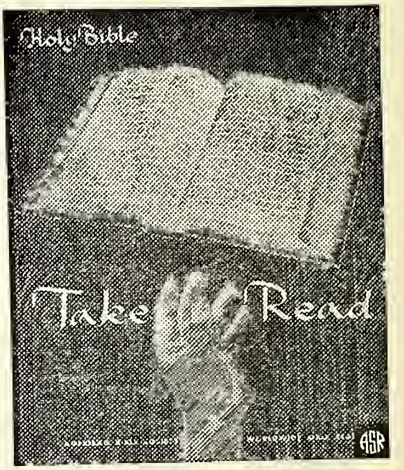
The Council of Boards sessions will be held in the Bethel College Mennonite Church at North Newton and begin on Wednesday morning, November 30. Participating in these sessions will be the Board of Missions, the Board of Christian Service, the Board of Education and Publication, and the Board of Trustees and Finance. Board meetings will be held during the morning and afternoon with inter-board meetings in the evening.

On Wednesday evening the four boards will give a preview of their special concerns that they will attempt to resolve during this council. Thursday evening will feature a discussion of conference budget promotion and a report on a proposed conference finance corporation.

The counsel of the combined boards will be sought by each individual board on special questions on Friday evening following which the concerns of Mennonite Biblical Seminary will be heard. The Conference budget for 1956 will be adopted at the Saturday session after which Andrew R. Shelly, Chicago, Illinois, will discuss the goals and issues of the 1956 session of General Conference which will be held at Winnipeg, Manitoba.

All weekday evening sessions begin at 7:15 and are open to the public.

Bible Readings



This year millions of Americans of all faiths will join in daily Bible reading from Thanksgiving to Christmas in the twelfth annual observance of Worldwide Bible Reading, sponsored by the American Bible Society.

The program, which began when a U. S. marine on Guadalcanal wrote his mother asking that the family join him in reading the same passages of Scripture each day, has spread in scope to the peoples of more than forty nations.

The readings are without note or comment, and one may use whatever version of the Bible he prefers.

Below are the readings for each day, in the theme of personal faith as selected by numerous people from many denominations.

A BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

In Malachi 3:16 we read of a book of remembrance in which are recorded the deeds of God's children. It was also the custom of the Eastern monarchs to keep such a book into which were written deeds done by their subjects. Thus, unknowingly, they were writing their own book of remembrance.

We, too, are writing such a book day by day and year by year. Thanksgiving Day is a good time to take a careful look at this book to see what we have been recording. Are we of critical and complaining mood? Then we have been recording one set of thoughts. But if we are of grateful and appreciative heart we have a different type of record.

There are many things that should be omitted from our Book of Remembrance. It would be good to omit all fault-finding, complaining, and unkind criticisms. What a doleful set of records we find as we open our book if we have filled it with the slights, criticisms, and ill-will of others. This would spoil our book as well as our soul. We all have our faults, and if others point them out to us, even though unkindly, let us profit by such criticisms. For a critic may become the "unpaid watchman of our soul."

We do well to omit complaints against adverse circumstances. To be sure we find all sorts of unideal situations about us. But what goes on outside a man is not nearly as important as what goes on inside him. To record and blame unfortunate circumstances is to be crushed by them. But to overcome them and make them contribute to our spiritual growth will give us something far better to record.

There may also have been personal failures, lost possessions, and lost opportunities which we had better not record. God is merciful and can forgive us where we have failed if we truly repent and resolve to do better. Filling our book with a list of failures will make dreary reading.

It is also well to omit our successes from the record. Some people do a fine deed and spend the rest of their days talking about it. To emphasize our little successes makes us too self-satisfied and complacent. We should not ruin a promising autobiography by a pompious auto-braggery. What little good we have done might best be forgotten as we strive to do yet better.

Having considered some things to omit, what then should we record in this book of remembrance? There is so much of beauty all about us that we certainly should make note of that; beauty of our Father's world, the seasons, all nature. There is also the beauty of good reading, great pictures, and fine music. There is beauty all around if we have eyes to see it.

But in particular we should record the kindness of people. Those that have gone before and left such a high heritage of moral worth and true religion. Those still present with us who are having a good influence upon us; members of our own families, our friends and neighbors, the people of our church. What understanding hearts have strengthened us. What encouraging words have urged us on. The fellowship of kindred hearts and minds, and the goodness of our friends should be gratefully recorded in our record.

But in even larger letters we should record the goodness of God. His material blessings so rich and abundant and unceasing; the blessings of mind, body, and work; the goodness of His forgiveness of our sins; the beauty of His love shed abroad in our hearts. His presence in every need, His help in every crisis, His strength for our weakness, His deep interest and concern in each of us—all this and much more should be recorded. To record such blessings would soon fill our book and there would be no room for the unpleasant things. Write on such great themes and the petty complaints seem small and selfish.

We are our own Books of Remembrance. We open ourselves to God this Thanksgiving season. What does He find written therein?

THREE IMPRESSIONS

It is interesting to note the three things that especially impressed our Conference president in his recent trip to Europe: the need of promoting greater co-operation among Mennonite groups; the spiritual significance of the work of the Mennonite Central Committee; and the opportunity for mission endeavor in Europe.

The matter of closer co-operation among Mennonites is right in our thinking at the present time, especially in the matter of seminary co-operation. It is also gratifying to note the spiritual significance of the work of MCC. The opportunity for mission work in Europe has been given less consideration. No doubt the Board of Missions will want to give this matter prayerful attention.

READ THE BEST

There is so much reading material all about us that the matter of choosing which shall have our time and attention is very important. To have plenty of good wholesome reading matter on hand for the long winter evenings is a splendid means of deepening our spiritual life.

There are so many good devotional booklets now on the market that there is little excuse in not having some on hand. Reading again and again the Gospel of Luke during these months when we study this portion in our Sunday school will be richly rewarding. To also follow the readings as planned by the American Bible Society, as found elsewhere in this issue, will join us with a great host around the world reading the same passages and thinking in part the same thoughts.

Let's read the best. Our souls are dyed the color of our reading matter.

How Will We Give Thanks?

There are three attitudes mentioned in the New Testament which sum up in a general way the manner in which the American people give thanks to God. The first attitude is found in the story of the cleansing of the ten lepers (Luke 17:11-20). By miraculous power, ten lepers were made whole and clean of their disease. Nine rushed away to exhibit themselves to the priests, that they might be declared whole and clean officially. Thereafter, they hastened home to rejoin their families, without offering a word of thanks or appreciation to their Benefactor. The tenth, after he had been pronounced whole and clean (one whom Jesus calls a stranger) returned to thank him.

The second attitude is found in the story of the Pharisee and the publican as recorded in Luke 18: 9-14. The Pharisee prayed after this manner: "Father, I thank thee that I am not as other men are—extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice a week, and I give the tithe of all that I possess." One might almost say that he prayed to himself, for he exalted his own ego in his prayer. The publican's prayer was not one of thanksgiving: it was an appeal for mercy—"Be merciful to me, a sinner, oh God."

The third attitude of thanksgiving is summed up for us in the story of the feeding of the five thousand (John 6:1-13). The crowd was hungry, and the only food available was that which the lad possessed —five loaves about the size of a hamburger roll, and two small fishes. These were given to Jesus, who in turn gave God thanks for them and then gave command that they be distributed to the crowds. These three incidents from the Scripture have their modern parallels.

No Thanks at All

Go back with me to that story of the ten lepers, and to the nine who did not return to give thanks at all. Are they not typical of the great majority of American people? Maybe the number of those who will give thanks to God at all will not reach nine tenths of our people, but it will be large indeed.

As far as many people are concerned, we might just as well change the name of this day to "Feast Day," or "Turkey Day," or "Sports Day." When we change the custom and the purpose of the day, we should be consistent and change the name to be in keeping with the custom. It is most misleading to call this day "Thanksgiving Day" and then to observe it by doing everything but giving thanks. To retain the name and not the purpose of the day is brazen hypocrisy.

I venture to say, too, that there will be comparatively few homes in America where even a moment will be spent in giving thanks to God for the meal that they shall eat. I am not concerned about a mere formal word of "blessing" said just before we begin to eat. Oftentimes, it is merely a perfunctory custom which we would not feel quite right in not observing. To ease our conscience, we teach our children little verses like

"God is great, God is good,
And we thank Him for this food."

and let the grace go at that. Do not misunderstand me. I am all for children being taught to say grace before meals, but I am also in favor of the parents doing some of the thanking themselves.

I wonder sometimes if the saying of grace on the part of some is not a downright insult to God. If we were to thank someone who had given us something very necessary, and valuable, and precious the way we oftentimes thank God for the food He provides for us, by the hasty mumbling of a conventional and almost grudging thanks, I am sure that one would say: "If that is your thanks, do not bother to express it at all."

People will spend this day—Thanksgiving Day— doing almost everything under the sun but thanking God, and by going almost everywhere but to church, and by thinking of almost everyone but God. The most forgotten person on Thanksgiving Day (and on almost every other day, too, in many circles) is God. More people will be at the ball games and at the theaters than in our church services that day. I am not decrying the ball games or sports on this day. History reveals that our Pilgrim fathers spent Thanksgiving afternoon playing ball and enjoying games of various sorts. But I remind you that thanking God was the paramount note struck on this day by our forefathers, and so it must be with us.

Shall We Thank God Like the Pharisee?

"I thank thee, Lord, that I am not as other men are—unjust, extortioners, adulterers, or even as this publican." What was the essence of his prayer? Was it not the glorification of himself, his class, his group, his inner circle of "good" people? There were prayers of thanks of that kind offered in Jesus' day. Those who prayed then thanked God that they were not women, or Gentiles, or like other people.

There is a sense, however, in which every grateful heart should use the words—but not the attitude or the sentiments of the Pharisee: "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are." When we look around us and see some of the bodily wrecks occasioned by crippling diseases, we are constrained to cry out in deepest gratitude to God and with the utmost humility, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are." When we see such stark tragedy being visited upon so many around the world today, and when we compare our own good fortune with their bitter fare, we are compelled to cry to God with tears in our eyes and in our souls, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men." And when we think of the many who this Thanksgiving will not have so much as a bone to gnaw on while we are enjoying a feast, we must cry out, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are."

There will be many this year who will cry out to God with grateful hearts and will thank Him for

His blessings. There will also be many who, in their hearts, will thank God that they have enough food, and the money to buy plenty more, while at the same time they look with scorn and contempt upon those who do not have enough to eat and no money to buy, and whom they persistently refuse to help. Such people are just as bad as the hypocritical Pharisee who cried, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are."

Some Will Thank God As They Should

That story of the feeding of the five thousand presents such a wholesome scene. When Jesus gave thanks to God for the loaves and the fishes, He was doing something that He was very much accustomed to do. Before He fed the four thousand, He thanked God for the seven loaves and the few small fishes. When He instituted the Lord's Supper, He gave thanks for the elements. Before He called Lazarus from the grave, He paused to thank God for hearing Him. On this Thanksgiving Day, and on every other day, we would do well to learn some lessons in thankfulness to God from the life of Jesus.

From this incident in Christ's life, we may learn to give thanks to God by prayer for what we have. Jesus took what He had and looked up to heaven and thanked God for it. If He felt the need so to do, should we feel the need any less? Thank Him with all your heart for the food that is set before you, but let the border of your thanks extend much farther than that. Spend much time in prayer thanking Him for all His many blessings upon you.

From this incident of the feeding of the five thousand, we may learn to be thankful to God by offering to Jesus all that we have. I like this nameless boy who offered all that he had to the Master. He had tremendous faith and a wonderfully warm heart. He did not cut off the tail of one of the fishes and break one of the loaves in half and offer these scraps to Jesus, as so many of us do. He gave everything he had. In that he resembles the widow who cast her two mites into the treasury. Would we be thankful today? Then, let us convince God that we are by rededicating our lives and souls to Him.

From this incident, too, we may learn to be thankful by sharing what we have with others who do not have. This little lad could have denied possession of any food at all. But he gave what he had to Jesus so He in turn could give it to the people. This seems to me to be a real expression of true thankfulness.

"Not what we give, but what we share.
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with alms feeds three;
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

Back in 1947, when Robert Bradford, a descendant of the Pilgrim's Governor Bradford, was governor of Massachusetts, he proposed what he called the "silent guest" program for Thanksgiving Day that year. He asked each family to contribute in money the cost of inviting one guest to Thanksgiving dinner. The money was to be sent to buy food for the hungry in Europe. Let us give thanks this year by sharing what we have with others.

What Did We See?

Olin H. Krehbiel

Before our trip to Europe we were talking to Brother Orie Miller, Mennonite Central Committee executive secretary, and he made this remark: "A thousand speak where one thinks; a thousand think where one sees. My wish for you as you go to Europe is that you may be one that sees."

What did we see? First, we saw Mennonites working together. Mennonite representatives from various countries, which had been at war with each other, sat around a table at Thomashof and planned the program for the Sixth Mennonite World Conference to be held at Karlsruhe, Germany, in 1957. Mennonites from Switzerland, Germany, France, and a few from America gathered together at Basel to talk about their beliefs in three languages. We saw PAX boys from the different Mennonite constituent bodies in America working together to build homes for refugees, and in doing so learning to understand each other.

Second, we saw the spiritual importance of the MCC ministry. We came in contact with students from the European Mennonite Bible School at Basel. We saw how they were conducting summer Bible schools, also how the MCC is producing material for these in German and French. We saw how the MCC is reaching across denominational barriers and helping to reconstruct an evangelical school in Vienna which had been damaged by the war. We saw how the MCC has stimulated youth camps. We had the privilege of seeing how the people from the East Zone received physical and spiritual help at the Berlin Menno-Heim.

Third, we saw the opportunity for Mennonite missions in Europe as we visited the mission centers in London, Brussels, and Paris, and as we saw the desire of the people in the neighborhood in Berlin to gather together for Bible study. Our relief program which was done "In the Name of Christ" has opened to us a door for further spiritual ministry. We must not fail in this challenge. Pray that our eyes may be opened to the great challenge before us.

To make the most of these opporunities we need personnel, and here is where youth plays an important part. What an opportunity to serve in Christ's army rather than in the armies of destruction. We also need finances, and here is where those who can't go, can help. We in this land have been specially favored of God with material means, but with this blessing also comes a responsibility that it be used to the glory of God. Jesus pointed out the opportunities of His day to His disciples. Are our eyes focused on the open doors that God has placed before the Mennonite church? Do we see what Christ wants us to see?

In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you. 1 Thess. 5:18.

Boys Orphanage in Japan

Jordan is still one of the great sore spots of the world. Thank God that through the flexible vehicle of MCC we as General Conference churches can also represent our Lord there. Right now our relief effort needs cash more than any other aid to continue work such as the following. EME

The second class of fourteen orphan boys was admitted to the Hebron Orphanage at the beginning of the new school term. This brings the orphanage enrollment to 28.

In Jordan it is customary that a second husband will not assume responsibility for children from the first marriage. Since divorce is quite common, this leaves many children "unwanted." To provide a home for these virtual orphans where they would have proper food and care and schooling, the Mennonite Central Committee began an orphanage at Hebron.

Last February fourteen first grade boys were admitted to the new Mennonite orphanage. As the boys move into second grade, a new class of first graders is admitted. As time goes on the school grows as the older ones step up and beginners are admitted each year.

Ada and Ida Stoltzfus, Morgantown, Pa., write: "A story could be written about each child. . . . One boy's mother left her husband because he drinks, and married another man. Two are orphans because their fathers were killed by the Jews. Another's father is hopelessly paralyzed. Little Rakhie came to us from the narrow dark alleys of the old part of Hebron city. He spent his days, and some nights as well, in the streets round about the mosque that is built over the tomb of Abraham. His father is no longer living; his mother married again, but the little fellow was not wanted. When the question of what to do with Rakhie arose, someone said, 'Send him to the Mennonites. They have started a school and maybe they will take care of him.'

"We would like to see this orphanage become an industrial school where boys will be taught trades—and be taught them well. In addition to the book knowledge and Christian training, we want them to be equipped with a skill as they face life."

Local help is hired to serve as matron, teacher, cook, and maid in the orphanage. Thus our MCC workers can continue to spend most of their time in the material aid distributions among the refugees while supervising the orphanage.

Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. Col. 3:15, 16.

A MENNONITE SEMINARY IN SOUTH AMERICA

Representatives of the Mennonite Board of Missions and Charities, with headquarters at Elkhart, Indiana, and of the General Conference Mennonite Mission Board, with headquarters at Newton, Kansas, met at Newton on October 14 to consummate plans for co-operation and support of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary to be founded in Montevideo, Uruguay. Rev. Nelson Litwiller, field secretary for South America and missionary under the Elkhart Board for more than thirty years, has been appointed president of the Seminary and was recently asked to return to the States for consultation at the Newton meeting.

The purpose of the school is to prepare young people, not only of German speaking Mennonite background but also Spanish speaking young people, for every avenue of Christian service in Latin America. While the Spanish language is to be the principal medium of instruction, courses will also be offered in the German language as special needs and requests arise.

Prior to the Newton meeting, some twenty representatives from East and West Paraguay, Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay had met in Asuncion, Paraguay, with the brethren Walter H. Dyck, representing Newton, and Nelson Litwiller representing Elkhart. This consultative body named Peter Wiens, Paraguay Chaco, chairman; Johan Regehr, East Paraguay, secretary; Augustin Darino, Argentina, treasurer; David Koop, Brazil, and Gustav E. Reimer, Uruguay, as responsible for the school, especially in matters of teaching staff, organization and planning. This executive board appointed Nelson Litwiller as president of the Seminary who with the brethren LaVerne Rutschman (missionary in Colombia, South America, under the General Conference Board of Missions) and John Litwiller (missionary to Argentina under the Elkhart Board) form the first faculty. A teacher for the courses in German is to be appointed from the General Conference constituency as soon as a person qualified for this field is available.

President Nelson Litwiller is planning to return to South America by the middle of November and together with Peter Epp and James Martin has been authorized to purchase a property that can adequately house the Seminary. Reports from South America indicate that considerable interest has been awakened by the announcement of the founding of this co-operative venture and church leaders are optimistic that there will be a goodly number of students on hand for the opening of the school some time in April of 1956.

Blessed be the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications. The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him. Ps. 28:6, 7.

The Name Is Henry

HENRY'S RED SEA by Barbara Claassen Smucker. 108 pages, Scottdale, Pennsylvania; Herald Press, $1.65.

Unnamed and unnumbered are earth's thousands of war victims. We call these faceless folk refugees, displaced persons, the needy; those for whom Christ died. But what are their names? Who are these many persons whom the Mennonite Central Committee has helped to feed, clothe, and resettle in new homes?

The publishing of Barbara Smucker's first book for children brings an individual out of this mass of destitute humanity and introduces him to us. The name is Henry Bergen. Henry is a Mennonite boy from Russia; a boy without a home, without a country, and for a time without a father. But in the losing of these things Henry finds God.

In this book that should be read by children in every Mennonite home and by their parents, the pen of Barbara Smucker pictures Henry's soul. The violent eruption of World War II sent the lad and his people swarming across eastern Europe. Henry has a struggle to find food in a war-plundered country, but the larger struggle of his family is to find a faith amidst the smudgy ruins of a civilization.

They find temporary refuge in Berlin, American zone. But the MCC quarters are limited and this German city still stunned by war's inferno cannot keep them. A promised home in Paraguay awaits them, but they cannot move beyond Berlin because the Russians have encircled the city with a sea of red steel.

Here Henry's faith is tested and triumphs. For the Bergen family and many others cross this sea in much the same manner as Moses and his displaced persons left Egypt. On stage for this miracle is the MCC personified by Peter and Elfrieda Dyck.

As the gift without the giver is bare, so the gift to an unknown receiver has not brought full joy to the giver. In perpetuating this Mennonite saga of escape from captivity, Barbara Smucker, a member of the General Conference Mennonite Church, fulfills our gladness in giving for relief by making the nameless needy a living person.

Friends, meet Henry Bergen. Here is not a body that has been fed and rescued, but a soul that has been saved.

Flashes of Thought

A Balcony View

Walter Gering

Not until I went up into the balcony did I see the true significance of the display. It was beautiful, to be sure. But in the midst of all the beauty was a deeper thought which came to light as I climbed up into the balcony and sat alone away from the group.

It was the evening before the annual Harvest Festival. Excitement was running high in anticipation of a day of blessing. The committee had been working for weeks gathering materials for the display—apples, pumpkins, watermelons, vegetables of all kinds, grain in the stalk and harvested. Sixty different varieties of articles were represented in the display, symbolic of the variety of harvest fruits raised in the community. The horn of plenty on each side of the pulpit with its overflowing fruits was but a picture of the bounteous harvest being gathered in during these days. The blending of color added to the scene. One by one the articles were placed into their appropriate spot until the whole platform was literally covered. It was a thrill to sit there in the pew and witness the sight. The committee had done a wonderful job. No one could enter the service without being reminded of the mercies of God so richly showered upon the community.

But it was not until I left the group and sat in the balcony that the truth was revealed. It was beautiful—but suddenly the arrangement of the display took shape. There—seen from the heights—it was discovered that the display was in the form of a Cross! The fruits of the field representing the mercies of God had been transformed into new life. Of course they should be so; wonderful as it was to contemplate the material blessings with which we had been showered, the greatest of all blessings was still that of God's Holy Son represented in the Cross of Calvary.

Excited with my new discovery I could not help but call the committee to take their place in the balcony with me. There we sat, inspired by the lesson of the display. Even such a matter as a display of apples, beans, corn and harvest fruits could only lead us to contemplate the Son of God, the greatest gift of all.

LORD, HELP US IN THE MIDST OF HARVEST DAYS NEVER TO LOSE SIGHT OF THE GIFT OF GOD!

Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. Phil. 4:6.

MCC in Europe Today

ESKO LOEWEN*

This is the tenth anniversary year since the end of the war in 1945. It is also ten years that the MCC program has been operating on the continent. The broken pieces left at the end of the war have gradually been picked up. Newspapers speak of a new prosperity, factories are in full production, bridges, roads, and public works are under construction, housing is the order of the day—a great effort is in process to erase the marks of war.

Why, then, is MCC still in Europe? What is going on in Europe which justifies a continued MCC program?

Although Europe's economy is increasing in tempo, there are many evidences of real need to anyone who looks about a little. This need centers particularly in the plight of the refugees. There are refugee camps in Germany ten years after the war with a population of 3,000 people per camp. There continues to be a serious housing shortage in Germany where virtually every city of 60,000 population or more was bombed. And the last person to have a chance for work and a home is the refugee.

The government will grant a 30-year loan when a refugee can make a 10 per cent down payment on a house. However, many a refugee simply does not have the money for the 10 per cent down payment. So the PAX scheme has been worked out whereby American 1-W boys help build houses. Their contribution in labor becomes the refugee's 10 per cent down payment for a house. The PAX boys enjoy building, but it is intensified when they can help refugees move out of crowded camps into nice new houses.

PAX units are at present in Backnang, Enkenbach, Bielefeld, and Wedel in Germany. In addition, PAX is building a neighborhood center in Kaiserslautern which will be the future MCC home as well as a neighborhood house.

Further MCC activity includes Menno-Heim in Berlin. This center is operated in co-operation with the Berlin Mennonite Church and primarily ministers to the continuing flow of refugees. Bad Duerkheim is a children's home which every three months brings in needy children from six German cities for rest, recuperation and Christian care. Children's homes are also operated in co-operation with the French Mennonites in Valdoie and Weiler.

Very significant work is being done by PAX units in an agriculturally backward area in Greece. Living in the village with the people and working with them in their fields as well as in the PAX experimental grounds, these two units are making real progress in helping the villagers solve local problems. A recent visit by the Queen of Greece, plus Greek financial aid, has confirmed that in the eyes of Greece what PAX is doing there is important.

More recently a mission activity has been opened in Algeria in the area struck by the earthquake a year ago. PAX workers are making a witness and a contact by doing practical work of aid.

A further interest of MCC is fellowship with European Mennonites. For this, a joint effort with Swiss, French, and German Mennonites is underway in the establishment of the Basel Bible School. The Bible School is growing each year with more young people participating and more support and interest from the European churches.

The PAX work for refugees in Germany is being done in close co-operation with German Mennonite leadership and support. French Mennonite contact is realized through the children's homes. In Holland, Heerewegen, the International Mennonite Conference Center is jointly operated by Dutch and American Mennonites.

Heerewegen is expressive of the ever enlarging interest in peace work in Europe. The whole MCC program in Europe is a result of the peace convictions of Mennonites. Whether it is building houses, helping backward farmers, aiding refugees to emigrate or doing children's work—all these activities are rooted in the nonresistance faith in God's will that we do the works of love.

There is also a need for active encounter with people on this question. As a result, conferences are held, contacts made, discussions and literature spread about so that people will know of our position and the reason for it. Informal meetings have been held with University students at Heidelberg and Freiburg. Conferences, in co-operation with other peace minded people such as the historic peace churches have been held. One was held at the World Council of Churches headquarters in Geneva to confront that body with the peace witness. Another has been held at which leading European theologians who confess Christian nonresistance met to discuss the theological problems of the relationship between church and state as it bears on the peace position. This was held in Puidoux, Switzerland. Heerewegen, in Holland, has been the scene of conferences where peace issues have been discussed.

Contact with European youth is yet another field in which MCC is interested. Mennonite Voluntary Service, a co-operative voluntary service program conducted jointly by Swiss, French, German, Dutch, and American Mennonites each year establishes work camps where European and American youth can spend summer time together doing worthwhile work and, at the same time living, worshiping and sharing with each other. This summer a total of six work camps with well over 150 youth are working in Greece, Austria, Germany, and Holland. In a quiet living way, these camps have an evangelistic function because youth discover that the gospel message can be a living reality. Testimonies from these camps by youth who write back after being away a time tell of the changed lives that they produce.

How We Can Use the Bible

HELEN RATZLAFF*

The Bible is a guidebook for our daily lives. How often we misuse and misunderstand the part that the Bible should play in our daily lives! Yes, we probably have our family devotions in the morning and our private devotions in the evening, but let's just stop to think exactly how much they mean to us. Are we too disturbed about the cares and worries of the day to listen with our hearts and minds as well as with our ears? Only after we have disciplined ourselves to this fact can we get the most out of our Bible.

Bible reading should not be done in a hurried manner. Learn to take time for it. Use a portion of the day when your mind is at ease and not tired. Then, we should not just read a short portion here and there but read a chapter or so a day in a consecutive manner because it means much more to a person.

Read the Bible prayerfully. Read it as though it were written for you only. Don't forget that the Bible is God's Word. Through it God speaks to us today and we are brought face to face with Him. God's Word is Holy.

Use faith. Expect the Holy Spirit to teach you when you read. A spirit of obedience is necessary in order to be taught. Then, don't just read the Bible, but study it. Use a concordance and other Bible helps. A devotional guide is of much value. Ponder over certain passages if need be and underline those which have a special meaning or are of some certain significance. Put yourself into it as much as possible and use your imagination to a certain degree in visualizing some of the various happenings.

Get well acquainted with the Bible so that you can us it readily in dealing with people or in handling many situations that might arise on the "spur of the moment," as the saying goes. Use Scripture and be able to point it out to people when opportunity calls for it. This means that you will probably have to memorize certain portions.

If we actually follow these points in using our Bible it will become much more meaningful to us and it will enrich our daily lives. We will be happier and also feel more secure because of it.

Film Review

EXPERIMENTAL STUDIES IN SOCIAL CLIMATES OF GROUPS, 16 mm. Black and White, 30 minutes. Rental $3.00. State University of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.

This is not a religious film. It is a film in which the autocratic, democratic, and laissez-faire types of leadership are compared in three boys clubs. The boys for three clubs are chosen at random. The film points out that the club in which the leader uses the democratic approach is a wholesome group, develops joint planning and execution of plans, and enjoys a happy leader-group relationship.

In the second part of the film the three leaders each take a group, other than the one he had originally and in a number of weeks the habit pattern of the new group changes to the pattern being set by the new leader. The evidence seems to point out that the nature of the leadership used is the determining factor rather than the nature of the boys.

The reviewing committee was unanimous in feeling that the film would have great value for Sunday school teachers and with all leaders in a church in pointing out the different ways we can lead groups and some of the values in using the democratic approach.

This film was made a number of years ago. I have been using it for thirteen years and it has always been appreciated. The photography is poor so the film would be used not because of its good photography but rather because of the values that leaders could secure from it.

PROGRAM HELPS FOR DECEMBER

Advent - The Coming of Christ

Advent refers to the season of three or four weeks before Christmas. It is derived from the Latin for "the coming." The Advent season is to be spent as a long Christmas Eve in the contemplation of the incidents which the approaching festival commemorates, and in the preparation of hearts and minds for the coming King.

The Advent season begins on the First Advent Sunday which falls on the Sunday nearest November 30, which is November 27 this year. The First Sunday in Advent also marks the beginning of the Church Year and so may be looked upon as the New Year's Day of the Christian Church. Advent closes on the last Sunday before Christmas.

The central thought of Advent is the Coming of Christ. From earliest times Christians have regarded this coming in various ways: His first coming in the flesh; His second coming or return as King and Judge of the world; His coming to Christians as the Lord of their heart and lives; and His coming to Christians at their death.

Christ's Coming into Our Lives

PROGRAM NO. 1

Devotional Resources. Hymns from the Mennonite Hymnary which you can use in your program are "Hail to the Lord's Anointed," 65; "Come, Thou Long Expected Jesus," 69; "O Son of God, We Wait for Thee," 524; "The Whole World Was Lost," 467; and "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Savior," 474.

Scripture passages on the Advent theme include Revelation 3:20, 21; Matthew 11:28-30; and Matthew 25:31-40. Responsive readings 7 (Psalm 24) and 46 (Isaiah 40:1-11) in the Mennonite Hymnary are appropriate.

Our Youth Program in the Light of Christ's Advent

This can be used as a panel discussion. The leader will introduce the three speakers in their turn and ask for and encourage discussion by the group present after each talk. Following are some ideas which can be used by the ones taking part in the panel.

Introduction by Leader. In Advent Christians the world over are preparing for Christmas, the day on which we celebrate the coming in the flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It should be our earnest desire that over and above the hustle and bustle of outward preparations, we might prepare inwardly to allow the coming Christ to enter into every area of our lives. Perhaps we would do well to ask ourselves how Christ might enter into and take full control of our youth program.

First Speaker (speaking for Christian Faith and Life area). Jesus says, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me" (Revelation 3:20).

Christ stands and knocks at the door of our hearts and lives. His coming in is the essential beginning of our Christian life and is also the necessary basis for all our work as youth in the Christian church.

For every Christian there remain areas in his heart into which Christ has not as yet gained entrance. As we meet Him in worship, prayer, and Bible study, both personal and as a group, He wishes to reveal His will to us. Have we allowed Him to enter our lives when we are confronted with perplexing personal problems? Have we asked His will about the personal vocation which we are entering or preparing for in the future?

Second Speaker (speaking for Christian Fellowship area). "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another. . ." (1 John 1:7).

How can the coming Christ enter into our human relationships one with another? What attitude do I have toward my parents and other members of my immediate family? Is it one of mutual love and sharing or is it one of necessary tolerance? What kind of influence do the friends I associate with exert

Two Advents

W. C. DOANE

He came not with His heavenly crown, His scepter clad with power:
His coming was in feebleness, the infant of an hour;
A humble manger cradled first the Virgin's holy birth
And lowing herds companioned there the Lord of heaven and earth.

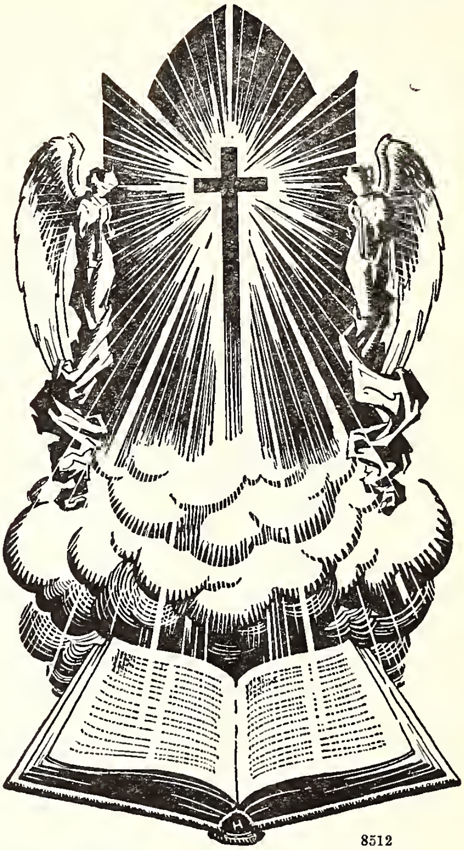
He came not in His robe of wrath, with arm outstretched to slay,
But on the darkling paths of earth to pour celestial day;
To guide in peace the wandering feet, the broken heart to bind;
And bear, upon the painful cross, the sins of human kind.

Yet once again Thy sign shall be upon the heavens displayed,
And earth and its inhabitants be terribly afraid;
For not in weakness clad Thou com'st our woes, our sins, to bear,
But girt with all Thy Father's might, His vengeance to declare.

The terrors of that awful day, oh! who shall understand?
Or who abide when Thou in wrath shalt lift Thy holy hand?
The earth shall quake, the sea shall roar, the sun in heaven grow pale,
But Thou hast sworn, and wilt not change, Thy faithful will not fail.

Then grant us, Savior! so to pass our time in trembling here,
That when upon the clouds of heaven Thy glory shall appear,
Uplifting high our joyful heads in triumph we may rise,
And enter, with Thine angel train, Thy temple in the skies!

—From "Holy Days and Holidays" by E. M. Deems.



upon me? How am I influencing my friends—are they being drawn nearer to Christ? Have I ever asked Christ to lead me in the choice of a life's partner? How do I spend my leisure time? Are my recreational activities such that God could honor? How do I stand toward young people belonging to other groups or to other races?

Third Speaker (speaking for Christian Service area). Jesus says in Matthew 25, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (verse 40)

With these words Christ tells us how we can be used by Him so that through us He can come and enter into the hearts of others. This season of the year affords so many opportunities for Christian service. I suggest that tonight we as a Christian youth group decide upon which projects we might undertake so that Christ might through us enter into the hearts of the needy, be it physical or spiritual, this Christmas. Let me suggest a few things which we might do. (These suggestions must be in line with the needs and possibilities as they exist in each group—caroling for the sick, giving a Christmas party for underprivileged children, giving gifts in money or in kind for overseas relief, etc.)

Closing. The leader may use verses 1 and 3 of "O Jesus Thou Art Standing" as a closing prayer (Mennonite Hymnary 144).

Preparations for the First and Second Advent

PROGRAM NO. 2

Devotional Sources. Hymns from the Mennonite Hymnary for use in this program are "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night," 66; "O Come, O Come Emmanuel," 67; "Veiled in Darkness, Judah Lay," 68; "Wake, Awake, for Night Is Flying," 522; and "It May Be at Morn," 455.

Scripture passages for this theme can be taken from the responsive readings in the Mennonite Hymnary: 52 (Isaiah 61:1-3; Isaiah 51:9-12); 59 (Matthew 24); and 77 (1 Thess. 4:13-18, 5:1-10).

Preparation of the World for Christ's First Coming

(The following ideas can be used by a speaker in preparing a talk.)

Jesus Christ came into the world at the time appointed by the Father. Galatians 4:4: "When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son." God's trains always run on time. God had prepared mankind for the coming of His Son. This preparation may be seen positively and negatively, directly and indirectly.

Jesus himself was fully aware of this when He began His ministry. "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel," (Mark 1:15).

Three great historical nations were used by God to prepare for the coming of the Christ and the planting of Christianity in the world. These are represented by the languages used in the superscription on the cross of Christ, Latin, Greek, Hebrew. (John 19:20)

Preparation through Roman Conquest of the World. The Roman Empire unified the many nations and cultures of the world. These were one great government, a common body of law and practices, a common language, a central mail and transportation system. This helped in the speedy travel of Christianity.

Peace prevailed in the Empire at the time of Christ and the early Church.

Romans established excellent law and order. At the beginning Christian missionaries were protected by the Roman rulers.

Splendid highway systems and regular sea routes gave remarkable facilities for the spread of the Gospel.

Roman policies of tolerance, patience, conciliation, and assimilation allowed free interchange of culture and religion, thus breaking down many barriers giving the preaching of the gospel a fair hearing.

Preparation through Greek Language and Philosophy. Greek was the common language throughout the Roman Empire. The first Christian missionaries did not need to learn many foreign languages.

The New Testament was written in Greek which was the best, most copious and expressive medium through which to convey the gospel of peace and good will to all men.

Greek philosophy in a positive way unveiled the folly of worshiping idols and gods and pointed mankind to one God, as a necessary first principle of the universe.

Greek philosophy in a negative way was unable to give a solution to the problem of being; to the origin and destiny of man and the origin and purpose of evil. Many realized the need of a divine revelation and a divine Savior.

Both Greek philosophy and Greek religion failed to produce a pure morality and mankind sank deeper in sensual and immoral vices and pleasures.

Preparation for Christ in Jewish Life and Thought. God had himself chosen this people among the nations to be the bearer of the knowledge of the only true God, of His holy law, and of the cheering promise of the Messiah.

The Scriptures of the Jews expressed the expectations and promises of the coming Christ as the Anointed of the Lord, the Suffering Servant, and the Son of man. In the times of Jesus, the Messianic hope was perverted as a hope for a worldly and political Messiah.

The Jews had been scattered to all parts of the then civilized world and they carried with them the knowledge of the only true and living God and many Gentiles joined themselves to the synagogues.

The Jewish synagogues formed natural introductory mission stations for the Christian missionaries as they preached Jesus Christ as the fulfillment of the Law and the Prophets.

Christianity was born in the heart of Judaism. Negatively, Christ came unto His own Jewish people and they received Him not, and they crucified Him. Positively, some of the Jews, including the apostles, saw that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God and Savior of the world and first proclaimed the wonderful gospel to both Jew and Gentile.

Thus in the fulness of time, the virgin's son was born to heal the infirmities of mankind. Christ entered a dying world, that in His life, death, and resurrection, He might become the author of life eternal.

Preparation for the Second Coming of Christ

(The following ideas may be used by a second speaker in preparing a talk.) When Christ first came as a child of lowly birth, He took on human flesh in order to be the Redeemer and Savior of mankind. When Christ comes the second time, He will come as King and Judge of the world. At the first Advent He came in humiliation as a ministering servant, but at His second Advent He will come as the exalted One, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Signs of His Second Coming. There will be disturbances in the physical world, great political upheavals, and social disintegration. (Matthew 24:7)

The gospel shall be preached in all the world. (Matthew 24:14)

A falling away due to the deceptiveness of sin. (Matthew 24:10-12)

A study of contemporary events may indicate to us that the world has been prepared for Christ's second Advent. Yet the exact time of His coming is unknown to us. Matthew 24:42, 44: "For in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh . . . . Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Assuredly Christ will not come until the very moment of the fulness of time, any more than at His first coming. We might put it this way: the ingredients are all in the cup; it only needs the addition of some drop to resolve and precipitate them.

Preparation for His Second Coming. Watching; ever be on guard, be aware of the signs of His coming.

Waiting; this should be natural for the Christian who is to be in an attitude of groaning for the liberation of our lives from the powers of sin and Satan, and joyfully awaiting our complete redemption.

Praying and Working: these should go hand in hand. We should be found engaged in the building and extension of the kingdom of God.

ABOUT THE PROGRAM HELPS

William and Mary Dick, Toronto, Ontario, wrote these program helps for the Advent season.

Our Schools

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Andre Trocme, pastor of the Eglise Reforme of France and leader in the Fellowship of Reconciliation Maison in Versailles, will be featured in the Bluffton Concert-Lecture Series on Thursday, December 1, at 8:00 p.m., in Ramseyer Chapel.

Rev. Trocme's experiences in a concentration camp, his experiences in hiding to escape execution, together with his many travels in France, Germany, Palestine, and North Africa help him to interpret Europe's thinking on peace and religion.

David Bar-Illan, brilliant young Israeli pianist, will return to the Bluffton campus for his second appearance on the Concert-Lecture Series program on Tuesday, November 29, at 8:00 p.m. Bar-Illan has a background that includes winning the highest awards given by the Juilliard Conservatory and the Mannes College of Music, and receiving the Coronation Year medal awarded during the coronation of Elizabeth II.

Bar-Illan's stature as an artist of rare abilities and striking appeal has been firmly established in Israel, England, and recently in Canada and the United States.

Soloists for the annual presentation of "The Messiah" to be given on December 11, at 8:00 p.m., in Founders' Hall, were announced recently by Professor Russell A. Lantz, director. They are: Mrs. Dorothy Zorn, soprano, Wheaton, Ill.; Miss Rose Bruno, contralto, Toledo, Ohio; Mr. Thomas W. Williams, tenor, Galesburg, Ill.; and Mr. Miles Nekolny, bass, Chicago, Ill.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

C. M. B. C. has had the privilege of welcoming many visitors recently. On Monday, October 24, Miss Dorothy Boyes of the Child Evangelism Fellowship visited us. The theme of her message was "The Joys of Christian Service," and she told us of her work among children in the Dominican Republic, West Indies.

Rev. Jacob Duerksen, General Conference missionary to India, visited us on Oct. 27. Our guest speaker for the Saturday evening prayer meeting was Rev. Unrau, who has been working among the Indians at Matheson Island, Manitoba, under the Pioneer Mission. He opened to us the great needs of these people so near to home.

Rev. Andrew Shelly of Chicago, who had come to Winnipeg for the missionary conference being held in the Bethel Mission Church, visited the College on October 31. He spoke on some of the vital issues of missions in the world today and faced us with the challenge of taking advantage of the unique opportunities which are available.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

School was dismissed for two days the week of Oct. 31, to permit staff members to attend the meeting of the South Dakota Educational Association at Huron. To make the transportation problem easier the association meets in two sections—one for the eastern area of the state and one for the western—every other year. The other years the entire group meets together. Registration statistics at the two sections this year showed a record attendance.

President von Riesen attended the meeting of the Accrediting Association of Bible Institutes and Bible Colleges held October 27 on the campus of Moody Institute.

Dr. Harold Gross and Professor John Ewert attended the meeting of Deans and Registrars held on the campus of Huron College November 2. Among other problems discussed was the problem of more uniformity in the evaluation of extension work credit.

Bill Gering, director of the General Conference Youth Work spoke in chapel on Oct. 31. He is a graduate of Freeman, whose personality, experience, and sincerity make him well qualified for this work.

Work on the 1956 yearbook, The Pioneer, is well under way. The staff has mapped out all plans. Ads have been sold and the Pioneer photographer took the pictures of staff members and students in the college department. Shirley Schrag is the Pioneer editor and Alvin Quiring is assistant editor. Corlis Preheim serves as business manager and Lawrence Kaufman assists him. Mrs. Emma Schmidt Hofer is the business advisor and Erna Friesen is advisor to the editorial staff.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

It has been a privilege for us to have with us this quarter Jakob and Margaret Duerksen, Paraguay. They came to the Seminary for one quarter prior to returning to Paraguay. On Friday, Nov. 4, Mrs. Duerksen related some of her experiences in Europe, South America, and America to the members of the Women's Missionary Society. After the close of the quarter on Nov. 23 Mr. Duerksen will visit some of the churches of the Western District. On December 21 they expect to leave Chicago and return to Paraguay. Any correspondence should reach them before that time.

Mrs. Tina Warkentin, widow of the late Abram Warkentin, former president of the Seminary, has been living here at the Seminary until now. While here she has been taking regular employment downtown. She has made arrangements to leave here and to visit in Kansas and then take up residence in California.

A new discussion group has been begun in the organization of the Faculty Forum. The forum is made up of teachers from the Bethany and Mennonite Seminaries. Their first meeting was held on Nov. 2 when they discussed the subject "The Present Status of Psychology and Christian Education." We are indeed happy to see this interdepartmental discussion taking place.

Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. Ps. 30:4.

I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving. Ps. 69:30.

MCC news & notes

WITH MCC IN VIETNAM

The MCC workers in Vietnam have been distributing food and clothing among the refugees in the new, raw villages being planted in the forests. They are also assuming the sponsorship for one of these refugee villages and hope by careful planning and hard work to make it a model for long-term refugee rehabilitation. This long-term planning for the livelihood of the refugees overshadows the needs for emergency relief.

Along with this relief to refugees the workers have given food and clothing to some of the tribes villages suffering because of the failure of the rice crop. Another needy group was located at a leprosarium.

With the arrival of Dr. and Mrs. Willard Krabill in October, a program of medical assistance will also be developed. In this country where there has been one doctor to 35,000 people, it is not hard to believe that basic medical care is one of the primary needs. Two nurses are also preparing to join the Krabills.

The first year of MCC in Vietnam is past. It was a year which saw the division of the country, mass movements of refugees, the end of French rule, the fall of an emperor and the beginning of a new republic under Premier Diem. In the midst of this upheaval MCC workers have tried to help those in emergency need and find the area in which they can express the love of Christ to those who suffer physical and spiritual hunger.

MENTAL HEALTH PROGRAM IN PARAGUAY

For many years the Mennonite people in South America have felt the need for a treatment and care program for their mentally ill. The Mennonite Central Committee, which operates the three hospitals in the U. S., has also naturally had concern for this need in Paraguay.

Recently the colonies in Paraguay and MCC decided to move ahead in this needy field and are planning a 15 to 20 bed hospital near Filadelphia, Fernheim Colony, on a co-operative basis.

With this decision, the MCC is now moving to secure an administrator for the proposed hospital. The next step will be to plan for the construction and then to bring together the needed staff.

Our experience in North America has shown us that care typified by love and concern along with competent psychiatric practices is effective in helping many to return to health. The colonies in Paraguay have been caring for the mentally ill among them as best they could, but a mental hospital offers new hope for rehabilitation.

PAX MEN TO PARAGUAY

Clair Brenneman and Menno Wiebe left Philadelphia Nov. 12 to begin two years of PAX service in Paraguay. Both young men will be seconded to STICA, a Spanish agency operating experimental farms in Paraguay. These farms try to find crops suited to the Paraguayan soil and climate and experiment with various ways of treating and preparing soil.

Clair is from Wellman, Iowa, and a member of the Mennonite Church there. Since the death of his parents he has been living in the John Erb home. Menno is the son of the David Wiebes of Mt. Lehman, B. C., and a member of the General Conference Mennonite Church at W. Abbotsford. He was a member of the Voluntary Service unit at Cheyenne, Okla., this summer.

BIBLE SCHOOL IN NEWFOUNDLAND

The Vernon Glicks of Smoketown, Pa., and William Millers of Sterling, Ohio, conducted the first Bible schools in two remote Newfoundland villages this summer; first two weeks at Baie Verte and then two weeks at Wild Cove. Ferne Glick writes: "The children arrived all dressed up in their Sunday best. They looked much like a group of youngsters at home on the first day of Bible school except these children had never been to a Bible school before. They were curious and eager for it to start.

"Some of them were so bashful that at first they couldn't tell you their names, or hid their faces when you asked them a question. But soon they began popping up with the answers or making suggestions.

"It was a joy to teach here. Have you ever told a Bible story when everyone waited breathlessly for you to get the three Hebrew children out of the fiery furnace? What a sigh of relief when God brought them out unharmed!

"And we were so happy to send such good Bible lesson books (Herald Press) home with the children because the homes definitely lack good literature.

"Our hearts were really warmed one night several weeks after Bible school at Wild Cove when we heard children's voices resounding through the cove as they sang, 'Who made the pretty lilies? God did we know!'—one of the songs we had taught them at Bible school."

In co-operation with the German Mennonites, an American youth serves as a youth worker among German Mennonite youth. He helps organize meetings, contacts youth groups and helps inspire study and discussion.

What is MCC doing in Europe? All kinds of work. From building houses, laboriously laying up stone on stone, to building churches (such as the refugee church at Backnang), to helping to build the church of Christ by all kinds of labor and service, they testify to the gospel which says "resist not evil, but overcome evil with good" and "love your enemies." The fruits of this work are rich for those who have answered the call to serve. We trust that each one comes back home with something that will be a flame, light, and fire in the church at home just as much as it is a witness on the field of Europe.

Five other churches had been invited for this festival. The front of our church was beautifully decorated with fall flowers and a display of fruits and vegetables. In the basement where we served dinner to over 250 people, the tables were decorated with fall flowers and leaves and logs served for the lighted orange, yellow, and brown candles. The total amount of the offerings during the day was $1,169.34, which goes for mission work. —Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

Ben Rahn of Inman, Kan., ministered to us in a series of meetings the week of Oct. 23-28, bringing to us the Word of Truth with timely and inspirational messages. Let us not be hearers of the Word only, but doers also. Sunday, Oct. 30, we had our harvest festival and thank offerings. The speakers were: Missionaries Harold Grabers from Africa, Miss Marie Duerksen from India, and Miss Anna Marie Schrag, missionary under appointment to South America. They spoke to us of their experiences on the mission field, emphasizing the urgent need for workers and material resources to carry on the work of saving souls. May these services inspire all of us to examine our lives in the light of the mission entrusted to us. —David T. Stucky, Corr.

The Reader Says—

Dear sir:

I read Alta Mae Erb's article, "Parables," (Oct. 18) with interest. It was apparently written for teachers of children. As a Sunday school teacher, I must write that the author seems confused.

Concerning the first situation, we cannot neglect teaching our children of the power and majesty of God. Nor ought we "soft-pedal" the wrath of God. Can we conscientiously lead children along without telling them of the doom that certainly awaits them?

Let us rather warn of danger ahead, and lead them into the place of safety, the Lord Jesus Christ. When the child knows that he is "accepted in the beloved," and that he "shall not come into condemnation," he will not hide his face in fear. Only then can he look up to the Father with joy in his heart.

Now having been warned and led into the place of safety, the child can hardly get too much Scripture. Perhaps many of you have noticed that normal children seem to have an insatiable capacity for plot and excitement in the world of TV. Will we allow such worldly information to claim their keenest interest, when we have the most exciting and vital information it is possible to find?

Is it not possible that we can cram Bible facts into our children in an uninteresting and inefficient way because we haven't bothered to understand the exhortations and stories ourselves?

The third example sounded alarmingly like a Christ-dishonoring Unitarianism, a way of life that fills the stomach but fails to nourish. It is possible to poison our hearers by feeding them false facts, but it is more probable that we will starve them by giving that which has no food value.

Let us face the issue. There are far more weak, undernourished Christians, children and adults, than there are those who are overfed. Isn't it significant that the Scriptures never warn against knowing the Lord too well?

Without justice there is no need for mercy. Without judgment there is no need of grace. Apart from Christ and His saving grace there can be no communion or fellowship with God.

So our goal must be to teach well-balanced, attractively presented lessons.

THE ADVENT SEASON

We have just entered another Advent Season. Advent means coming or arrival. This is a season of special devotion to prepare ourselves more fully for the celebration of the coming of our Lord on Christmas Day.

Preparing for Christmas is considered in different ways by different people. To many it means a round of shopping and buying of gifts that we may keep up with our friends who may feel obligated to exchange gifts with us. The merchants are very anxious to help in this form of preparation. The stores stock their shelves with all kinds of attractive articles to entice the purchaser to buy. The merchants are "prepared" for the Christmas season, and look forward to increased business—and income.

Jesus once said that the men of this world are wiser than the children of light. This is often true in reference to the Advent season. If churches did as much careful planning, took as great ventures of faith, and tried as hard to "sell" their gospel, as do the merchants to sell their wares there should indeed be a new awakening both among churches and in the communities.

But why should the churches be outdone by the stores? After all, this is first and foremost the great season of the Church. The Church has the custody of the great Good News, more important to everyone than any gift that might be exchanged. The church is entrusted with the gift of Christ who alone can bring great joy to all people—a happiness that no material thing can give. The church has the unique privilege of bringing the Good News to a world which so much needs it.

The stores know that it "pays to advertise" and so get their commodities in the public's attention. The churches too often are satisfied to let people stumble on to the fact of the Good News in Christ Jesus. Should not greater effort be made on the part of churches to prepare both themselves and the communities for the proper observance of the real Christmas, when Jesus comes again to the world, to your heart and mine, and where He is welcomed with glad enthusiasm? Let the Advent Season be a real period of preparation.

WITNESS THROUGH PAX

PAX means Peace. As an alternative to the required two years of military service, this PAX service, sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee, has great possibilities and is doing a good work of peace witness. Here young men go into needy areas and give not only their service freely, but they or their friends must pay for the privilege of doing this kind of work. The impressions they make upon a community depends largely upon the young men themselves, but can be a strong witness of love.

This type of service has such great possibilities that it should not be restricted to those who either themselves or their parents can help finance the monthly amount needed to make such service possible. Churches or interested donors should count it a privilege to make this form of Christian service "In the Name of Christ" available to all young men interested.

This issue of The Mennonite gives more detailed information about the work now being done by the PAX units in some of the countries where it is established. We believe it has a good effect both on the community in which such service is rendered as well as on the young men engaged in the work. If it is a good cause it should be fully supported by our churches and individuals.

We should also be deeply grateful to our government that such a type of work is permitted, in lieu of military training, for those who have definite peace convictions. The PAX service should do more to establish good will among the peoples of the world than all the military training now required of our young men.

"THE ANSWER IS GOD"

A nondenominational organization is sponsoring a "World-wide Church Attendance Movement" from New Year's to Easter. This movement is planned to give churches an "evangelistic thrust" in 1956, to "establish the habit of weekly church attendance, discover prospects for the church, win persons for Christ, establish persons in the faith, enlist persons in active Christian social service, encourage the practice of the Holy Habits, lead members into person-centered evangelism, deepen the spiritual concern of every member, widen the vision of world missions in every church, strengthen the character of every community, develop a deeper sense of stewardship, increase the support of the church by one's presence, prayers, gifts, and service."

There are monthly objectives established for the four-month period. January is the Month of Consecration, February the Month of Cultivation, March the Month of Evangelism and Training, and April the Month of Continuation and Follow-up. The order seems logical; first emphasizing consecration among church families and the importance of developing strong Christian homes; then the emphasis upon securing new members and enrolling them in membership training classes; then the importance of integrating these new members into church activities.

We trust much good may be accomplished by such a campaign. It is well that the emphasis is placed first on a consecration of church members themselves. A church "cannot go further until it gives deeper." When those who call themselves "Christ's people" will really live the Christ life they become living demonstrations of what a Christian can be.

Our churches would do well to adopt for themselves some definite tasks and goals, perhaps similar to the above, for the coming year. This is a time to move forward with Christ.

Badly Bent But Not Broken

MAYNARD SHELLY*

"The world is in a mess."

Yes, that is right; but some folks see some hope. This is all the more surprising when we discover how much wrong they can see in it.

Perhaps the struggle between communism and democracy, between East and West, could be called the battle which threatens the future of the world. J. V. Langmead Casserly in his recent book, *The Bent World looks upon this as a combat which is in the religious realm. He sees the time when communism will wither away, and the possibility that Western civilization will triumph. But this will not happen unless the Christian church will show to Western democracy where the West has failed.

Casserly is professor of dogmatic theology at General Theological Seminary in New York. He is a student of economics, philosophy, and psychology as well as a priest in the Church of England. The author of a number of books on religion and morals, his analysis of the weakness of Russian communism and the failures of Western democracy command our attention.

The Weakness of Communism (Russian style)

Now there are many types of communism. The one everybody is talking about is the Marxist brand practiced in Russia with some improvements on Karl Marx, its founder. Strangely enough this is not real communism, like the communism of the family in which we all take part or the communism of the monastery which is voluntary.

Actually, Marxism is a kind of forced communism which makes people individualists, because it destroys all the natural little groups which men form voluntarily like the family, the neighborhood, and the church. The answer to this kind of communism is not for us to become more individualistic, but to develop stronger groups which can make people happy. This is a challenge to the church.

Marxism is a kind of materialistic society in which all human satisfactions are material satisfactions. The things of this world are the only things worth living for. If you have heard this before it is because this type of materialism is preached by Russia and practiced by America.

Marxist communism is a Christian heresy that has substituted the class struggle for our doctrine of the fall of man; the revolution for the redemption of mankind in Christ; the present dictatorship of the working class for the Christian's waiting for the fulness of the kingdom; and the coming of the classless society for the second coming of Christ.

This kind of communism developed as a result of a religious vaccuum in Russia. For Russia has had a type of Christianity that was a stooge to the state and so was nonprophetic. It never lifted its voice against the evils that opposed the people. When the non-Christian voices of communism spoke up the people followed for they said something that needed to be said.

Here again is a challenge to the church to speak out against sin wherever it is met. But if the prevailing philosophy in Russia calls us to do our job as a Christian church, much more does the predicament of our nation demand it.

The Weakness of Democracy (American brand)

And who will go up and fight the giant of communism for us?

Before we put all our pebbles in the slingshot of Western democracy, let's look at the armor it is trying to wear.

It is hard for our Western brand of civilization to do more than name-calling in this argument against communism. Perhaps Marxism is atheistic, but the defenders of democracy deny the power of Christianity too. The denial of Christianity and the assurance that man is capable to save himself is called secularism, the basic infection of our civilization in Casserly's diagnosis.

We say that people aren't happy under communism. But look around. People aren't happy in America and England either.

Here again democracy has been doing the very same thing that communism has been doing. Consciously the Marxists have set out to destroy the family. Unconsciously our divorce laws are doing the same thing. Without the strength of the family, the basic molecule in the structure of society, there can be no real happiness.

Now our lawmakers thought that in providing for divorce those people who found themselves in unhappy marriages could be relieved of their misery. But here are two mistakes. Those that divorce compound and spread their misery in other marriages. And the ghost of divorce has come to haunt all other homes where it would never have been considered if it had not been possible. Every marriage is clouded by the fact that divorce might mar the happiness of its home. While this cloud hangs over our homes the basic kind of security that people need is lacking.

Casserly calls divorce the greatest social evil of our time. It has brought "unhappiness, frustration, and neurosis which invariably accompany a gravely disordered sexuality." His chapter on "The Divorcing Society" is one of the significant contributions of his book.

While Christianity does not need democracy, democracy needs Christianity. It needs Christianity to provide it with the doctrine of original sin. For if it forgets that man is a sinner, it forgets the very reason that justifies it as a mechanics of government. Democracy is a needed system of government,

A BOMB OR TORNADO

ELMER EDIGER*

"It can happen here: a bomb or tornado." This is the new slogan and strategy of Civil Defense. Apparently mock air raids were unable to stir the population to make Civil Defense a live concern. Emphasis on natural disasters, according to the head of Kansas Civil Defense will now be used to build up their organization.

A recent PTA meeting in a Kansas community confirmed this new approach, "bomb or tornado." With the Udall tornado so fresh in the minds of people this was the best attended "Civil Defense" meeting since 1943.

From a pacifist point of view the "bomb or tornado" was a strange subtle combination. The publicity had emphasized particularly the need for parents and schools learning what to do in case of tornadoes. Actually the only counsel given on tornadoes was a very brief speech saying the schools would keep the children unless parents called for them!

Although there was an interesting film on the Udall disaster, and although there was a call to take Red Cross first aid, the evening was dominated by the clear intent to build up Civil Defense, specifically to sign up volunteers for the Ground Observer Corps for the spotting of airplanes. The subtle confusion of the evening was also to be seen in a closing devotional message which sought to tie all aspects of the evening together through a meditation on "defense" based on Psalm 91.

Because Civil Defense is civilian, appeals to our conscience to save life and yet is an integral part of our military defense, we must take careful counsel as a church. How can we be positive and still keep a clear testimony against war?

Civil Defense will call for decisions of position in regard to war not only from draft age men but from all ages. The decision points will not be as clear cut as "join the army or not." From a Christian nonresistant point of view this civilian program is obviously a mixture of good will. Spotting enemy planes for military purposes means destroying not only saving life. The relief work we desire to do in disasters will increasingly mean decisions on relationship to Civil Defense. Will we wear the C. D. badges for relief work? Will we take C. D. committee assignments for relief or welfare aspects?

Little decisions to participate in the "good aspects" may, unless one is very clear, pull one into positions of accepting "little bad features" or into the embarrassing position of having to be negative on some "little point." Unless we think and move as a brotherhood with some clear counsel many members of ours will compromise or even lose their nonresistance.

Therefore as a church we must help each other to clearly understand Civil Defense. Above all we must find ways of being positive with a clear Christian witness without becoming involved with specific military objectives. We may well consider further whether Mennonite Disaster Service provides one basis for a positive approach.

Those who have had some experience with Civil Defense in their community and are concerned can be helpful by sharing their experience with their conference office or the MCC.

Song of Moses

PAUL FRIESEN

An expression of true thanksgiving is recorded in Exodus 15. Israel had just been led through the Red Sea. "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel unto the Lord." This song logically follows their deliverance from Egypt.

True thanksgiving flows from the heart of God's children sincerely and in an unforced manner. It arises when they have realized a great need in their lives or an adverseness of circumstances and then have experienced deliverance from the hand of God.

As we see our need of God daily and put our trust in Him He delivers us from the sin of self and guides us through trying circumstances by His Spirit. These are objective experiences and are solidly based upon the fact that God has worked for us and in us.

Such experiences must be contemporary. The remembrance of something past and gone offers little stimulus to true thanksgiving and worship. The emotional reactions to old experiences do not necessarily produce the fruit of godliness within us. Let emotions come and go, but let us make certain to realize God's work in our hearts daily. Then our lives will be stable and thankfulness real.

The blessings of yesterday or last year are meant to bring forth fruit today in a richer relationship of fellowship with God. We must be purer, more stable, and happier today than yesterday; if our thanksgiving to God is to come forth unforced.

The grounds for thanksgiving will grow as our personal interests broaden. Not only do I thank God for working in my behalf but also for prospering His work everywhere; among other Christian groups too, even those who differ from us.

Thanksgiving must be God-centered. "The Lord is my strength and song, and He is become my salvation." Praise is not only to Him but of Him. We thank Him for himself. His presence is what we seek. God's deliverance and gifts are meaningless and soon lost to us if by our forgetfulness and self-centeredness we overlook Him in our experiences.

We all suffer adverse circumstances and temptations. Our thanksgiving is not based upon events or feelings but on the presence of God. Therefore "in every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you," 1 Thess. 5:18.

PAX in Europe --

What It Is Today

1-W Men Help German Refugees, Greek Farmers, Austrian School

Mennonite Central Committee PAX is the overseas service program for Mennonite and Brethren-in-Christ conscientious objectors. When performing their alternative service in PAX, 1-W men are a part of MCC's world-wide Christian Service program.

PAX projects are channels through which conscientious objectors demonstrate their belief in the power of Christian love. By doing their Christian duty to alleviate human need and at the same time promoting friendship and good will, PAX men perform service for peace.

PAX 1-W's serve for two years without any financial payment for their work. The $1,800 required to support one man is provided (1) by himself, parents or interested persons; (2) by his church conference or local congregation; (3) by a combination of these ways.

PAX today does relief and rehabilitation work in many countries on four continents—Europe, South America, Asia and Africa. The program in Europe includes construction units in Germany and Austria plus agricultural rehabilitation services in Greece.

GERMANY

PAX Units Constructing Housing for Refugees

PAX units in Germany are assisting in resettlement projects for fellow Mennonites who fled from East Germany when their religious faith and way of life were threatened by Soviet occupation. Since about 5,000 of these 12,000 Mennonite refugees now living in West Germany do not yet have permanent living quarters, PAX men are building houses to help meet their needs.

Four construction units—located at Backnang near Stuttgart, Engenbach near Kaiserslautern, Wedel near Hamburg and Bechterdissen near Bielefeld—work in close co-operation with the German Mennonite Resettlement Agency, the organization in charge of the resettlement program. After preliminary arrangements are complete, Mennonite Central Committee supplies the PAX men, who provide most of the laboring force for the actual construction. The work of these men, who receive no wages, makes possible a 10 per cent saving in building costs, resulting in cheaper housing for the refugees.

Completed settlements will vary in size from 12 to 30 apartment houses. PAX units began construction work at Backnang in early 1952, at Enkenbach in May, 1953 and at Wedel in August, 1953. The newest project, located near Bielefeld, began in April, 1955. With a full crew on the job, it requires an average of about five weeks to build the basic structure of the large four- and six-family houses at Backnang, Enkenbach and Wedel. After moving into their new residences, families have up to 34 years to complete the purchase of the apartments.

Mennonite churches are being established at each settlement. The Church at Backnang, a modern block structure with full basement, is now complete. Funds to build this church were obtained from the new settlers, nearby Mennonite congregations, the German Mennonite Resettlement Agency and the Mennonite Central Committee. Donated labor of PAX men and several local builders, who also gave some materials, made possible a $7,000 saving in construction costs.

Although some PAX'ers have not had previous experience in the building trade, they quickly learn how to do the work. Many have become skilled in masonry, carpentry, plastering, tile laying and electrical work. A German foreman usually directs construction and local firms are in charge of some specialized jobs.

GREECE

Isolated Villages Aided by Agricultural Services

PAX men in agricultural services are working in isolated northern Greek villages to help the people of these impoverished communities raise their standard of living. At villages Panayitsa, Tsakones and Ioannina, where PAX men are stationed, the inhabitants came to Greece 30 years ago as refugees from Turkey.

The effects of primitive agricultural methods and the hardships of World War II and the following Greek civil war are the main factors causing the poverty of these villagers. At best, families obtain only a subsistance living from their plots of worn-out land.

PAX men in Greece, all of rural background, are demonstrating up-to-date agriculture, livestock raising and food preservation. Demonstrations are practical. That is, the Greek farmers are taught to use methods they can readily adopt and tools they can make for themselves or purchase collectively.

On plots set aside for experimentation, PAX men have introduced new crops and shown how to get greater yields from those already grown in the area. To conserve and build up the fertility of the land, they introduced crop rotation, contour farming and use of new fertilizers.

Livestock improvement has been encouraged by the introduction of high grade animals for breeding purposes. In this way, farmers can operate a long range program of dairy cattle improvement, thereby greatly increasing their output of dairy products.

Since villagers often do not have a healthful year-round diet, PAX men teach classes in food preservation to show them how to cure meat and can fruits and vegetables.

Poultry raising is a recently-begun project. Hatched and raised by PAX, improved stock Rhode Island Reds, given balanced diet and proper management, weigh considerably more than those of identical breed and age by local standards.

Film Review

SONG OF THE SHINING MOUNTAINS, 16 mm. Black and white or color, 28½ minutes. Rental black and white, $8.00; color $12.00. Produced by Broadcasting and Film Commission, National Council of Churches. Available from Religious Film Library, 220 W. Monroe St., Chicago 6, Illinois. (Other religious film libraries in Columbus, Dayton, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, and St. Louis.

The purpose of this film is to show some of the issues that face the American Indians on reservations as well as the missionaries who deal with the issues. This is one of a number of films on the American Indians that are appearing since the Home Missions theme for 1955-56 is The American Indians.

Andy Red Cloud sees his parents sell their farm on the reservation and move to town. Soon they squander their money and live in town without any real purpose. Andy also sees some of the injustices the American Indians undergo in our American culture.

Even though he has responded to the Christian gospel, all of these events are a great concern to him. In desperation he turns to the superstitions and practices of his people in an attempt to find peace. While he is on this quest the missionary and the summer service girl follow him to the top of a mountain where he has gone to perform a rite of the American Indians and there he commits himself anew to the Christian faith. The film ends with this dedication.

The reviewing committee was not uniformly agreed regarding the effectiveness of the film. Some felt that the film should show the development of Andy's life as a Christian. The purpose of the film, however, is to reveal the issues the church faces in its work among the American Indians and to leave the problem of the maturing Christians to the church to solve.

The film should be effective with general audiences, particularly with groups from junior high school on up. Younger children, particularly juniors, would enjoy the film but would not understand all of the implications of the story.

This film is a missionary film produced by the Broadcasting and Film Commission to be used by the denominations that support it and by any other groups who want to rent it.

I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvelous works. I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High. Sing praises to the Lord, which dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people his doings. Psalm 9:1, 2, 11.

Flashes of Thought

In Time of Need

Walter Gering

All these weeks that slip of paper with its bit of verse had been upon my desk; it was there where I could see it as I glanced from my work. Yet how often it takes unusual experiences to impress these simple thoughts upon our minds.

When I heard them tell their story it sobered me tremendously. How could any one possibly stand up under such torture and abuse? Many tales had been told of bitter experiences as a refugee. From the lips of men and women in the refugee camps, in homes and private conversations the story of torture had come. So it was with this aged couple. Their experience, as that of many others in similar circumstances, had brought untold distress and anguish. Truly they had tasted of the cup of suffering.

It was the spirit of this aged couple which thrilled my soul. The experiences, though in the past were still as vivid in their minds as though they had happened but yesterday. They could still feel the cruel lash of the strokes beating upon a defenceless body, the point of the gun at the back of the neck. It was all so real.

But the spirit of these—it was thrilling. Not a single word of complaint, not a note of resentment or bitterness toward their oppressors. Where one might have expected words of denunciation and revenge there was nothing but quiet thankfulness to God for blessings received. Truly this was victory in Christ. A strange uneasiness came over me. What would I do under such abuse? Would I be able to stand the test? It was a sobering thought.

The answer came from the lips of the godly mother. They had often feared such moments, wondering how they could possibly remain true in the hour of such extreme trial. Others had been found faithful, but could they be so strong? Then in the hour, as it rushed upon them, they discovered that the same Lord who had sustained them in the past was also sufficient for the fiercest heat of affliction. Her response was simply: "The Lord would give you strength in that hour."

The words on my desk, in plain view for weeks, took on new meaning: "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." Of course that was the answer; for each day's need there is an abundant supply.

Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most high: And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Ps. 50:14, 15.

Motto - Let this mind be

BEGINNINGS

The Bible School in Janjgir was opened twenty-five years ago. This school is the fulfillment of a missionary vision. The 1928 missionary conference which met at Korba adopted a resolution to the effect that we train our own mission workers and for that purpose open a Bible school and add a normal school department to the Boys Middle School. That same year the Hindustani church conference created a Bible School Committee by asking the Evangelism Committee of the missionary conference and the Evangelism Committee of the Hindustani church conference to serve as a joint committee for the Bible school. Next year this joint committee recommended that a Bible school be opened in 1930, that it be located in Janjgir, that both Indians and missionaries serve on the teaching staff and that the Hindustani congregations provide stipends for the students. Students were to be accepted upon the recommendation of the congregation which sent them. On March 12, 1930, the joint committee met in Champa to consider detailed plans for the school which we had been asked to draw up. It is very clear now that the Lord's presence guided us in those days better than we realized at the time.

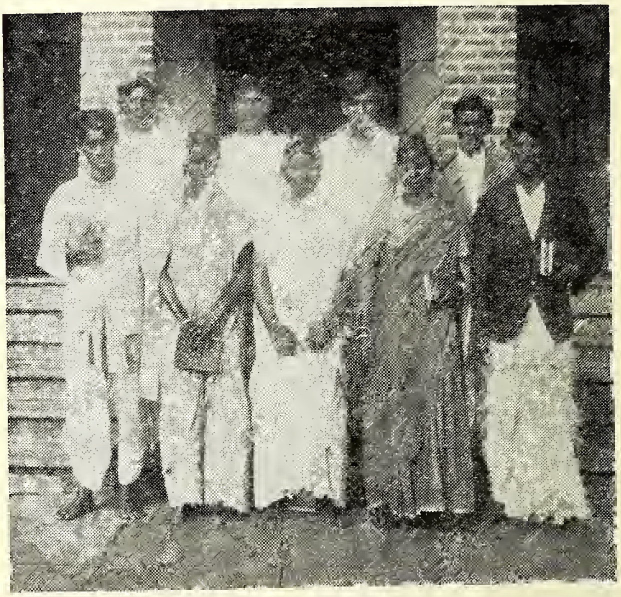
W. F. Unruh, first principal

On July 3, 1930, the formal opening of the Bible School took place in the Janjgir church where the school would be located. Dr. P. A. Penner gave the opening address. It was an impressive service and an hour of deep consecration. The classes were to be held in the Sunday school wings of the church. Student families were given living quarters in village homes and in mission buildings where room could be found. We opened the school with fourteen regular students and a class for the wives of the married students.

AIMS AND PURPOSES

An anniversary is a good time to review the aims and purposes that were set at the beginning of a venture. The purpose of the Bible School was put in these words: "The purpose of the Bible School is to give students a thorough knowledge of the Bible; to awaken in them a love and zeal for the Lord and His work; and to train them for Christian work, that is, for personal soul winning, for village evangelistic work, for Sunday school work, for Christian Endeavor work and general church work. 'He gave some, apostles; some, prophets; some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers,' Eph. 4:11."

When we think of the effective work which some of the graduates of the Bible School have been doing through the years as pastors, evangelists, teachers, and Bible women, we feel that the school is fulfilling the purpose for which it was established. Some of the strong pastors of our Hindustani congregations were among the early graduates of the Bible School. Among them we count Pastor Kripadan, Pastor Phillip Lader, Pastor Tranonidhi, and others.



The first graduating class of the Bible School. Two of the men are now pastors of churches and three are evangelists. The women serve as Bible women.

From the early years of the school neighboring missions have sent students to our school. Under the principalship of Rev. J. R. Duerksen the school has become an Inter-Mission Bible School and its usefulness and outreach has greatly increased. It is quite clear that the Lord's hand has been guiding and His blessings have been on the school from its very beginning. We pray that the school will continue and increase its service in the kingdom of God for many years to come under the Lordship of Christ.

COURSES OFFERED

A three-year course is offered during which time every book in the Bible is studied in one way or another. Bible story telling, Bible geography, comparison of religions, church history, Homiletics, and other related subjects are also given.

The school began with six months of classroom work and two months of village evangelism. Because it was so difficult to cover the book work, the term was lengthened to nine months with one month of touring in the villages.

PRACTICAL WORK

Participation in church work, Friday afternoon preaching in homes or marketplaces, gospel team trips and the special village evangelism periods make up the extracurricular work.

Volleyball and football are favorite sports with the men.

Touring—Village Evangelism

Only one out of 40 persons in India is classed as a Christian. There are thousands of villages in India where no one knows what salvation in Christ Jesus means. January is the month in which Bible School students and staff go into these villages to work out practically what they gained theoretically.

Since beds, bedding, tents, cooking utensils, food supplies, books, and medicines, are taken out for each camp group, there is considerable hustle and bustle to get everyone settled. The student body is divided into three or four groups. The students settle down to do intensive teaching and witnessing in their center and in surrounding villages. Indian people do not live on farms but in villages which are sometimes only two miles from each other.

One camp diary offers a few interesting jottings:

Camp site. We are in the trailer tent which suits me just fine. In a land with all sorts of creeping, crawling things it feels much safer to be up on wheels. But most of the workers have spread their bedding on the straw that covers the ground in their tents. No wonder that they pray nightly, "Dear Lord, from all creeping, poisonous creatures deliver us this night."

Our tents are outside of the village on a strip of land between two water tanks (reservoirs). This is the "bathingest" place I have ever seen. No matter how cold the January wind blows, there are people bathing before sunup.

High caste women bathe before cooking. They wrap their wet saries about their shivering bodies and hurry home. Alas, if such a one should inadvertently touch one of lower caste (or even me) which on their way they would have to go back and bathe again.

In the reservoir back of our trailer tent only the men bathe. They go washing in where the water is chest deep and evidently offer oblation to the sun god, Naraujan. They scoop up water in their palms, raise it to the east and let it trickle out. Then raising their hands to their foreheads and bowing in worship, they wade out again.

Oh India, India! All your ablutions can not wash away sins. The priest, who walks by here draped in wet garments, has a most unhappy face. Surely our being here gives him no pleasure for our message of Christ as Savior is directly opposed to what he teaches as salvation. I think of him when I hear the clang of the evening temple bell. Is this a call to the gods for communion or is he telling them that they may rest now?

On a gnarled, old peepul tree (with leaves like a poplar) I see a number of black earthenware pots hung up on the trunk by sisal hemp cords.

Getting into Homes. Last night we took a walk through the winding streets of our village. It is a large village and we almost lost our way. We came to a courtyard where a number of people were sitting and chatting. We asked, "Have there ever been missionaries camping in your village?" The younger people shook their heads negatively but the older ones remembered that many years ago there had been some "white" people camping in the Japanese brutality had filled the hearts of the Filipinos with hatred. When four young people came from Japan to the Philippine Islands there was hope that a work camp would help to—

BREAK DOWN BITTERNESS WALL

National and racial prejudice go down before Christianity lived and practiced.

Work camps in the Philippines have not only cleared swamps and jungles, bridged streams and ditches, but, according to Jessie Ash Arndt in a report featured in Peace News, broken down walls of bitterness and cleared out prejudice.

When a group of Filipinos decided to go work-camping overseas and chose to go to Japan they prepared themselves to do so with a spirit of forgiveness for the wrongs suffered during the Japanese occupation in World War II.

But when they got to Japan they found the young Japanese knew nothing of the atrocities perpetrated by their soldiers in the Philippines; they felt only a sense of their country having been wronged because of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

So the Filipinos decided to invite an international team including Japanese to a project in the Philippine Islands the following year. Four young Japanese came, two men and two girls. In the total group were also representatives from Korea, Thailand, Hong Kong, and a young man and his wife from the Marshall Islands who were preparing to be missionaries.

"I'll kill the first Japanese I see."

This young man from the Marshall Islands, as soon as he found himself in this group with the Japanese faced the challenge to prove the Christian precept of forgiveness. For in the war, he and all his family had been captured by the Japanese and he alone had escaped and survived. He had then said that he would kill the first Japanese he saw.

The Filipino camp leaders took the precaution of having someone always with the Japanese visitors. They took them from place to place in cars rather than letting them ride on public buses where their

What Is a Work Camp? . . .

Work camps have two aims. Their first purpose is to build something for people in need, whether it is a house, a church, or a canal. In this respect work camps are much like many of our Voluntary Service units.

But an international work camp also aims to build spiritual understanding between individuals from different backgrounds. This has also been a by-product of many of our inter-Mennonite service projects. But other groups have expanded this concept to include different religious faiths as well as different races, nationalities, and ideologies.

One international church agency sponsored thirty work camps involving more than a thousand young people in 1955.

Last August a work camp in the little French village of Glay brought together young people from Asia, Europe, Africa, and America, who were primarily Protestants but included members of other religious persuasions. Here they contributed their labor toward the building of a Protestant community center in this small town that had been shelled during the war.

A continuous work project in Birmingham, England, presence might incite resentment. The Japanese workers were kept unaware of the fact that they were being protected or that there was reason they had to be.

Then, one day, a Filipino under the influence of liquor rushed into the camp and threatened the Japanese. He was restrained and no harm came to them but when the Japanese asked, "What does this mean?" they were told how the Filipinos felt and why.

"I found two sisters."

The two Japanese girls volunteered to stay longer in the Philippines and tour the islands with a goodwill group. They planned to ask forgiveness in the name of their people for the deeds of the war years. In the group was the couple from the Marshall Islands. The Marshallese man, standing beside the two Japanese girls said, "Although I have lost all my family I have found two sisters."

This tour accomplished much in breaking down malice among people who were reached. There were many instances of a change of attitude from bitterness to forgiveness.

The father of one of the camp leaders had also said he would kill the first Japanese he saw. But it was at his home that the two Japanese girls were welcomed after the camp closed.

The young Christians found that national and racial prejudice went down before Christianity lived and practiced.

GOING WITH GERING

SOME CASE

Sharing through conversation is one of the ways in which we exchange our common love and concerns. A girl admitted having a "case" on a boy and wanted to share her feelings with him. But she did not know how to let him know without making her feelings too obvious. If others found out they would tease her.

We often tease about "crushes" and "cases" or whatever other name you may call it, but we really only mean to seek information in a humorous way. There are times when misunderstandings creep in because we do not know what is on the other person's mind. People usually talk about things which mean a great deal to them at the time.

As youth worker I always enjoy getting into various homes. There is always a sense of expectancy in terms of conversation. To illustrate I could give snatches of a dialogue with a hostess who is trying to find out my marital status without asking me too directly. Some call it beating around the bush.

"I take it that you are involved with a, shall I call it, a case?"

"Well, yes—I guess you could call it that."

"I presume you found the most attractive one available?"

"Not really, although I would say above average. At least that is what others have told me. Since we are so close to each other beauty is secondary."

(Aha. If they are so close he must be married.) "I presume you put willingness to share, loyalty, stability, and desire to serve above beauty?"

"Yes, quite so . . . stability of service is essential stewardship in the Christian life."

"It seems to me it must be quite a strain and take a lot of waiting on the part of your companion since your job calls for so much traveling."

"That depends on how you look at it. Get the most trusted one and the strain won't be too great. Mine brings together youth from different nationalities for week ends or longer periods to clean and repair the homes of elderly people who live in slum areas.

Two Kinds of Building

Both Jews and Arabs have taken part in Quaker and Unesco work camps in the Middle East. Youth from these two hostile groups have come to see what they have in common and have also been able to see their differences in a new light.

A social service organization brought men and women from both sides of the iron curtain together in Warsaw, Poland, to clear a bombed area in the city's center for a children's playground. Youth who were convinced communists came from Poland, Russia, and Bulgaria and others with opposing views came from Britain, France, Norway, Switzerland, and India. While the work camp did not change any of the workers' convictions, it was hoped that a foundation was laid for a future meeting of minds.

In Break Down Bitterness Wall we have an account of what can happen when Christians from nations with a history of bitterness caused by war and oppression live in a work camp experience.

waits for hours, if necessary, beside me or on some sidelines while I visit or talk."

"I can imagine traveling together makes time go faster, or don't you sometimes travel together?"

"Oh yes, most of the time. Unless I go by plane. That can get too expensive."

"Yes, that's what I'm told. I've never gone by plane. Heard they make you pay extra for too much luggage."

"They certainly do! Dollar a pound."

"Oh well, then there is someone at home to keep things neat and dust-free. You help her don't you?"

"Pardon?"

"I suspect you do your share to keep things in their place?"

"Certainly. That is a lesson I learned in short order. Gets to look like a mess in a hurry if you don't try to keep things neat."

"I can imagine when you travel alone you always feel it is nice to have someone to come home to. Do you have any children?"

"Children? No, but I have ten nephews and nieces. I call them my children."

"Oh, I see. But never mind. Remember the old saying—there is a time and place for everything."

"Yes, there certainly is."

"Marriage is really a wonderful thing. My husband and I had such wonderful experiences planning our marriage, and we continually keep learning to share as our family grows. Did you know your wife a long time before you were married?"

"My wife? Well . . . I don't happen to be married."

"Not married! I don't understand . . . you said . . . . Oh, you are engaged . . . ?

"Engaged? Well, in a way."

"I'll bet she is quite happy with a "suitor" like you."

"She? Happy with my suiter? What does a SHE have to do with my 'suiter'?"

"Well, the girl you're engaged to. You said you were engaged."

"Oh that! I meant I was engaged in youth work for our Young People's Union."

"You mean . . . I mean . . . what about that, that . . . "case" you mentioned in the beginning?"

"CASE? What case? Oh, you mean a girl friend or something?"

"Of course! What are you talking about?"

"Me? I was talking about my "two-suiter" suitcase."

Thus the subject changes to what it's like to live out of a suitcase. There is no thrill in always lugging a suitcase but we cannot expect to do the Lord's work without living in some stages of inconvenience. Sometimes I converse with God about my case . . . . "Thank-you God for having someone invent a helpful thing like a suitcase."

Meet the Presidents

Clair Bartel, Pacific District YPU

Serving the Pacific District Young People's Union is Clair Bartel, a member of the Alberta Community Mennonite Church of Portland, Oregon. He is married, and quite proud of his baby daughter who was born on the 4th of July. Clair, a graduate of Portland's Lewis & Clark College, works as assistant manager of a company which manufactures and wholesales roofing materials. His church duties include teaching a class of college age and professional young people.

Elaine Widmer, a graduate of Whitworth College and member of the Emmanuel Mennonite Church of Pratum, Oregon, serves as treasurer for the Pacific District YPU. The youthful secretary of this group is Rowena Voth of the Glendale Mennonite Church of Lynden, Washington.

The twenty-three churches comprising the Pacific District are scattered from Mexico to Canada and from the Pacific Ocean to the Rocky Mountains. This poses quite a transportation problem and makes it almost impossible to hold meetings on a district wide basis. The only exception to this problem is the annual meeting held as a part of the Pacific District Conference. The next meeting of this type will be held during June, 1956, at the Downey, California, Church. All retreats and other activities are planned and conducted on a state-wide basis. The six churches of Oregon are located close enough to hold Friday evening socials. In Washington, Idaho, and California, the young people meet as a whole only once or twice during the year for youth conventions.

The emphasis of the Pacific District Young People's work is on foreign missions. This year they have assumed part of the support of two young couples from their own district who have gone out under the Congo Inland Mission. These are Mr. and Mrs. Earl Roth who have just arrived in the Congo to assume teaching duties, and Dr. and Mrs. John Zook, medical missionaries. The latter couple is at Antwerp, Belgium, taking courses prescribed by the Belgian Government prior to their entry into the Congo. The support of these couples has given the Pacific District Young People a greater vision of the work and needs of the foreign missionary.

I will love Thee, O Lord, my strength. The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower. I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised. Psalm 18:1, 2, 3.

Our Schools

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

A college octet, directed by Earl Lehman, has been organized for the purposes of presenting programs at various organizations and school assemblies. First performance of the octet will be at the college faculty club meeting in December.

Chosen as members of the octet are: Nan Tritch, soprano from Findlay, Ohio; Marilyn Blomgren, soprano, Chicago, Ill.; Nancy Hostetler, alto, Smithville, Ohio; Carolyn Schnell, alto, Goshen, Ind.; John Basinger, tenor, Mountain Lake, Minn.; Ronald Ropp, tenor, Normal, Ill.; Tom Reichenbach, bass, Pandora, Ohio; and Don Pannabecker, bass, Peoria, Ill. Sandra Berry, from Bluffton, is the accompanist.

The Booster Committee has announced that the net income from the booster play, "The Apple of His Eye," amounted to $330. This, in addition to the contributions which will be obtained from the booster banquet next spring, will be used for some special campus project.

Intercollegiate debating is being revived this year on the campus with Dr. Paul Shelly, instructor. The first debate was held on November 10, with Heidelberg College. This year's debate topic is: "Resolved: That nonagricultural industries of the United States should guarantee their employees an annual wage." Barbara Hobart and Marion Keeney represented Bluffton as the negative team.

Proceeds from the work day held on October 19, totaled $779.76, it was announced by Joe Smucker, chairman. This compares favorably with last year's sum of $586.63. Project to be used with the earnings has not yet been determined.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Once again the college opened its doors to many visitors. Mrs. Neufeld, who with her husband has been doing city mission work in Chicago for many years, was with us on Tuesday, Nov. 1. She enlightened us on many aspects of the work. Esther Patkau, who graduated from CMBC in 1950 and has spent one term as a missionary in Japan, dropped in for a brief visit that day. She has just returned home on her first furlough.

Rev. Levi Keidel, missionary to the Belgian Congo, presented us with a very challenging message on Nov. 2, speaking to us on some important characteristics and personality traits which every missionary should possess, and which every Christian, for a well-rounded life, should also possess.

On Nov. 7, Dr. Schmidt, the president of the Grace Bible Institute in Omaha, Nebraska, spoke in chapel. His topic was Biblical Archeology, and he showed us the value of such a science today, in confirming and illuminating the Scriptures. The students and faculty were given a treat of a different nature in the form of a social which had been planned by the Fellowship Committee. On a recent Sunday afternoon the teachers entertained the students in their homes. Their hospitality was appreciated by all.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Larry Eisenbeis, a graduate of Freeman, who has just returned from Europe where he spent over two years with a PAX unit, serving mostly in Greece, spoke in chapel Nov. 9. Speaking on Romans 12:1 his earnest sincerity spoke of deep convictions. He and three other young men who have worked with PAX are on a speaking tour of the churches from Pennsylvania to the Middle West.

Orlando Wahl of Wolf Point, Montana, served as chapel speaker Nov. 7. Mr. Wahl is vitally interested in Christian education and is chairman of the Board of Directors of the Lustre Bible Academy of Lustre, Montana.

Walter Jost conducted a singspiration Sunday evening, Nov. 6, at the Bethesda Mennonite Church near Marion. Rev. T. A. van der Smissen is pastor of this church.

The faculty spent a social evening together in the dining hall of Pioneer Hall Nov. 8. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Becker, Mrs. Fannie Graber, and Mrs. Emma Hofer were hosts to the group.

Erna Friesen spent a weekend at Henderson, recently visiting her parents. The Orlando Goering family visited relatives in Kansas.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

We have greatly appreciated the many gifts of canned goods and groceries that have been given to the Seminary by different churches and organizations. We would like to thank those churches who have remembered the Seminary in this way. Churches that have sent such produce this year are Topeka, Topeka, Ind.; Zion, Donnellson, Iowa; Summerfield, Summerfield, Ill; First Church, Nappanee, Ind.; Boynton, Hopedale, Ill.; Calvary Memorial, Washington, Ill.; Flanagan, Flanagan, Ill.; Meadows, Meadows, Ill.; Warren Street, Middlebury, Ind., and the Grace Mennonite Church at Pandora, Ohio.

Don Kaufman and Ernest Neufeld presented the highlights from the Inter-seminary Student Conference which they attended on Nov. 3-4. The speakers at the conference were George F. Hall, secretary of the Commission on Younger Churches and Orphaned Missions, Edmund Soper, professor of History of Religions at Garrett Biblical Institute, and Joseph M. Kitagawa, assistant professor of History of Religions, University of Chicago. The theme of the meeting was "Missions: Imperative or Optional."

The Seminary school bus was crowded when it left the Seminary Sunday afternoon, Nev. 6, on a tour through the city of Chicago. Howard Kaufman, formerely instructor of Sociology at Goshen and now a student at the University of Chicago, conducted the tour. Housing projects, slum clearance projects, and Mennonite missions were the chief object of the tour.

MCC news & notes

PARAGUAYAN MISSION TO LEPERS

For ten years the MCC has worked with the Paraguayan Mennonites to develop a leprosy treatment mission for Paraguayans. This is one way in which the Mennonites can express their appreciation to the government of Paraguay for the religious freedom and asylum offered to Mennonite immigrants when they were without home or country.

Dr. John and Clara Schmidt of Mt. Lake, Minn., went to Paraguay in 1950 to begin this service. Paraguayan Mennonite young people assist on a voluntary service basis.

The workers found that it was hard to overcome a natural distrust of a foreigner, hard to deal with the popular misconception about leprosy and even harder to win the confidence of those who suffered from the disease. To win the confidence of their neighbors they began giving general medical service also. The clinic records show that well over one thousand have been treated.

There are now three clinics for the treatment of leprosy or Hansen's disease. The first and largest is at Barrio Grande, the second at Km. 81, and the third and most recent at Coronel Oviedo. From these clinics they also go out to find the sufferers, for here as everywhere else, those called "unclean" are often deserted and forced to live apart.

Mrs. Schmidt describes one patient: "She had been found right in our neighborhood the week before, deserted because of the dreadful disease. We found her hut of logs with a grass roof in a rocky no-man's land. Inside on a cot we found our patient, a scrawny, scabby, drawn together heap of misery. She was bedfast, and her only attendant was her 12-year-old boy who also showed the early signs of the disease. She was literally starving to death and all hope was lost!"

The Schmidts gave the woman warm clothes and fixed a meal for her. Now her son comes regularly to the clinic to get food for his mother.

"We are doing what we can to ready one room of a house which is under construction now so that we can bring this patient here for treatment and care."

JOINS MCC IN EUROPE

Katherine Penner of Jordan Station, Ont., who has served with the MCC in the Waterloo, Ont., and Akron, Pa., offices sailed abroad the "S.S. Ryndam" Nov. 17 for two years of service in Europe. At Frankfurt, Germany, she will be in charge of the refugee migration work and processing European young people to attend Mennonite colleges in the U. S. or come as trainees for a one-year period. Elmira Kliewer, Mountain Lake, Minn., has been doing this work for the past two years.

Katherine is the daughter of Dietrich and Catharina Penner, themselves once refugees from Russia. She is a member of the United Mennonite Church at Vineland, Ont.

FIRST PEACE MEETING IN TOKYO CENTER

Nov. 6 was a "big day" for the MCC unit in Japan as they held their first peace meeting. Each Sunday afternoon a group of young students gather at the Tokyo center for Bible study, fellowship, and discussion. On Nov. 6 the Melvin Gingerichs and Norman Wingerts invited Mrs. Nonomiya, a Japanese Christian pacifist, to speak on the Christian peace movement in Japan to these young people. Thirty-two gathered at 3 p.m.; the last young man did not leave until almost eight. They held a long discussion and eagerly checked books out of the new peace library.

The Melvin Gingerichs recently came to Tokyo to present the peace testimony in Japan. They find interest in the topic of "peace," but great need for presentation of the CHRISTIAN peace position. As part of their witness they plan to hold a similar peace meeting about once every two months.

for since man is a sinner power must be controlled by all the people for no man can be trusted with absolute power.

The Christian church must bring to Western civilization a doctrine of the universal church. The Reformation put its emphasis on the local church and so the individual member lost his sense of belonging to something universal and world-wide. In place of belonging to the universal church he substituted the nation which was big, but not big enough. The world must be shown that there is a body to which man can belong regardless of race. Here the confused struggle of collectivism against individualism is solved for in the common life of the church each can be fully a person, but still belong to a meaningful group.

The revival of interest in the meaning of the church among Mennonites can be our best remedy to the world's problems. The success of the Russian revolution shows that there is a hunger for a group life. This kind of life can best be found in the brotherhood church.

AUSTRIA

1-W's Assist Rebuilding of Protestant Institution

Jointly administrated by Mennonite Central Committee and Brethren Service Commission, the 1-W unit in Vienna is assisting the Austrian Protestant Relief Agency to rebuild a large parochial school. The project calls for complete renovation of the city's principal Protestant school that will provide Christian education facilities for more than 600 boys and girls.

Completely gutted by fire in the last months of the war, the building's interior had to be cleared of massive rubble before actual construction could begin. To aid in obtaining funds for reconstruction, Vienna city authorities approved public solicitation and the Austrian government issued a series of postage stamps, with 25 per cent of the proceeds designated for the school. A $40,000 gift contributed by North American Lutherans made it possible to begin constructing the institution.

Rebuilding this school is a significant venture for Austrian Protestants. During Soviet occupation, 140 Protestant schools in eastern Austria were closed. This is the only one being renovated for further use. Restoration is motivated principally by two things—the ever-continuing need to give youth a Christian education and the necessity to preserve the institution as a symbol of Protestantism in a city where the population is 85 per cent Catholic.

mango grove near the road. Of their message they seemed to remember nothing.

How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed! and how shall they believe when they have not heard?

Monday morning we women started out to visit the homes. We knew no one and many of the women looked frightened when we came. They have no idea why we are here.

Sometimes when we asked whether we might come into their courtyards to sing for them, they shook their heads, "No." We hastened to assure them that we asked no alms. We only wanted a chance to tell them of Paimeshwar, the greatest of all Gods. The girls in our group were soon in demand for it is a delight to hear them sing. The attentive women called out, "Sing us another one." One woman remarked to her neighbor, "Do you notice how all their songs are about Yeshu Masih (Jesus Messiah)?"

Yes, only one name, not many. We serve a living Savior.

We visited two homes during the morning. As girls told of Christ the question kept coming to my mind, "Do these illiterate women understand at all what we are trying to tell them?"

There is a government school, grades 1 to 4, in our village and the children were soon interested in books we have for sale. Almost every day someone asked for a booklet and handed us the copper coins he had clutched tightly in grimy hands. One little fellow, with front teeth missing, became the spokesman for more timid ones and lisped out the request for "one more little book." I was surprised to hear a fourth-grader say that the booklet entitled, "Search for the True Teacher," was a very good book which he recommended to others.

THE WORD

"As a fire to purify,
As a lamp to journey by,
As a balm all wounds to heal
For mine own and other's weal;
As a vase of ointment sweet,
As a rule of life—complete;
As a seed to grow and bloom
So that sin may find no room.
As a song to banish fear,
As a spring of water clear,
By thy grace, assist me, Lord,
In my heart to hide thy Word!"

The Self-Revealing Triune God

In the calm repose of night,
Contemplating what is right,
With all pretense cast away,
Search for truth the guiding ray.

First I glimpse a God through sight
Of the universe so bright,
Vast expanse of boundless space
With each planet in its place.

Earth with all its beauty rare
God's existence does declare
While the sea with mighty waves
Of its Maker ever raves.

Earth and sky and mighty sea
Thus united hold a key
To the truth through all of time,
Our Creator is sublime.

Next God is revealed in part,
Through His promptings in my heart,
Staunch and calm restraining voice
If some wrong would be my choice.

Whispering inspiration true
For the good that I should do,
Soothing Spirit in distress
Always near I must confess.

Now my hideous guilt I view
Hurts which I cannot undo,
Evil I have said and done
Recompense for this I've none.

Thus if justice has its sway,
Somehow, someone has to pay,
And with shame and thanks I see
Son of God upon the tree.

Analyzing that dark scene,
God is seen in Son serene;
Love's embrace binds through the storm;
Son is God in earthly form.

Triune God is thus revealed
With the truth no more concealed;
Father, Holy Ghost, and Son
Pleading till our rest is won.

Three in name, yet only one
Bound by Love revealed in Son;
Through this Love we too can be
One with them eternally.

The Lord is My Shepherd

My Shepherd is the Lamb,
The living Lord Who died;
With all things good I ever am
By Him in love supplied.

He richly feeds my soul
With blessings from above,
And leads me where the rivers roll
Of everlasting love.

His love so full, so free,
Anoints my head with oil;
Goodness and mercy follow me,
Fruit of His grief and toil.

When faith and hope shall cease,
And love abides alone,
I then shall see Him face to face,
And know as I am known.

SOME OBJECTIVES FOR 1955

1. To work for a Conference unified in Christ.
2. To teach the gospel of Christ effectively.
3. To finance Christ's work in our Conference.
4. To recruit young people for Christian service.
5. To witness to the millions entrusted to our Conference.

A MIRROR OF THE SOUL

With the special emphasis upon Bible reading at this time of year, and the observance of Bible Sunday, December 11, it might be well to consider just what we expect to benefit from extra Bible readings.

Some read the Bible for the interesting stories it contains. Some for the wonderful promises which may be appropriated. Others search for comfort for broken hearts or troubled souls. Still others may read it from a sense of duty, or as good literature and ancient history and biography.

It might be helpful to look into the Bible as the mirror of our souls, to see ourselves as we really are. We look into the ordinary mirror to see our outward form and perhaps improve the image we see that we may appear at our best. To look into the mirror of our soul we should likewise note what is wrong and where we need improvement. We can see ourselves as marred by sin and needing the grace of the Lord Jesus. We see our problems, struggles, joys, sorrows, faults, and possibilities, as we look carefully into this soul's mirror. But we also see the Christ, who alone can make us what we ought to be.

With such a new approach to Bible reading we would soon learn that the Book indeed shows up our defects and misarranged souls. But it shows also how people such as we are, were made the children of God, and how it is possible for us also to belong to that grand fellowship as we accept Christ as our Savior and Lord and walk in His way.

DISCIPLES AND DISCIPLINE

These two words are closely related; there is no real discipleship without careful discipline. Both words carry the idea of learning, and of being a true follower.

There are many disciplines of life, both voluntary and involuntary. Some of the involuntary disciplines are such as the happenings of circumstances; difficulties which face us because we live in this kind of a world. These circumstances or events can be real disciplines which teach us great lessons. If accepted wrongly, they may break us.

Then there are the self-imposed disciplines. One makes a careful study of what is really worthwhile in life and what is not, and decides to hold himself only to those things which make for real spiritual development. To choose this and avoid that is a matter of real discipline. Some do not make the effort to so order their lives and consequently have an unbalanced or misfit life to contend with.

There are also the disciplines imposed from others without our free consent. Children often resent such disciplines, but later discover that those very restrictions were the best that could have happened to them.

The true disciple welcomes the proper discipline for he knows it will help him be a better disciple. From such disciplines he can learn great truths as well as be spared many spiritual mishaps. There may never be complete agreement as to just how much discipline is needed in the making of a true disciple of Christ, but it certainly should not be ruled out.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Many churches hold their annual meetings around the turn of the year. In increasing numbers, churches hold these meetings earlier so that all officers and committeemen may begin promptly with the beginning of the new year. Some begin their church year in the fall. But many churches still hold this yearly planning event around the beginning of the new year.

Unfortunately, in many churches people do not seem interested in this annual meeting of the church, and as a rule, but a relatively small per cent of the members actually take an active interest or even attend. In places where a common meal is held in connection, it is to be noted that many more may attend this physical meal as attend the spiritual consideration of the work and place of the church.

The reasons for poor attendance may be varied. The meeting may be too dull and uninteresting, or, on the other hand, the church members may not be interested in the actual work of the church. Which ever way we consider the problem, each church should seek to arouse interest both by holding an interesting session and by inspiring interest from all in the important work of the church.

It could be the most interesting and helpful meeting of the year, where careful plans are laid for the year's work, responsibilities and duties outlined and delegated, and a program of definite advance clearly laid out. It could be a meeting of deep unity, binding all to the great task of the church and its important work. It could be a time of dedication where all members renew their consecration to the church and Christ, its head, and take a new interest. It could be a time where the budget is carefully considered and the real sense of stewardship sharpened up. It could be a meeting where missions and the needs of others around the world would be given at least as much consideration in the budget as our own comfortable needs. It could be a meeting of inspired hope and courage to go forward into new work for Christ.

10. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path," Ps. 119:105. See also Ps. 119:11.

11. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you," John 15:7.

12. "I commend you to God and to the word of his grace which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all them that are sanctified," Acts 20:32.

13. "The sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Jesus Christ," 2 Tim. 3:15. See also 2 Tim. 2:15, 3:16.

14. In Luke 24:16ff the two disciples were blind, sad, with hopes shattered, foolish, slow to believe, weary. But when they understood the Scriptures, through Christ abiding, they were exhuberant and thrilled with a new vision, a new zeal and passion, new physical strength, and a new message. In this understanding of Scripture, Christ was central, and in Him, His Cross was central. See also Luke 24:36—45—53.

15. "Blessed is the man whose delight is in the law of Jehovah; and on his law doth he meditate day and night. He shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water, that bringeth forth its fruit in its season, whose leaf also doth not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper," Ps. 1:2, 3.

II. Suggestive Methods of Bible Study.

A. Study of Words. Take the great words, such as "love," "mercy," "cleansing," "faith," etc., etc., and with the help of references locate all verses where used, and discover the hidden meaning and significance in the various connections.

B. Study Great Subjects.

Take the great doctrinal subjects, as Holy Spirit, sin, heaven, baptism, Lord's Supper, First Advent, Second Advent, etc.

Take many other subjects which bear on devotional life and practical Christianity as "Prayers of the Bible," "The Cross—what it means to me," "The Cross—what it meant to Christ," "Tithing," "Stewardship," "Honesty," "The temptations of Jesus," "The children of the Bible," etc.

Take present day problems, and search out what the Bible discloses about "Divorce," "Wealth," "Poverty," "War," etc.

C. Make a Biographical Study.

Take the Great Characters of the Bible—Moses, Isaiah, Peter, Paul, etc., etc. Their preparation for life work, in heredity, in environment? Their teachers? Their temptations? Their errors and sins and what these cost them? Their accomplishments? The secret of their power?

Neglect not the more obscure Bible Characters, those of more humble estate like you and I, those little known as Dorcas, Mary Magdalene, Priscilla, Aquilla, Anna, Jude, Barnabas, Miriam, Abel, Titus, etc., etc. Follow questions similar to above paragraph.

D. Some like a Chapter Summary Method. In this method a set of questions are applied to each chapter, such as: 1. State a subject title for each chapter. 2. What is taught about Christ? 3. How is Christ glorified? 4. What disclosed character traits are worthy to be followed? 5. What disclosed character traits should be avoided? 6. What commandments to obey? 7. What promises to remember? 8. What can we learn about relationship to God of the persons in this chapter, and for ourselves?

E. Highly rewarding is a Study of the Book as a Whole. Take the easiest books first, as Genesis, Exodus, the Four Gospels, Acts. Read the book through first. Discover what one great message the writer is attempting to convey. If I put into my friend's letter a meaning he never intended, I am dishonest in my use of his writing. So here, we need to discern what really is the great message intended. What is the central theme of the entire book, and how do all its constituent parts contribute to this central theme. After this, such secondary questions as when, where, why, to whom, by whom was the book written may help to an understanding of the book. But a study about the book should not take the pre-eminence to a thorough study of the book itself.

F. A Most Thorough Method. Divide the notebook into five parallel columns. Taking the Bible portion after portion, observe and record 5 lines of thought.

a. What is here in the chosen portion?

Our Debt to Men of Learning

H. H. SMITH, SR.*

We should thank God for consecrated men of learning—from Moses to Millikan; from "Moses the man of God," who "was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," to Robert Millikan, highly trained, devout scientist. Such men are true servants of God.

While God can—and often does—employ humble instruments in His service, we know from history that, when available, He uses those of the best talent and training, as Moses, Isaiah, and Paul, for the most important tasks. We have but to turn to the Bible, to see how the Scriptures have been enriched by the contributions of such men as Moses, the lawgiver, Isaiah, the prophet, and Paul, the apostle—not to mention others.

Our debt to devout men of learning is very great. Bible translators, theologians, commentators, makers of Bible dictionaries and concordances—not to mention the authors of books, periodicals, and other writings—have brought us invaluable aid. Because of differences of opinion, these servants of God sometimes receive brickbats when they deserve bouquets.

We sometimes meet with those old people who speak disparagingly of higher education. You may hear them say: "If God calls a man to preach, he doesn't need a college education, all he needs is to have faith in an All-powerful God." They seem to be proud of their lack of education. When a man of this stripe went to John Wesley, an Oxford graduate, to inform him that "the Lord doesn't need all your learning," Wesley replied, "Neither does He need your ignorance."

William Carey's linguistic gifts contributed enormously to his success as a pioneer missionary in India. "Carey and his associates in India translated the Bible into several scores of tongues and put it within the reach of 300 millions of people. It is said that whenever a volume was completed, they laid it on the communion table and dedicated it to Christ."

It should be borne in mind that it was through devout scholars, used by the Holy Spirit, that we got our Bible, in the first place. Among the greatest of these consecrated scholars who helped to put the Bible into the hands of English-speaking people, was William Tyndale. Born in England the latter part of the fifteenth century, he was a distinguished Oxford graduate, a man of deep piety, "a good Greek scholar, and conversant with the Scriptures." The excellencies of Tyndale's translation have been the subject of comment down to the present day. It was his translation "so far as he had finished it, that became the basis of every subsequent revision."

When we think of the early translators of the Scriptures, as Tyndale and others, and the world's debt to them, we are reminded of the debt we owe today to those who have recently given us the Revised Standard Version of the Bible. The revisers who did this work are also devout scholars. This revision of the Bible was made because we have available now "a more accurate knowledge of the ancient Hebrew and Greek text of the Bible," and the committee of revisers also "made use of the resources for understanding the Scriptures which the discoveries of the past seventy-five years have made available." It is not surprising that some, because of misunderstanding, are opposed to the very thought of changing the wording of the Bible. But the revision was made, not for the sake of change, but in order to have a more accurate Bible. "The King James Version of the Bible was itself a revision of prior English translations," and there was strong opposition to this version when it first appeared.

Tyndale was only one among many devout scholars of the past who gave their lives for the cause of truth. His work of Bible translation led to his martyrdom. The only fault to be found with this man of God was that he was earnestly endeavoring to give the Bible to the people in their own language. But in the eyes of his misguided persecutors, this was considered a dangerous thing to do and a crime worthy of death.

How much the people of that day missed, because their misguided leaders saw in Tyndale a dangerous heretic, instead of a devout servant of God capable of guiding them in the footsteps of the Master!

FACING CIVIL DEFENSE

ELMER EDIGER*

Civil Defense is no longer an academic question, even in areas far from the coast. Furthermore the most recent approach in building up Civil Defense is to utilize natural disasters in which Mennonites are also much interested.

An official U. S. Government bulletin says "Civil defense can be defined as protection of the home front by civilians acting under civil authority to minimize casualties and war damage and preserve maximum civilian support of the war effort."

Through a regular chain of command from Washington each state, area director, city defense directors, and civil defense councils there is provision for a variety of services for which the public is to be mobilized. These services include the following: "welfare, rescue, fire, medical, public works" which seem to be of a general relief and welfare nature. In addition to these however there are also the services providing for "air raid wardens, plant protection, public warning and police."

Civil Defense depends largely upon city and state promotion though it is clearly organized on a national basis. In about fifty per cent of the states the Adjutant General of the state is head not only of the National Guard (state militia) but also Selective Service and state director of Civil Defense.

Each state has an Advisory Council on which are representatives of all major agencies for the concerns listed above, fire, health, state highway patrol, and the like. In one state Mennonites were asked to nominate a representative for the natural disaster position on the state Civil Defense Advisory Council.

Cities are ultimately responsible for Civil Defense promotion. In addition to a local disaster this includes a local advisory council parallel to that of the state council.

The subtle problem which nonresistant people face arises from the fact that Civil Defense is not purely military in its purposes, that is, about one-half of it concerns welfare service, the other, more of a specifically police nature. As a relief-giving people we would certainly want to do what we could to relieve the suffering. Thus as pacifists our relation to Civil Defense is no simple withdrawal of all relations with them if we are interested in positive service in case of attack or natural disaster.

Civil Defense demonstrations during peace time present some added problems. Although there may be legitimate reasons for practicing evacuation, the purpose of Civil Defense would also make clear that the Civil Defense demonstration might to a great extent be intended to "preserve maximum civilian support of the war effort." The kind of public and highly publicized demonstration held in the U. S. on June 15th would seem to be an essential part of war preparations. Not only do people learn to accept the inevitability of war but also with it the feeling that it is right that our country prepares militarily for it.

President Eisenhower's use of this Civil Defense demonstration to promote passage of the Reserve Training Act (UMT) from his secret hide-out place would tend to bear out this strong psychological propaganda aspect and purpose of civilian defense demonstration. It is also alarming to note that the president would use his powers as commander-in-chief to declare a state of martial law for a Civil Defenese demonstration.

In thinking of our own church approach my personal reaction at this time would be as follows:

1. In time of attack we would certainly want to relieve suffering if at all possible.
2. For the sake of conscience as well as witness we should work not as individuals but largely through church groups. Local civil defense councils are instructed to utilize all organizational resources and will therefore be interested in church groups organized to do relief and welfare work.
3. Mennonite Disaster Service organizations which have been set up for tornados, floods, etc., may also prove to be a very suitable organization for this purpose. Increasingly it is becoming recognized by National Guard, Red Cross, and other organizations. However, M.D.S. should continue to organize for service in natural disasters, rather than a theoretical war situation.
4. To local civil defense organizations we should make clear in ample time our readiness to help relieve suffering but also our conscience with regard to fulfilling military objectives as such. We should be ready to help in relief functions but because of its ultimate purpose we should not promote Civil Defense as an organization.
5. In case of plans for highly organized public civil defense demonstrations we should make clear our willingness to help in case of actual disaster but avoid assisting in public demonstrations which might tend to whip up psychological attitudes in support of war preparations.

Rufus Bowman, late president of the Bethany Biblical Seminary, once made the statement that because of the very general and inclusive nature of Civil Defense, and because of its partially good as well as bad purposes, he feared more people would lose their pacifist stand through Civil Defense than in any other governmental requirement or public pressure.

Are we as churches and as members ready to recommend to our members the following?

1. To strengthen Mennonite Disaster Service for natural disaster work.
2. To make clear to Civil Defense our readiness to co-operate as a church to relieve suffering but not to fulfill military objectives.

Interpreting the Messiahship

JESUS AND HIS MINISTRY by Wallace Eugene Rollins and Marion Benedict Rollins. 299 pages. Seabury, $4.00.

Following the feeding of the five thousand the multitude attempts to make Jesus their king. Jesus rejected this interpretation of His messiahship preferring the expression of it found in Peter's confession. From the time of the wilderness struggle to Gethsemane's travail Jesus was seeking the will of His Father. He plotted His course in the wilderness and forged His decision in many hours of prayer and through many encounters with people who expected a different type of Messiah.

On the mount of transfiguration His view of a Messiah's work was confirmed when the assurance came that "Moses and Elijah were with him, not against him." Here "His being was flooded with the radiant certainty of the Father's presence and approval."

It is thus that Wallace Rollins, veteran professor of the Episcopal Seminary of Virginia, and his wife interpret in their first book the ministry of our Lord and Savior. Among the increasing number of books being published on the life of Christ earnest students will find new stimulation in the Rollins' interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount, the miracles, and parables as well as in the fresh portrayal of the crucifixion and resurrection.

Accepting the Gospel records as factually trustworthy they make a restraint use of current studies in textual criticism. Scripture quotations are in the text of the Revised Standard Version and a scriptural index helps to locate passages treated in this thorough study.

Film Review

TEACH CHRIST NOW, color filmstrips, Leader's Guide, 33 1/3 record, 15 minutes. Free. Paul R. Shelly, Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio.

The setting for this film is the 23rd International Sunday School Convention, held at Cleveland, Ohio, in July this past summer. However, only a few of the frames show actual pictures of the convention.

The major part of the filmstrip presents the challenge that faces our Sunday schools to reach the growing spiritual needs in our communities. For example, in 1953 only 20.6 per cent of our population attended Sunday school. Only 24 per cent of the youth from 12 to 23 years of age and 14 per cent of the adults over 24 years attend Sunday school. The last part of the filmstrip suggests ways by which our Sunday schools can meet the needs of more of the people in our communities.

Our reviewing committee felt that this filmstrip would be helpful for both our Sunday school teachers and for parents. Harold Stassen, Ralph Sockman, and Charles B. Templeton, who appeared on the conference program are shown in the filmstrip, and a short excerpt from each of these messages is given.

Flashes of Thought

Something to Ponder

Walter Gering

I was frightened; what had I done now? Evidently something was wrong or else he would not have appeared. It was one of those times when we were anxious to get home. For over a week I had been away from home. It had been an enjoyable week of Christian fellowship. Each evening we had gathered in the house of God to worship; a passage of Scripture was chosen and unitedly we meditated from its riches. During the days there was ample opportunity for contact with friends of the church. There were short rides into the country surrounding the city, views of lasting memories. The visits in the homes were an inspiration. But now it was all over and I was anxious to get home. The greatest part of the journey was over; only these few miles by car upon a well traveled highway remained.

Then suddenly it happened; in the darkness of the evening a car appeared from the rear, slipped up even with us and a red flasher began to blink. A few moments later we were parked on the side of the road; we had been halted in our journey homeward.

What had I done now? I knew that I had not been speeding; what was the trouble? With a sigh of relief we discovered that it was only a minor matter—one of the rear lights was not burning. With the tremendous amount of travel on the highway and the constant danger of accidents it was only proper that all lights should be brightly burning. With a courteous, friendly admonition to get the light repaired we were soon on our way again.

It was just a minor incident. Or was it so minor? What if that dimmed light had caused an accident? What if it had meant the loss of life, some innocent traveler on the highway? Stranger things than that have happened. It could have been a serious matter.

A few days later another trip was made on the highway after dark. Parked along the road I made the round observing each light. It meant so little, yet could mean so much.

Then I thought of the words of Jesus: "Ye are the light of the world—let your light so shine that men may see. . . ." To be sure it is dangerous to travel the highways of our land with faulty, dimmed lights. But how much more so upon the spiritual highways of life. The Christians are the lights which the Son of God, the true Light, has set to illuminate the darkness of the world. What if their lights are dimmed, gone out? How much more concerned we ought to be about our spiritual lights.

LORD, LET ME SHINE FOR THEE WITH LIGHT UNDIMMED

Janjgir Union Bible School

Undergoing questioning. One day someone came to us and said, "They of the big family call you." We went to the large house indicated and received a friendly welcome. There were two young women, a young girl in her early teens, a very wiggly baby, and a toothless grandmother who looked old but was probably not even my age. A few neighbor women came in.

"Sing your song," said the lady of the house. We complied with her request and then took the opportunity to witness of our Lord. After some more songs we were ready to go.

A masculine voice, just outside the latticed wall that sheltered us, said, "May I ask a question?" I could not see him but I knew who he was because he had called on Mr. Duerksen at the tent. I replied from my side of the wall, "I do not take part in arguments with men." His reply comes, "I do not want to argue. I really want to know." I felt I should let him ask his questions.

"Very well, what is it you desire to know?" and he replied, "Tell me just what do you mean by worship and prayer. Do you conjure up a vision of god or do you perceive a great light?"

Breathing a prayer for guidance I replied, "God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." One thought led to another and I had great liberty in telling him how I recognized God's call and how He led me into this work and gave me the assurance that God in Christ was very real.

When we arose to go he thanked me for speaking to him. I urged him to read God's Word. To this he replied that he read no books on religion although he was literate. He said he depended entirely on the leading of the spirit. I assured him that if he was truly following God's Holy Spirit then this spirit would reveal Christ to him. He did not see his great need and I left him with a sorrowful heart. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." But if a man refuses to read?

PRESENT ENROLLMENT

According to the principal's report (Curt Claassen) the total enrollment is 47 students being divided as follows:

The Mennonite Church in India (Old Menn.)	4
Churches of Christ	16
Mission Bands	2
Evangelical Christian Church, Allahabad	2
General Conference Mennonite	21

From Sarguja State we have three students. The Jagdeeshpur area furnishes us with twelve of whom practically all have come on part scholarship and are earning the rest by working outside of school hours. Champa has three; Korba two, and Janjgir just one.

PRINCIPALS WHO HAVE SERVED

Rev. William F. Unruh started the work, Miss Martha Burkhalter, Rev. S. T. Moyer, Rev. J. R. Duerksen, Rev. C. A. Claassen—in office at present, Philip Lader—member of first class has been Bible School teacher for many years, and Rev. J. Walters, a teacher when school was organized, has been on the staff with the exception of a few years. He is past seventy years and still teaches some classes.

WHAT IT COSTS

According to the present budget the askings for a year are $3,800.00 which makes about $300.00 a month. This covers running expenses, teacher's salaries, and scholarships for a number of students.

Neighboring missions sending students provide for their scholarships and co-operating missions also send contributions toward general work. A couple may go to Bible School for nine months for $100.00. A young man or young woman may go for $60.00.

FUTURE AIMS AND PLANS

The present trend in many missions in India is to do away with mission paid evangelism. This work is to be the responsibility of the church. Some missions are emphasizing a program of adult literacy, village uplift, and agricultural work. With little prospect of qualifying for a "job" when Bible School is finished, will men and women care to take the training offered? Should the Bible School program be radically changed?

A committee consisting of four Indian church leaders and four missionaries met to discuss the matter and forwarded the following recommendation:

1. We do not feel that the church will be established by concentrating on a program where the Bible and its doctrines are subordinated to a program of social service. We maintain that Bible training must be the center of a growing church.
2. While we affirm our belief in the need of a school in which the Bible and allied subjects are major portions of the syllabus, at the same time we recommend that handicraft arts be included in the curriculum with the following objectives:
    a. To instill the idea of self help.
    b. To impart skills and techniques which may be a means of enhanced self-support upon finishing the course.

Closing lines—

The church in India needs trained leaders. Men who hear God's call to His service in the church will seek to know God's Word more fully. If you continue to help as in the past Janjgir Bible School stands ready to serve all who come.

This article was prepared by Mrs. J. R. Duerksen and Rev. W. F. Unruh.

Ordination on Mission Field

Below is a report of a rare occasion, namely the ordination to the eldership right on the mission field in Arizona. As I recall, such ordination has never occurred on the mission station at Bacabi (Hotevilla), Arizona. We are very glad that the chairman of our Board of Missions could go to officiate; and we are glad that Brother Herbert Peters' parents could go to Arizona all the way from Alberta for this important occasion.

John Thiessen
Executive Secretary
Board of Missions

The ordination services of Rev. Herbert Peters of Bacabi and Hotevilla, Arizona, for full missionary work was held at the Bacabi Indian Church on Sunday evening, October 30, 1955.

Rev. Albert Jantzen, superintendent of the mission field, presided. After congregational singing, led by Calvin Flickinger, Benno Toews, teacher at Oraibi school, gave the invocation. This was followed by several inspirational musical numbers by the Indian Christians.

A devotional message by Albert Jantzen, based on the theme "God," admonished his listeners that we worship and believe in a God, who is ever present, loving, kind, omniscient, good, everlasting, and merciful and that we should so live that, when our journey of life is over, we may be able to face Him and live with Him eternally.

Rev. P. A. Wedel, chairman of the Board of Missions, then brought the ordination message, on "The Great Commission," taking as his text Luke 24:46, 47, "And He said unto them . . . that repentance and remission of sins should be preached . . . unto all nations."

He stressed first, in his message, that the command is a personal one, that every Christian is, in a sense, a missionary, and should therefore be willing to invest his time, talent, money, and life to help bring the gospel to all nations.

Secondly—the command for missions is a glorious one. We have a wonderful message to bring, of the glad tidings of pardon from sin and power from God, the promise of the Father and the message of eternal life. It is a glorious message, because Christ gave it to His followers and through it souls are saved.

He called on brother and sister Peters to come to the platform, where he reminded them again of the sacred assignment the Lord has given them in the work among the Indians, that they should be prompted by love to preach the glad tidings to undying souls.

The true missionary must see a world of sin and multitudes still in darkness, and must have compassion for these souls.

He must, also, have a true view of the work. He will not always be received with open arms but Jesus said, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets that were before you."

The Indian Christians were admonished to help the missionary by praying for him, and by attending church faithfully, for the missionary means much to the Indians in the trials of life.

Rev. P. A. Wedel, then performed the ordination services, assisted in the laying on of hands by Albert Jantzen and Benno Toews.

Rev. Peters was exhorted, as a sincere missionary, to preach the word, administer the Holy Sacrament and win souls.

Mrs. Peters then gave her testimony by answering questions pertaining to the sharing, with her husband, of the concerns and joys of a faithful missionary.

After the closing prayer by Rev. Wedel, a number by a men's chorus was followed by the benediction by Rev. Wedel.

A fellowship meeting was enjoyed by all after the services.

Thus ended a most spiritual and memorable event in the Bacabi Indian Church. May the Lord bless the memory of this event for years to come.

Rev. Peters, who comes from Alberta, Canada, had the pleasure of having his parents, a brother-in-law and his wife present for the ordination.

How About It?

It has been said that every church is a mission outpost in an alien and lost world. How does the "mission outpost" you belong to rate on the following points?

1. Does our congregation work as though its primary aim was to reach out and make Christ known in this community and throughout the world?
2. Have our church officers held an evaluation retreat to examine our whole church life from the point of view of the fulfillment of our mission?
3. What percentage of the congregational budget is used—5 to 25 to 50 per cent—for reaching out to others?
4. Has our worship of God been confirmed to music, liturgy, prayer, and the Sunday service? Or, have we sought a deeper fulfillment in supporting a wider outreach?
5. Does our congregation have active groups that study and work on community problems and world problems?
6. Is our church school showing children by example that the church is sent to reach out?
7. Is the young people's society actively influencing school and social life? How many persons have we recruited from our church for full time mission work?

A Brethren work camp in a big city's slum turns hovels into model homes and teaches children in its program of—

Sound Houses and Sound Children

EVE CAMERON*

Any hot summer evening brings the population of Baltimore out on its doorsteps, from grandmother to babe in arms.

But the collection of people who sat on the steps of 1038 North Broadway last summer was unusual because its variations were not just those of age. Most would be classified as young adults, but their differences lay in their pasts and in their futures: farmers, secretaries, teachers, students, salesclerks. Two of the group were regular Brethren Voluntary Service workers who were working in the Baltimore project for a whole year; three were assigned here for their alternative service; one was the wife of a 1-W and the other six were work campers who had paid for the privilege of being there.

But whatever the method by which the steps were reached, all twelve seated on them were inspired by the ideal of trying to put Christian love into practice.

The Baltimore project, originally established in conjunction with the Baltimore plan of slum rehabilitation, accomplished this in a number of ways. An important part of the work is connected with better housing. When the unit was first established in 1951 it rehabilitated a veritable hovel of a house, not only as an example of what can be done to improve old dwellings, but also as a center for people to come to with problems.

Some of these are physical—an elderly widow needs to have her cellar concreted or the busy father of a large family needs help with his plastering. Work campers' muscles solve problems like these.

Others are referral cases. People need legal aid in dealing with contractors or landlords, or need to be told about the help obtainable from Public Welfare. Some who come are in such desperate straits that they need groceries or clothing immediately without waiting for the city red tape to unwind.

In making one house livable the work campers dug a seven-foot-deep trench for the plumbing, tore down partitions, built a chimney, scraped wallpaper, erected a fence, and prepared the cellar for concreting.

Sound houses are not the complete answer to all the problems of a city's slum. Building sound children matters, too. The campers helped supervise playground in both east and west Baltimore. A daily street shower was one of the most popular recreational activities in the record July heat.

Campers also worked closely with the summer program of the Knox Presbyterian Church as an obvious way of helping people. On the mornings of three weeks, five of the campers screwed up their courage to face rapidly increasingly hordes of children at Bible school, hoping to be able to instill some idea of Christ's love, even if the recreational aspect of the school seemed more popular among the students than the educational.

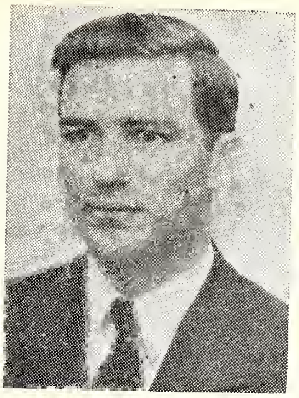
The church also ran two two-week sessions of day camps at one of Baltimore's attractive parks. Seven hours daily of outdoor life made a real change in both children and leaders.

Altogether, the summer was a rich and varied one. It left a physical imprint on several homes in Baltimore; we hope that the cheerful service made some kind of impact on the two hundred children and adults with whom the campers came in contact.

Certainly none could leave with quite the same attitudes with which he came. Sweat, laughter, and prayer are great dissolvers of barriers of all sorts; they open many windows for the soul.

Most of us have rather vivid recollections of revival meetings when some fiery evangelist would preach "fearlessly" against sin. In thunderous tones he talked about drinking and gambling, card-playing, and profanity and all the sins of the flesh. He would tell about the terrible hell that such sinners were going to, and he would use high pressure methods to get the sinners to "hit the sawdust trail." Occasionally some sinner would be converted with blessed results, but usually such a revival left the church and community worse off than before.

Meet the Presidents



Carl D. Thieszen
Bethel College SCF

President of the Student Christian Fellowship of Bethel College, N. Newton, Kansas, is Carl D. Thieszen, a junior majoring in social science. Carl is a member of the Bethesda Mennonite Church of Henderson, Nebraska, and has served over two years in Voluntary Service at Wiltwyck School for Boys in Esopus, New York.

The SCF is the Bethel student religious organization which with its three commissions promotes Christian growth and service on the campus. Christian Life Week, a student exchange program, a weekly chapel program, and a Voluntary Service emphasis program are some of their many activities.

Fellow workers with Carl in the SCF cabinet are Bobby Standingwater, Butler, Oklahoma, who serves as vice-president; Lenore Pankratz, Mountain Lake, Minnesota, secretary; and Grace Jantzen, Oraibi, Arizona, treasurer. A junior, majoring in theology, Bobby is a member of the Hammon Mennonite Church in Oklahoma. Lenore has spent her last two summers working in Voluntary Service in Chicago. She is a member of Mountain Lake's Bethel Church. Grace is a nursing student and belongs to the Deer Creek Mennonite Church in Oklahoma.

A TILTED WISH

"I wish I were a woman."

These are words that I never expect to hear from the lips of a man. In fact they are words that womanly vocal chords seldom set in vibration. For this is a man's world, and as everyone knows, all is seen through masculine eyes. Shouts of joy ring just a little louder when a boy is born. But some smiles are forced after the birth of a girl.

Little wonder then that five-year-old Kathy says, "I wish I were a boy."

She says this not only because she finds her tree climbing propensities curbed, but because she notes her brother's apparent wider array of opportunities for self-expression. At the same time she breathes in the same subtle suggestion conveyed even by other women that to be female is to be second class.

A woman who says without equivocation, "I'm glad God made me a woman," may even be viewed by some of her sisters as possessed of a spongy skull structure if she persists in this affirmation after the men are out of earshot. And all psychologists, amateur especially, would suspect any man who ventured to breathe, "It might be better to be a woman," of being slightly unbalanced.

But believing that a change in point of view is always helpful, even if it is only momentary, I tilt my personality and say, "I wish I were a woman." (My friends who are sophisticates in psychoanalysis will please turn their faces to the wall.)

I wish I were a woman not as a desperate measure to understand their reputed erractic behavior. I don't believe that women are more eccentric than any other sex, for whimsy cannot be confined to a gender.

I wish I were a woman because women are the front line explorers and adventurers of the future. We stand as Stone Age people on the frontier of a spiritual universe that remains uncharted. The sphere of living out the fulness of the new life in Christ is as totally unexplored as was the American continent in 1491.

Of course, men and women together will explore this great new life. But women will be in the vanguard of the expeditionary force that will discover new truths in the Christian faith.

Thus might I be among the first to see new vistas of what it means to find life in loosing life. Self-seeking and the desire for glory so easily undermine strength. Thus the search for worldly self-expression erodes a man's soul so that he is insensitive to the kind of life in which Christ inverted all so called manly values.

It is true that women rebel at playing a role in life that viewed in masculine terms is called "second fiddle." But women who accept their womanhood do not have the same hurdle to overcome that men face when they confront the Christian way. A compulsion toward self-denial, if there be such a thing, seems more native to a woman than to a man, and thus the realness of the Christian life roots more quickly in her life.

If we can attribute sex to certain patterns of personality, the desire for reward looks more masculine than feminine. Women more easily discover that the worth of life is not measured in the quantity or quality of rewards. It is in work for which no honor or glory is received that we find the real kernel of life bared of its husks.

While some women receive accolades on Mother's Day, no one can consider these gilded sentiments even partially compensatory for a mother's large sacrificial services. And they are delusive exercises, for self-denying devotion is not given to buy rewards, but because it is the stuff of life.

Sacrifice, service, and selfishness are the issues of the Christian life. They are the nations of the continent that Christians have long heard about but left unexplored. Women will be the first explorers to catch sight of the new land, though we can all come upon these new spiritual discoveries.

Certainly, if you can't be a woman, it's all right to be a man. The truths of life will come to you a little slower, but they will come.

MEET THE PRESIDENTS

View Hospital, personal services for the guests of the Old People's Home, and a Bible and craft program for children in a Wichita mission center.

Representing the Peace and World Order Commission are its president, Wilfred Unruh, Newton; and a representative, Vernon Quiring, Frazer, Montana. Wilfred has spent over two years in Paraguay in VS and is now majoring in social science. He is a member of the Tabor Mennonite Church of Newton. Vernon is majoring in industrial arts.

Included in this commission's activities are programs on international relations, peace convictions and action, peace education, peace contests, and plays. They also sponsor a tri-college peace conference which includes Friends University and McPherson College as well as participating in the conference of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges.

For the past several years the total SCF has sponsored a student exchange program with a school in Wuppertal, Germany. Together the faculty and student body raise a fund to bring to Bethel a student from Wuppertal. In turn one of the Bethel students goes to Germany to study. Now working on next year's $800.00 fund for this program the SCF has already raised $350.00.

Our Schools

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

On Monday, November 14, our newly formed male octet under the direction of George Wiebe made its first visit. They brought a program to the young people at Altona. Members of the octet are Bill Wiebe, Abbotsford, B. C.; Jake Heinrichs, Winkler, Manitoba; Dave Braun, Didsbury, Alberta; Vernon Neufeld, Didsbury, Alberta; Menno Epp, Mt. Lehman, B. C.; Donald Krause, Abbotsford, B. C.; Victor Fast, Steinbach, Manitoba; and Peter Letkeman, Waldheim, Sask. The pianist was Irma Wiens of Hershel, Sask. Two messages were given, the one in German by Menno Epp and the other in English by Peter Letkeman.

An evening enjoyed by all was Tuesday evening, November 15. The Music Society put on a recital consisting of local and outside talent. Included in the local talent were solos sung by Bill Wiebe and Victor Fast, a duet by Henry Olfert and Vernon Neufeld, a number by the girls' choir led by Katie Bergen and a piano solo by Mrs. Wiebe. The main feature of the program was Franz Seidler, a professional clarinet prayer.

As November 11 was a school holiday, the students on that day were as busy or busier than usual, taking advantage of the opportunity to work on their term papers.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

To improve school practices and teaching methods instructors in some schools have at times been sent to visit classrooms on other campuses, but something less common took place the other week when the Board of Directors of Freeman Junior College visited three schools in Kansas. Accompanied by President Ronald von Riesen and Professor John Ewert they spent Monday on the campus of Hesston Junior College at Hesston, Kansas, where President von Riesen served as chapel speaker. Besides touring the campus the group had two meetings with the administrative staff of Hesston at which common problems and methods of administration and procedure were discussed. Monday evening was spent on the Bethel College campus at North Newton, Kansas, where they attended the Menno Simons dinner and a Menno Simons lecture by Dr. Robert Kreider, Dean of Bluffton College of Bluffton, Ohio. After that they met with the Bethel administrative staff and the president of the Bethel Directors to discuss mutual concerns and matters pertaining to the harmonious relationships among Conference schools. Tuesday forenoon was spent on the campus of Tabor College of Hillsboro, Kansas. President Frank Peters conducted them on a campus tour and here too problems common to our Mennonite educational institutions were discussed. The Freeman group enjoyed the generous hospitality of the three sister schools and found the exchange of methods and ideas very stimulating.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

The prayer meeting on Nov. 16 was led by Leo Driedger who called our attention to Joseph in the Gospel records and characterized him as a man to whom God could speak. The fitting application was that we too should be men to whom God can speak.

On Nov. 19, Dr. S. F. Pannabecker attended a Mission Conference held at the Evangelical Theological Seminary in Naperville, Illinois.

The Seminary Women's Fellowship had a small shower for the Jakob Duerksen's in which they presented to them articles of clothing and books. Mrs. Curtis Janzen reported on her work in Europe under the MCC and showed slides of the work.

Dr. S. F. Pannabecker officiated at the wedding held at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church Nov. 14, when Lothar Penner and Hannelore Jörger were united in holy matrimony. A small reception was planned for them by the students. Cornelius Dyck gave a brief German message and Mrs. Dyck sang several German songs.

The Sunday school teachers of the Woodlawn Mennonite Church, in which many of the students are teaching, gathered at the church on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 13, to receive assignments for visitation that afternoon. Many of the homes of the children were visited during the afternoon.

Is this in the right direction? If you have further concerns and thinking write to your conference office or the MCC. This will be helpful to conference committees entrusted with making recommendations in Civil Defense.

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kan.: Our church had Holy Communion on Oct. 2. Christian service students of Bethel College were in charge of junior church on Communion Sunday. Because of late rains and pressing farm work that followed, not as many as would have liked were able to attend Western District Conference. Several family reunions were held in our church parlors during the month of October. The funeral service for Mrs. H. J. Franz was held Oct. 5. Juniors have again brought Christmas gifts for a mission station. This year they went to Montana. Relief canning results: 835 cans beef, 82 cans lard, and 108 cans broth. —Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: The first Thursday in November the Ladies' Aid packed 110 pounds of clothing for the MCC relief, and 50 pounds for Red Cross. A new church attendance record board has been donated to the church. We thank the contributors. We were very much blessed during a week of special meetings with Jacob Friesen in our midst. The general theme of his messages was, "The Life Worth Living," John 10:10, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Special music was provided each evening. Brother Friesen had something special for the children each evening that was very much enjoyed. The Home Builders Class enjoyed a family night and supper together in the church basement the second Sunday in November. With the sermon text, "This Do in Remembrance of Me," resounding in the hearts of the hearers, Holy Communion was reflectively and reverently observed on Sunday morning, Oct. 30. Also that morning, our pastor, Edward Duerksen, related many impressions and experiences he gleaned and underwent while on his two week mission tour through Indian reservations and our Northern District Conference Mennonite churches in Northern Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana. Accompanying him on the trip was Arnold Nickel of Henderson, Neb. On Sunday evening, Oct. 30, our Christian Endeavor program was presented by G. S. Warkentin and the Carson Men's Chorus from the Carson Mennonite Brethren Church of Delft. Rev. Warkentin spoke on the unlovely qualities of sin and discord, while the chorus, by way of contrast, sounded forth aesthetic tones of virtue and concord. This 20-voice chorus approached the biblical principle of balance through the singing of subjective and objective church music. In addition, the vibra-harp was played, the strains of which indeed were conducive to Christian worship. On Sunday evening, Nov. 6, souvenirs and colored slides of Central Province, India, were shown by missionary nurse Elizabeth Penner of the International Christian Leprosy Mission. Today mission work in India is not only spiritual, but in reality it is a combination of many factors such as social, humanitarian, cultural, economic, etc. We were instructed to show our faith by word and deed.—Willis Linscheid, Corr.

Nov. 3, the women spent the day sewing for relief.—Mrs. L. A. Amstutz, Corr.

Who Have Wills?

"About 45,000 professional men and women were asked in a survey conducted by Teachers College, Columbia University, if they had made a will. Almost half, 22,000, said they had not.

"While lawyers made the best showing of any professional group answering the questionnaire, about one-fourth had to admit that they had made no will. Pharmacists ranked highest among the negligent ones, but teachers and journalists were only slightly more active in having their intentions on record.

"The committee conducting the survey believes that there is a large area of ignorance in regard to the economy and desirability of leaving a will. Some who answered questionnaires suggested that they feared high legal fees. This misconception can easily lead to much greater legal fees that will reduce an estate at settlement time." —Property

Mennonites are admittedly a thrifty, careful people. But we wonder what their rating would be if they were canvassed with such a questionnaire. Contact the Conference Treasurer about making a will. It's an excellent, simple, and economical way to give something of your estate to the Conference.

Special Mail Campaign

Near the end of November the total work of the General Conference Mennonite Church was in special need. Officers of the Conference faced the fact that unless there was an outpouring of gifts in December which would be much larger than giving in past years all Conference causes would be seriously hindered. This would mean a setback for the evangelistic program of the Conference which includes missions, relief, education, and many other ways of proclaiming the gospel.

Believing that members of the General Conference would respond to the need if informed, a letter was sent by Olin A. Krehbiel, president of the General Conference Mennonite Church to members in Canada and the United States. Included with the letter was a folder describing the expanding work of the Conference.

Each member of the General Conference was encouraged to give a special year end gift for the total work of the General Conference which would then be divided where needed most. The privilege was given to designate gifts if donors so desired.

These gifts were to be called "Special December Gifts." Special offering envelopes were sent with each letter.

This special mail campaign is intended to help congregations respond for the urgent need of the General Conference program. Because the time was short individuals were contacted directly through letters. However, gifts are to be given through congregations wherever possible. In this way each congregation will receive credit for the gifts given by its members.

Only in cases where it is inconvenient for anyone to give through their congregation are persons encouraged to send their gifts direct to the Central Offices of the General Conference Mennonite Church which are at 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

Special materials and letters will be sent to pastors and treasurers of General Conference congregations encouraging them to give their assistance to this program.

In his letter to the members of the General Conference, President Krehbiel said:

"We face the very real danger of failing to raise enough funds for the support of our General Conference program in all of its phases.

"What does this mean? It means some soul will not hear the gospel. It means some war sufferer in Asia, Palestine, or Europe cannot be helped physically and spiritually. It means some children will not get Bible instruction materials. It means we will fail the hundreds of workers which our Mennonite congregations have sent into Christ's service. It means a cut back in next year's program—and this in prosperous times. It means a reproof of the faith of our boards in trying to carry out the commands of Christ.

"We do not believe that this is God's will, nor do we believe that it is your desire that we slow down our work of evangelism for needy souls. The conviction has been growing that our Lord Jesus Christ wants us to expand our total mission of ministering to people in need of Christ all over the world. We feel very few have given sacrificially for the cause of Christ who died for us. Communists, other religionists and cultists often put us to shame when it comes to making a sacrifice.

"Our obligations will be fulfilled if many of our members will give $10, $25, or more for the total Conference ministry. Normally we would suggest that you designate your gifts for one or more of our boards, but since the time is short and the need is great in all departments, we suggest that you give your gift for the support of the total Conference ministry where needed most.

"Make this a matter of prayer and ask the Lord what He would have you do."

The folder which was mailed with this letter detailed the ministry of the General Conference in terms of the number of workers that take part in it. The total approaches one thousand of those who proclaim the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ using all the resources of Christian witnessing.

Mention is made of the fact that the Conference's growing program of evangelism was born out of the zeal of the early General Conference congregations to respond to the Great Commission. As this work was begun through the prayers and consecrated efforts of the people of the General Conference it can continue only as it is supported by them.

The folder further states: "With over 90 per cent of the year gone we have less than 70 per cent of the funds needed to fulfill our Conference commitments. To support fully our total program an average of $8.00 per member is needed during December. Some will not be able to give this much, but others will be able to give larger amounts."

INDEX TO VOLUME 70

The Index to articles appearing in this year's Mennonites (1955) will be found in the first issue of the New Year, January 3. Such index ordinarily would be given in the last issue of the year, but since the last issue will be omitted (Christmas week), and since the December 20 issue will be the logical Christmas number, it was thought best to run the Index number as the first issue of the new year.

THE SIXTH MENNONITE WORLD CONFERENCE

August 10-16, 1957

The Sixth World Conference will be held in Karlsruhe, Germany, August 10-16, 1957, the Preparatory Committee has announced. This Commission, created at the last World Conference (Basel, 1952), will complete final plans and details at their next meeting at Thomashof, Germany, June 19, 20, 1956. The Commission is composed of eleven members appointed by the conferences desiring to participate. The North American members are: Olin A. Krehbiel, Berne, Indiana; H. S. Bender, Goshen, Indiana; and H. H. Janzen, Winnipeg, Can.

The large Convention Hall at Karlsruhe, together with other adjacent large buildings, all located at the edge of a large park not far from the main railway station offer a good and convenient location for the conference, with adequate meeting rooms and dining facilities.

The Conference Theme will be "The Gospel of Jesus Christ in the World." The text for the conference sermon will be Romans 1:16. The full announcement of topics and speakers cannot be made until after the next meeting of the Preparatory Commission in June, 1956.

New for this conference is the provision for sectional meetings. Five sections are planned: Missions, Peace, Youth, Women's Work, and Christian Education.

The number of delegates and manner of choice is left to the conferences to decide as they see fit. It is expected that the total number will be around 150-200. In addition to delegates it is expected that a large number of visitors will attend. North American delegates wishing to use steamer passage should make reservations 12-18 months in advance. Applications for such passage may be made through the Menno Travel Service, Akron, Pa.

The conference program proper will begin Sunday morning, August 11, with a conference sermon, followed by afternoon and evening addresses. The weekday program will continue daily, morning, afternoon, and evening, except Thursday and Friday afternoons, when historic and scenic excursions into the Palatinate and the Black Forest will take place. Tours through Europe, or the Holy Land, will be available before or after the conference through Menno Travel Service.

The main language at the conference will be German, with translation service in French and English through the use of IBM simultaneous translation system as was done at Basel. The Commission has decided to recommend that a conference message be again issued by the conference.

The Commission requests the support and prayers of the entire brotherhood throughout the world. The Sixth World Conference can, by God's grace and brotherly co-operation, again prove to be a blessing for our congregations in many lands.

CHRISTMAS FOR CHRIST

In one type of Christmas letter stickers, at one side is a view of Joseph and Mary with the Christ child and at the other edge the whiskey bottle and glasses. The latter is crossed out with a big "X" and in the center of the stamp are the words "Christmas with Christ."

This seems to be a general movement both among churches and among Christian laymen and businessmen. It has become so evident that many are disgracing the day of the birth of our Lord by drinking parties that there has been a strong reaction on the part of many. More suitable ways of celebrating Christmas are being strongly advocated.

But to the Christian there is also danger of not keeping Christmas for Christ, but merely as an occasion of visitation and feasting. Not that we should not rejoice in the privilege of joining in family units, but that in all such gatherings we may not neglect to invite and entertain the One in whose honor the day is set aside. Let first honor and respect be paid to Him and then, in His Name, the other joyous occasions may be rightly observed. But Christmas should be for Christ.

THE FINAL SPRINT

In a race the outcome is uncertain until after the final sprint brings the contestants across the line. The final outcome of our Conference finances is also uncertain until after the final sprint through November and December. As of November 1, the results were not too encouraging, as we were still far short of our budget and goal.

In many churches their Harvest Festival special days come in the month of November, at which time surprisingly large offerings may be received. In one such special day where the editor was privileged to worship recently, the total offering for Conference causes for the day amounted to over ten thousand dollars. With such offerings throughout the Conference there would still be hope of raising our budget.

But time is running out. Only a few weeks remain, with many people's interests now almost wholly occupied with the Christmas season. However, we could sing the Christmas hymns with much better spirit if we had met our obligation to His work. The joy and gladness of the Thanksgiving and Christmas season should somehow be attached to our pocketbooks, so that we praise by our means as well as by our mouth.

Can we reach our goal with a final sprint? It is worth making a heroic try.

SEEING BRINGS ENTHUSIASM

The old saying, "Seeing is believing," contains a great truth. Such seeing also often brings enthusiasm. In the article in this issue of a layman's visit to the mission fields around the world we note how such enthusiasm can be kindled by seeing at firsthand just what is being done and the results of mission work. To all who have the opportunity to visit the work of missions at home or abroad, such opportunity should be taken and the effects of the gospel studied at firsthand. Many are surprised at what the Lord has done when given a chance through His servants dedicated to bringing the gospel to needy souls.

Not many may be able to visit mission stations on the other side of the world. More could visit the work done in our home fields and in our cities. To see what effect the gospel has in lives is to become enthusiastic about such work.

The next best thing to an actual visit is a careful study of the reports and information available. To take time to read and study about our work, to attend thoughtfully whatever lectures and information, usually with pictures, may be given in our churches in a year's time is to gain a new insight into the work and its effect in the lives of men.

Mission work is our work; it is the high purpose of the church. As members of that church we should be fully informed in this work. Not only informed to the extent of having a good knowledge, but informed to the degree where we delight in having a share in this work and by our financial means and spiritual support, do what we can to make real Christ's command to make His Gospel known to every creature.

ANCIENT SCROLLS

Much has been made recently of the "Dead Sea Scrolls," which appear to be the oldest manuscripts we have on record. The estimate of their exact date varies, but it is generally agreed that they date some years—perhaps a great many—before the time of Christ. They are of value in further acquainting us with the customs and languages in that long silent period between the Old and New Testament.

The manner in which they were found is of interest. An Arab herdsman, looking for some lost goats, discovered a cave near the northwest corner of the Dead Sea in 1947. In this cave were found ancient jars sealed up, and on opening them were found to contain rolls of manuscripts which had been deposited there since long before the time of Christ. The interest aroused at that time has been growing all over the world as the contents of these scrolls is becoming known. Many students are still at work on them trying to unfold them without too much injury and patching portions together for further careful study. There are portions of the Old Testament far older than any we have hitherto known, as well as other interesting accounts and records.

One of the interesting side lights thrown on pre-Christian days is concerning the little-known sect called "Essenes." In these scrolls we find some parallel terms and ideas which appear in the New Testament and early Christian writings. These ancient records fill a long gap in the Roman period of history in the Holy Land. More will be heard about these "Dead Sea Scrolls" and their significance.

A Layman's Observation of Mennonite Missions

HARRY M. DETWILER

(Mr. Detwiler, banker of Souderton, Pa., and member of the Board of Christian Service, was in the party with Rev. and Mrs. Andrew R. Shelly in the recent world tour of missions. Ed.)

In Matthew 28:19-20 we have the Great Commission, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

After traveling 40,000 miles in our tour around the world, there is no doubt about it that missions take on a different emphasis in our thinking and entire outlook on life. After five months of traveling with the major emphasis on reviewing and observing the mission work of our own church as well as other groups, the Great Commission really means so much that words fail me in properly giving my impression.

In traveling through the mission fields of Japan, Formosa, Hong Kong, India, Egypt, Ethiopia, Belgian Congo, and Liberia, we visited a large group of missionaries, mainly General Conference Mennonites, Old Mennonites, Presbyterian, Mennonite Brethren, as well as Baptist, Methodist, Reformed, and Lutherans. One of the great and lasting impressions I personally received was the open door for the presentation of the gospel. However, when we visited Runnies Mill Refugee Camp outside of Hong Kong we were within seven miles of the Communist lines of China. It has been estimated by A. R. Shelly there were one billion souls or more in the various fields we visited.

The work in Japan

Our first stop of mission interest was in Japan where it appears they are very much interested in the gospel of Christ. There are 88 million people in Japan with an increase of one million per year. Japan is 99 per cent literate while in the United States we are only 95 per cent literate. Due to the high rate of literacy and the economic status of Japan, mission work is not an easy work. We have a wonderful group of missionaries here in Japan deeply consecrated to the privilege of bringing Christ to Japan. As we visited the atom bombed city of Hiroshima where 260,000 souls died or were burned to death, and we looked at this destroyed city, I could not help but ask myself, "Are we a Christian nation?" "Are we teaching the gospel of peace in our churches?"

The Island of Formosa

Our next great challenge in our mission fields was in Formosa where the MCC has labored under Glenn Graber, among the five million refugees from China Mainland, and we now have a number of missionaries doing a remarkable work in bringing the gospel. The hospital work under Dr. Brown is not only a healing ministry but a deeply spiritual work among the Formosan people. From Taipei we flew to Hong Kong where we visited the Lutheran work among the refugees at Runnies Mill.

Our work in India

On December 11 we left Hong Kong for the main objective of my tour which was the visit to our friend and brother, Samuel T. Moyer and Mrs. Moyer. As we greeted Brother Moyer at the Calcutta airport we were made to realize the wonderful way in which God has led our paths after looking forward to this tour for 35 years. As we had our first glimpse of the sacred cows of India all over the streets and pavements of the city and the communist parade on the streets of Calcutta on a Sunday evening, we began to realize what a great challenge our missionaries have in bringing the gospel to the 750,000 in our area in India. After leaving Calcutta by rail we went to Raipur where we were met by Old Mennonite missionaries from Souderton, Pa., Miss Blanche Sell and Miss Marie Moyer, who took us to Dhamtari where the mission has a hospital, school, churches, as well as a leper hospital. We returned to Raipur where we started on our 80 mile journey by jeep to Jagdeeshpur. The remarkable work done by our missionaries in the Jansen Memorial School and hospital and the visit to the ten or twelve native Indian churches were a great inspiration and gave me a real insight into the real work of bringing Christ to the thousands of Indians in this area. The missionaries not only bring the gospel to the people of India but they give them vocational training in printing, weaving, agriculture, bookkeeping, typing, needlework, and cooking. We spent two weeks in the Jagdeeshpur area and then we went by rail to Champa where our good Eastern District Conference representatives, Dr. Harvey and Dr. Ella Bauman, Kenneth and Mary Bauman and many others from all sections of our church are working. One of the great impressions I received was the cordial and Christ-like reception always given us by the Indian Christians and the fact that the Indian Christians give a portion of their substance when they come to church although they have so little substance. Another unforgettable impression in India was the Communion service with the Indian brethren and sisters. To partake with them in this sacred service was perhaps one of the spiritual highlights of this tour.

The Champa Leper Hospital in charge of Dr. Arthur Thiessen and Rev. Aron Janzen as administrator presents a real challenge. To see the medical and spiritual work being done for the lepers all over the world makes us realize as never before the words of Scripture, Lamentations 1:12, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?"

At Janjgir it was very inspiring to see the work being done at the Anna C. Funk Memorial School. She was possibly the first Eastern District Conference missionary to give her life while in the foreign mission service. At Janjgir Rev. Duerksen arranged a tea to which the business and professional men of the Janjgir area were invited, and it was most interesting to converse with these men on religious and business topics, as well as, peace principles of the Mennonite church. The visit to Yeotmal where Dr. Frank Kline is the president of Union Biblical Seminary was most impressive as here they are educating native Indian Christians to become teachers, pastors, and evangelists of the Indian Church. Martha Burkhalter is the G. C. teacher on the faculty and Rev. Weyburn Groff and wife represent the Old Mennonite Church on the staff.

The Holy Land

A wonderful impression came to me as we visited at the biblical city of Baalbeck, as well as, Palestine, and all of the Holy Land: The great work done by MCC in relief work among a part of the 500,000 refugees in the Arab kingdom of Jordan. Then both Cairo, Egypt, and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, present a real challenge for consecrated work in preaching the gospel to those who have never heard the good news.

The "Dark Continent"

Our next stop was crossing the equator in Africa where we stopped at Nairobi in the Kenya area where the Mau Maus are very active and one of the six objectives of the Mau Maus are to destroy Christianity and drive out all foreigners which necessarily makes the missionaries be on the lookout for attacks. I now come to our final field of missionary enterprise of our General Conference and that is the Belgian Congo where the work of bringing the gospel to these benighted people is indeed challenging when we go to their large churches on Sunday and find over 100 natives singing praises and giving testimony through their pastors and evangelists and we go to chapel service at 6:30 a.m. and find 500 to 600 worshipers there by 7 a.m. and all through the Congo we find 18,000 Christians and possibly 12,000 more who are wanting to accept Christ as their personal Savior. The hospital work at Mukedi under Dr. Merle Schwartz was deeply moving, as well as our other hospital work.

General Impressions

In conclusion, I venture to say if all of our 40,000 members of the General Conference could see the oneness in Christ Jesus of all of our missionaries and the great healing ministry of all your mission hospitals, our mission budgets would not be lagging behind as they are doing in our report as of October 31 when only 62 per cent of our mission budget has been paid into the treasury. If we but could see the devotion and consecration of all of our missionaries throughout the world I am sure our gifts would be doubled and our prayers would so motivate and uplift the work that the message of Salvation would be of still greater power than it is now. Many of our young people would gladly dedicate themselves to this great work of bringing Christ to the ends of the world. In all this world tour of missions I was often made to ponder on the impact of the gospel on the hearts and lives of the various peoples, but when I think of Hodiaki and Shemida San in Japan, Samuel Stephens and family in India, and Dr. Mathai in India, as well as others in Formosa, Hong Kong, and Africa, whose names I do not remember I am assured that the great emphasis is not to just make another enrolled church member but to really bring them to a saving knowledge of Christ Jesus and that is the mission of the Church. What we need is more consecrated and Christ-like followers of the Risen Christ in our churches who will pray more, give more, and influence others to give themselves unreservedly in this great cause.

Bluffton Cutting Room Completes Twelve Years

Twelve years of Voluntary Service in a General Conference operated Cutting Room in Bluffton, Ohio, came to a close this summer when the equipment of the Cutting Room was turned over to five churches of another Mennonite conference.

The Cutting Room was opened in a room at Bluffton College in 1943 as a peace testimony on the part of a number of mothers in four General Conference churches in the Bluffton area, while their boys were in CPS camps. The original purpose was to cut garments for relief during the war years. However, operations continued after the war.

During these twelve years the Cutting Room has handled and cut up 143,000 yards of goods into garments, and sold many thousands of yards in bolts of material that have been sent across as yard goods. Since the material was bought in large quantities and often out of season patterns, material was often purchased below wholesale prices. Women's societies in surrounding areas have saved about $20,000 by purchasing their materials through the Bluffton Cutting Room.

In the first few years about $2,400 was borrowed from the Relief Board of the General Conference to purchase necessary equipment and materials, but in later years the Cutting Room was entirely on its own. The financial report for the entire twelve years reveals a turnover of $64,706.11. Of this amount $1,000 was a direct contribution to the Board of Christian Service for relief.

The Cutting Room was dissolved when the room in the college could no longer be made available. In turning the Cutting Room over to another group, Mrs. J. S. Schultz, who has been the supervisor for the full twelve years, states, "As we let it go into other hands we pray that they will experience the same spirit of their cutting room that we have experienced here and that they will feel blessed in carrying on 'In the Name of Christ' as we have felt blessed."

The Dead Sea Scrolls

As Frank M. Cross Jr., a young biblical scholar, pores over a desk in his Chicago study he is reassembling history 2,000 years old that was written 6,700 miles away.

Elsewhere in the world, other men, too—Poles, Englishmen, Frenchmen—are toiling patiently over other parts of an exciting treasure that draws Cross' exacting attention.

The 34-year-old Chicagoan, a slim man with heavy black hair and a soft Alabama accent, is one of eight men in the world selected to fit together an ancient jigsaw puzzle that is throwing new and unexpected light on the Old Testament and on the beginnings of Christianity.

1,000 Years More Ancient

They are re-creating the text of a Hebrew Old Testament 1,000 years older than biblical scholars possessed before roaming shepherds discovered the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1947.

The scrolls, written by the scribes of the Jewish Essene sect at least 100 years before the Christian era, were unearthed in 10 caves on the northwestern edge of the Dead Sea, in Jordan.

Buried by the ages, they had disintegrated into tiny pieces, "Some of them are no bigger than your fingernail," said Cross, an associate professor of Old Testament at McCormick Theological Seminary.

He explained that the Hebrew sect living on the bank of the Dead Sea had copied the Bible by hand, as well as secular writings, as all ancient peoples did to preserve it from one generation to the next.

Word of Discovery

When the roving shepherds stumbled onto the remnants of the scrolls, setting off a pleased furor in the restrained atmosphere of biblical scholars, Cross was finishing up his doctorate in Semitic languages at Johns Hopkins University.

He recalled that his professor, William F. Albright, received a letter asking him to verify the importance of the discoveries.

"He came roaring out of his office and dragged me and a friend into his office to see the news," Cross related. "He was almost incoherent with excitement."

One reason for Albright's excitement, Cross said, was that "just a year before the find, one of the world's foremost Old Testament scholars had written that, of course, we would never have any really old Hebrew manuscripts."

Barrier Broken

Discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls have broken a long-standing and frustrating barrier, Cross observed. Until now, attempts to trace the Old Testament ever closer to an original text have been halted by an incident of some 1,850 years ago.

At that time a group of Hebrew authorities promulgated a single "official" version of the Old Testament on which later translations were based.

They threw out varying versions created by the mistakes of succeeding generations of copyists like those of the Essenes.

But now, Cross commented, scholars have in the Dead Sea Scrolls vital new evidence for probing nearer to the Old Testament's beginnings. They can search behind the barrier erected by the single version.

Studies in Jerusalem

Already Cross has spent three summers in Jerusalem, as part of the eight-man team selected by such agencies as the Palestine Archeological Museum, fitting together the remains of antiquity.

The leather and papyrus bits of scroll so far have shed light on every book of the Old Testament except Esther, as well as on secular writings which include a Manual of Discipline of the Essenes.

While Cross works with photostats of the scrolls in the quiet of his study overlooking serene Chalmers Place inside McCormick Seminary, he concedes that the works of the Essenes can create bitter controversy in religious circles.

For instance, the work so far has confirmed for him that "the idea of love as the supreme ethic existed in the Essene community in 200 B.C.

Love Ethic Prevails

"It is all over their stuff," Cross declared. "So, it cannot be an original idea of Christ. . . . That will upset some people."

It does not upset Cross, because the love ethic, he observed, could already be found all through the version of the Old Testament current before the finding of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

The use of infrared photography is an indispensable tool in studying the fragments, Cross reported.

Much of the 2,000-year-old ink against age-blackened leather is unreadable. But when the pieces are photographed with infrared light, the leather reproduces as white and the writing shows up clear and strong.

If evil were stronger than God, He would never have sent His Son to show us how to overcome it. God in His wisdom knew that evil could be defeated. God in the person of His Son faced the cruel facts of evil and pain and death unflinchingly for us. The crucifixion was the seeming triumph of evil, and God allowed it, but the resurrection was God's secret weapon and with it He triumphed by demonstrating His power to replace evil, suffering, and death with the creative force of love and life. The resurrection tells us more about God and His power to overcome evil than any other event in history.

THE MAID OF ISRAEL by Tolbert R. Ingram. 270 pp. Broadman, $3.00.

Offered for sale at the stone, Miriam trembles at the prospect of falling into the hands of a cruel master. Odd circumstances bring her into the home of Namaan, an army captain, as a personal maid to his wife. When Miriam discovers her master's leprosy, she pleads for him to go to her homeland to be healed by the prophet Elisha. As the despairing and hopeful Naaman follows her suggestion, a series of unexpected events develops involving not only the cure of a leper, but the fate of two clashing nations. The horrors of the siege of Samaria follow in graphic detail. Miriam faithfully, prayerfully, and patiently awaits the end of the distress and famine. She watches for the prophesied day when she will see Baskan, a Syrian captain, whom she loves and has unwittingly wronged.

The author, a retired newspaperman, has used his lifetime interest in Old Testament Scriptures to write his first novel. A seemingly insignificant maid mentioned in 2 Kings 5:2 becomes the heroine of a religious novel around whom the plot is woven. Imagination has been added to the biblical narrative to make kings and common people leap out of history into the twentieth century.

Film Review

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN? 16 mm. Black and white, 30 minutes. Producer: Family Films (for The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod) for This is the Life Series, rental $9.00.

This film presents the story of a church in which a layman's committee was visiting people in the community, presenting the claim of Jesus Christ upon their lives.

The story centers around one person who reluctantly accepts his assignment to visit four men in the community. He is a Christian but is not too familiar with the meaning of the Christian life. As he talks with his first prospect he is asked very pointedly by him "What is a Christian?" He was unable to answer the question.

Later this committee member talks over his problem with the chairman of the committee and discovers that being a Christian is not simply attempting to live according to Christ's teaching but also means that a person has recognized his sinfulness and has accepted God's remedy through Jesus Christ.

The committee felt that the film was well done and would meet the needs of our people. The film is best adapted for ages from junior high on up. However, the film could also be used for a general audience since even younger children would be interested in the story even though many would not get the real meaning of it.

Flashes of Thought

Lapses of Memory

Walter Gering

That face—who could it be? Somehow that face seemed to register as one known in the past. But try as I did, my memory was blank. His question "Do you know me" intimated that he was an associate of the past. Strange, is it not, how faces and names can become so confusing. Individuals whom we have known and cherished seem to fade away with the passing of time and all that is left is a faint recollection. How embarrassing this can be at times. It is not that we do not appreciate their friendship; rather that absence and preoccupation with other things has dimmed those fond memories.

It was the same that evening. There was no use pretending that I knew his name; openly the confession was made. There had been a lapse of memory. We have all had the same experience at one time or other and he would understand.

As he suggested his name a flood of memories rushed upon me. How could I ever forget those days in Italy? The inspirations of those days have continued to weigh heavily upon my mind through the succeeding years. The visit to Rome with its historic spots so dear to the heart of every Christian, the trip along the old Roman Appian way upon which the sainted Apostle Paul had traveled, the ruins of the ancient city of Pompeii, the sight of historic Mount Cassino which had been so important in earlier church history, the visits with the Waldensian Christians of that area—these and countless other memories rose to live once again.

And here was one of those with whom I had been associated during those days. It was he with whom I had been privileged to make the long, strenuous journey to the historic Waldensian cave near the top of the mount. By jeep—later on foot—we ascended until we reached the heights. Together we had crawled upon hands and knees through the small opening into the cave. Silently we had stood in reverence and awe on the very spot where the old Waldensian worshipers had stood, safely sheltered from their persecutors. It was the high point of the day. How could I forget the one who had made possible this thrilling experience upon the mountain top?

Only his gracious kindness in overlooking this lapse of memory could bridge over the embarrassment of the moment. Eagerly we shared more recent experiences and renewed our friendship. Then off he disappeared into the night and we parted once more.

Then I thought of God, "Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me," Isa. 49:15, 16. Thank God for such an unfailing memory.

REMEMBER ME, O MIGHTY ONE

Children in Japan and children on five continents represent many open doors.

Relief given to families in need opens closed doors in Europe and in Jordan, Viet Nam, and Korea, too.

Doors a

While many doors are closing to the preaching of the gospel, many others are opening all over the world.

New doors have opened in Africa, India, and Formosa in recent months placing large numbers within the hearing of the gospel as proclaimed by the workers of the General Conference Mennonite Church. Both at home and abroad new ways of sharing the gospel through literature, films, and radio are developing. Disaster service added to our other service programs gives access to people in many places.

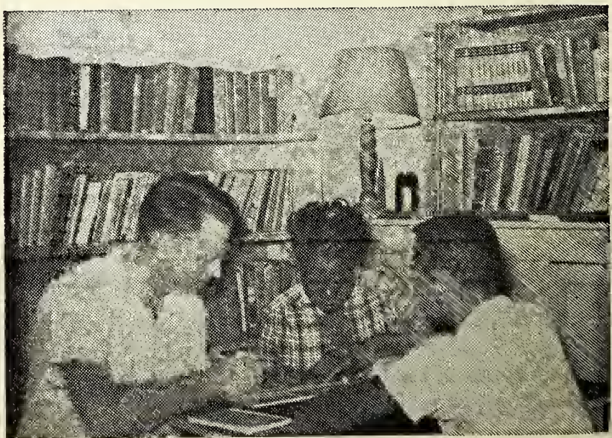
Yes, there are many doors of opportunity. But really there is only one door. It is our great opportunity to use all the resources of Christian witnessing in the total work of the General Conference Mennonite Church.

All activities of our Conference are directed to proclaiming the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to a world in need. Missionaries, teachers, relief workers, writers, construction workers, Voluntary Service

A Week for Remembering Christ

Make the week of December 18 to 25 the week in which you give your Special December Gift for the total ministry of the General Conference Mennonite Church.

How can we receive the blessings of Christmas without remembering Jesus Christ first? We remember Christ when we share the gospel with some other soul. The total program of the General Conference Mennonite Church is your evangelistic agency for reaching people with the gospel of Christ. In December it needs your support in a special way. Next Sunday enclose your gift for the total ministry of the General Conference in the Special December Gift envelope sent you and place it in the offering plate.



Work in the South brings Christ's healing power to needy souls in the homeland.

a Door

workers, 1-W men, and many others have a place in the great program of making the gospel known to every creature.

The open door and you

As a member of the General Conference you have a special place in this program, too. As you have shared in the commissioning and sending forth of many workers, so you need to continue to support this work.

In this closing month of 1955 the total ministry of the General Conference stands in great need of funds. While congregations and individuals have given liberally through the year, a special year end gift from each member is needed in December.

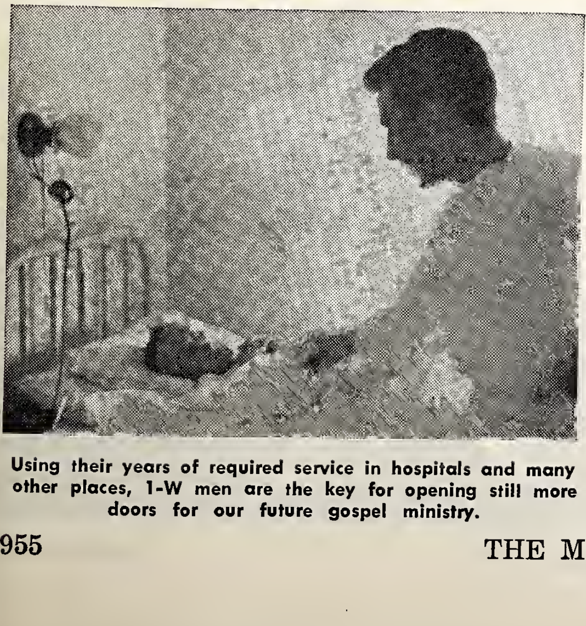
Give your gift today, because the time is short and the need is urgent. Use the special envelope sent to you and give it in the offering of your church, or mail it to the Central Offices of the General Conference Mennonite Church, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas.

A Word from the President

We feel very few have given sacrificially for the cause of Christ who died for us. Communists, other religionists, and cultists often put us to shame when it comes to making a sacrifice.

If each of you will give an extra year end gift this month, we can meet the present needs of our united endeavor.

Olin A. Krehbiel, President
General Conference Mennonite Church



Using their years of required service in hospitals and many other places, 1-W men are the key for opening still more doors for our future gospel ministry.

National workers trained in mission schools multiply the opportunities for reaching the unevangelized.

WHAT CAN I DO?

No matter who you are . . .
*Pray for the total work of the Conference—missions, education, service—praying that the Lord may bless the thousand workers and that their work may continue.

*Give a Special December Gift yourself—$8 per member is needed to fulfill all commitments. You may not be able to give this much, but even if it is less, give that. Perhaps the Lord has blessed in a special way so that you can give more. A number of larger gifts are needed.

*Speak to others encouraging them to pray and give.

If you are a minister . . .
*Announce the special program of December Gifts encouraging members to give and indicating how gifts may be presented through the congregation.

*Copy the announcement on this page, "A Week for Remembering Christ" for your church bulletin.

*Speak to individuals and organizations that may be able to give in a special way.

*Remember the needs of the General Conference Mennonite Church in the prayers of the congregation.

If you are a Sunday school superintendent . . .
*Announce the special program of December Gifts to the school.

*Speak to classes that may be able to give special gifts.

If you are a Sunday school teacher . . .
*Mention the need for Special December Gifts to the class.

If you are a treasurer . . .
*See that all Special December Gifts and other gifts for the total ministry of the General Conference are recorded in the accounts of the congregation and then sent to the Central Offices of the General Conference Mennonite Church, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, so that they reach there before December 31.

The supreme miracle of Christmas is that—

God Became Man

The Chamber of Commerce in our community planned a Christmas parade with the theme, "Keeping Christ in Christmas." Churches, organizations, and business firms entered colorful floats in this parade proclaiming the message that the baby Jesus was born on Christmas. This parade was truly a reminder that Christmas is the birthday of Christ. In a society where Christmas has been commercialized and Santa Claus has become more important than Christ such community action is commendable.

But even in emphasizing the birth of Jesus, there is the danger of fabricating an interesting and sentimental story of the birth of a child without indicating the deeper implications of that birth. There were unusual circumstances surrounding the birth of Jesus Christ; the angels, the shepherds, the star, the magi, even the stable—all of these create a mysterious and wonderful atmosphere, and have endeared the Christmas story to our hearts.

And yet there is something more significant and far more compelling about the birth of Christ. These things touch our hearts and awaken tender emotions but it is the divine origin and nature of this child that claim our worship and allegiance. The birth of Jesus was significant because He was God incarnate.

What incarnation means

The word "incarnation" as used in theological language refers to the embodiment of God in human form. In a sense never realized before in history, God came into the arena of human affairs in the birth of Jesus Christ. In this miraculous birth God assumed human nature. Jesus was God in the flesh. It was for this reason that He was called, "Emmanuel" for He was truly "God with us," (Matthew 1:23). The apostle Paul gives us the keynote of the Christmas message when he writes, "God was in Christ . . . ," 2 Corinthians 5:19. This is the central fact of the Christmas story. Without this realization, Christmas becomes an idle celebration.

The significance of the virgin birth of Christ lies in the fact that God chose to enter human life in the lowly form of a baby. Presumably, God could have made His advent into the human family as an adult. In any case, it would have been miraculous, for the incarnation—the fact that God became man—is the primary miracle, and the method that God has chosen is a secondary miracle.

This in no way minimizes the importance of the virgin birth but it merely points out that the virgin birth is grounded in an even greater divine act. The method by which Christ assumed human flesh is less important than the fact that He left His heavenly abode for an earthly residence. Paul writes of Christ, ". . . though he was in the form of God, (he) did not count equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being born in the likeness of men," Philippians 2:6, 7, RSV. This is the supreme miracle of Christmas. It is wonderful that the Christ of God was willing to be born in a manger in a lowly stable but it is even more marvelous to think that He was willing to leave heaven at all, for the birth of Christ was the incarnation of One who had from all eternity been in the bosom of God.

The importance of the virgin birth

But nevertheless, the virgin birth, as intimated, does have great importance. We usually think of the virgin birth as being spectacular but in reality it was just the opposite; it was a private matter as it would need to be by its very nature. It would have been much more sensational if the God-man had suddenly appeared in a mysterious manner and with mighty signs.

As it was, only a few knew that an unusual event had occurred on that first Christmas eve. Besides Mary and Joseph, the shepherds, the magi, and a few others to whom God had revealed himself, there was no one who realized that the Messiah, the anointed One had come.

Jesus was an infant unrecognizable as the Son of God. There was little stir because of His birth. This is evidence of the fact that God identified himself completely with man. He not only choose to condescend to the human level and to take human form, but He chose to come into the world as a baby. Jesus experienced the process of growing physically, mentally, and spiritually. He began His earthly career at exactly the same point where we must begin. He had to learn obedience to God in the same way that we must learn.

In fact, when Jesus began His active ministry, many were astonished at His power and wisdom. "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? and are not his brothers James and Joseph and Simon and Judas?" Matthew 13:55, RSV, —these were the questions that they asked. The God-man had identified himself so completely with the human race that during His growing years, His true identity had not been revealed.

This does not mean that Jesus was similar in every respect; He did not sin. But He was completely human in every respect with the exception that He did not sin. To be human is not necessarily to be sinful. The incarnation thus means that God identified himself completely with man.

The great mystery

The great mystery of the incarnation, then, is that Jesus Christ was completely God and completely man. There is sometimes a tendency among conservative Christians to emphasize the divinity of Christ at the expense of a recognition of His humanity. It is just as heretical to deny the humanity of Christ as it is to deny His divinity. The fact is that both are indispensable, for when either one is eliminated the incarnation is no longer a reality.

The incarnation means that God became man. The ability and power to redeem men resides in the divinity of Christ; human nature cannot redeem itself. But the power of God must be made operative on the human level. The humanity of Christ enabled Him to reach down to men with God's forgiveness. The perfection of Christ cannot help us unless He becomes the Savior for sin. In order to be our Savior Christ met the temptations of life and overcame sin within the framework in which we live.

It is this that makes His salvation effective in our lives. His victory is our victory because He completely identified himself with us and attained His perfection according to the rules of human existence. The author of Hebrews has written, "For because he himself has suffered and been tempted, he is able to help those who are tempted," Hebrews 2:18, RSV.

The essential meaning of the incarnation is that Christ was both God and man. He was not only God who appeared with a phantom body similar to man's, nor was He only man endued with special power from God. When Jesus was born, God became man for the sake of our salvation. "God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself. . . , 2 Corinthians 5:19, RSV.

As we worship at the manger of the Christ-child this Christmas, may we be mindful of the true nature of God's gift to us. A tiny baby cannot demand our allegiance; it is sentimental to worship a helpless babe. The message of Christmas is that this One who was born is our Christ, the eternal Son of God. It is the Risen Christ, our Savior and Lord whom we worship and adore.

No, it is not the mere fact that a baby was born that makes Christmas so important. It is that in Jesus Christ, God became incarnate.

Something Has to Give

Emmet Till, 14, came from Chicago last summer to visit his uncle in rural Mississippi. Because he whistled flirtatiously at a white woman in a nearby town this Negro boy was kidnapped from his uncle's cabin. Three days later his beaten body was found in the Tallahatchie River weighted down with a heavy cotton-gin fan. Two white men, including the husband of the insulted woman, were indicted for the murder but later acquitted. Later they were tried for kidnapping and also acquitted.

Shortly after the slaying of Emmet Till, Orlo Kaufman, worker at the MCC's Gulfport, Mississippi, mission and service center made this statement:

"The death of Emmet Till was a great tragedy. It not only ended the life of a youth cruelly and unjustly, brought great sorrow to his family and friends, but it fanned the fires of prejudice, ill-will, and hatred. It was not only a tragedy but a sin against God and against man. Those who committed the treacherous deed should be swiftly punished, so that all members of my race will know that the day of flagrant violence against the American Negro without punishment is past.

"Even more tragic than the death of Emmet Till is the attitude which exists between us that makes

Boarding Bible School

"Six-thirty! Time to get up! The breakfast bell will soon ring."

This was the call for the beginning of a day of summer Bible school at our mission church in Ashland, Montana. This was a new and different way to begin and conduct a summer Bible school.

Soon after the call was given you would see children rushing into line to get their breakfast at the church door. This was the scene every day the week of July 25.

What an exciting week it was for all who attended. The boys and girls arrived early Monday morning. Other children coming to Bible school would bring pencils, papers, and their Bibles. But these also brought their bedrolls, clothes, and swimming suits. For these children were going to live at Ashland during the period of the school because their homes were so far away.

The older boys slept in a tent and the older girls slept in the garage, while the younger children spent the night in the house. Their meals were prepared by the ladies of the church and served to them in the church. In this way almost forty children were able to take part in our Bible school.

Classes met in the house and in the church with Valdo Petter, Susan Jantzen, Luella Stucky, and Joy Ann Goering as teachers. We were part of a Voluntary Service unit that spent the summer working in our Indian mission stations in Montana.

There were two class periods in the forenoon followed by another in the afternoon. A craft session finished the class schedule. After this everyone changed into their swimming suits and rushed down to the river for a dip. This was enjoyed by everyone, teachers as well as pupils. An hour of swimming sent all of us back to the church hungry for supper.

A regular evening program gave the people of Ashland a chance to take part in this unusual Bible school. These programs consisted of singing, stories, and films.

One evening everybody piled on the hayrack and we went out to the pasture for a short campfire service. After roasting a few marshmallows and eating oranges, everyone was quite tired and ready for bed.

Saturday afternoon we all enjoyed a trip out to the hills in the back of two trucks. There we had a picnic supper and enjoyed a game of volleyball after supper.

Our Bible school ended with a program on Sunday morning at the church. After the program the congregation remained for a picnic lunch on the church lawn followed by an afternoon of play.

It is the wish of every teacher that during this one week of Bible school some seeds sown might have taken root and will continue to grow.

such an unprovoked crime conceivable. I, as a Christian of the white race confess that my hands as well as the hands of those who committed the crime are bloody. I have not tirelessly witnessed to Christ who when fully accepted will free men of prejudice, suspicion, fear, and ill-will. I have all too often embraced Christ verbally only. The full import of the gospel, which makes us conscious of our brotherhood through Christ, has not yet fully penetrated my hard heart.

"I and my fellow Christians who share this sense of guilt can only ask that you, the colored people, forgive us. We cannot pay for this crime nor for all other crimes committed against our brothers in Christ. Forgive us for we confess our sin. Forgive us for there is no other way whereby we can be reconciled. Forgive us, for we must forgive one another if we would receive forgiveness from God, against whom we all have sinned."

In commenting on the trial of Emmet Till, Time (October 3, 1955) said, "Tallahatchie is not the South, either the Old South, or the new, burgeoning industrial South. It is an island, and there are many in the Deeper South, where the law of the land and the will of the community . . . are in basic conflict. The feeling created in the U. S. by the Till case indicated that something was going to have to give."

A FAMILIAR STORY

Once Frank Brown was telling the immortal story of the prodigal son in a little mud-walled, thatch-covered church, far out in the hinterland of China. As he described the old home, the far country, the loneliness of the wanderer, and the longing of the father's heart, a poor peasant woman listened very intently. She was illiterate, like most of the audience, and was hearing the story for the first time. When Mr. Brown had finished, this wrinkled old mother leaned over to his wife and asked, "How did the preacher know about my boy?"

This story, carried down the centuries for nineteen hundred years, went straight to its target—a mother's heart.

BETHEL COLLEGE

Handel's Messiah, a traditional feature of the Christmas season at Bethel College, was presented in Memorial Hall, Sunday, December 11.

Dr. W. H. Hohmann, under whose direction the Newton Community chorus and orchestra performed, announced the guest soloists as follows: Alma Nolan Sapp, University of Wichita, Soprano; Florence Selvig, Wichita, alto; Dr. Robert Myers, Newton, tenor; and Jack Anderson, University of Wichita, bass.

The Bethel College orchestra, under the direction of Darlene Dugan accompanied the chorus. Mrs. Erwin Goering was at the piano.

This concert marked the twenty-eighth annual presentation of Handel's great classic by a mass chorus under the direction of W. H. Hohmann.

At the Bethel College Corporation meeting Friday, November 25, Dr. John O. Schrag of McPherson was elected to the board of directors to succeed Gerhard Zerger of Moundridge. The Rev. Arnold Funk of Hillsboro was re-elected to the board. The report of the president showed total assets of $1,913,465. Gifts received during 1954-55 totaled $74,228. The number of donations totaled 3,183, the largest on record for one year.

A discussion of changes in the college bylaws to permit more direct Conference participation in governing the affairs of the college resulted in a motion to table the changes pending further study.

Because of the meeting of the General Conference Council of Boards at Newton several visitors have been seen on the campus. Speaking in chapel Tuesday, Nov. 29, was the Rev. Olin Krehbiel of Berne, Ind., president of the General Conference and graduate of Bethel College.

The public relations offices of the college, including the office of the director of public relations, the admissions counselor, the office of employment and the news bureau have moved from their basement quarters to the new offices in the former library reading room. In addition to the above, these offices now include the alumni office and a public lounge.

Eight debaters expect to make the trip to Southwestern College, Winfield, to participate in the annual tournament, according to Marguerite Schriver, Bethel debate coach.

Erwin Goering, Ernest Bachman, and P. S. Schellenberg went to Hydro, Okla., Monday evening, Nov. 28, to participate in a Bethel College Fellowship meeting involving several Oklahoma churches. Val Krehbiel is chairman of the fellowship organization in this area. The meeting was well attended and an enthusiastic interest was shown.

"Amahl and the Night Visitors," a Christmas opera by Menotti, will be presented Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 14 and 15 in Memorial Hall at Bethel College.

Directed by James Bixel of the college music department, "Amahl and the Night Visitors" involves the journey of the three kings to find the Christ child. The opera tells the story of the stay of the kings at the home of Amahl and his mother and the events that follow the crippled Amahl's desire to join the kings and see the Christ child.

The two principal characters will have a double cast as follows: Amahl by Joan Banman, North Newton, and Florine Voran, Pretty Prairie. The part of the mother will be taken by Sara A. Claassen, Beatrice, and Phyllis Epp, North Newton. In the role of the kings will be Janver Krehbiel, Pretty Prairie, Larry Graber, Salem, Ore., and Bruce Loganbill, Newton. The a cappella choir of the college, under the direction of W. H. Hohmann, will sing the chorus numbers.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

Bluffton College Choral Society's annual presentation of "The Messiah," directed by Professor Russell A. Lantz, will be given in Founders' Hall on Sunday, December 11, at 8:00 p.m. Accompanying the singers will be Mrs. Pearl Bogart Mann, pianist, and the college orchestra.

Soloists for the presentation are: Mrs. Dorothy Zorn, soprano, Wheaton, Illinois; Miss Rose Bruno, contralto, Toledo, Ohio; Mr. Thomas W. Williams, tenor, Galesburg, Illinois; and Mr. Miles Nekolny, bass, Chicago, Illinois.

The student council reports that money obtained from the fall work day, Oct. 19, will be added to part of last spring's work day funds for the construction of a new asphalt tennis court. The majority of last spring's work day funds was designated to be used on a campus radio station now being set up.

The department of economics and business administration, under the direction of Dr. Howard Raid, is now conducting its fifth census of Bluffton businessmen. Richard Ramseyer, a junior from Pontiac, Ill., who is minoring in this department, is conducting the census.

Professor Luther Shetler, assistant professor of mathematics at Bluffton, attended the annual meeting of the Central Association of Science and Mathematics Teachers, November 24-26, as editor of the organization's yearbook. In addition, he was responsible for 30 textbook and equipment company exhibits and was vice-president of the mathematics section of the meeting.

Dr. Robert S. Kreider, dean, will speak at the annual Founders' Day Program at Freeman Junior College on December 14. Dr. Kreider will present a morning and afternoon address on Anabaptist history.

Four PAX fellows who recently returned from Germany and Greece spoke at the regular chapel service on November 23, describing the building and agricultural experimentation programs in Germany and Greece. Charles Yoder, Elwin Lafevre, Dean Zehr, and Larry Eisenbeis were the representatives.

Dr. William J. McKeefery, dean of Alma College, Alma, Michigan, visited the Bluffton campus November 28, as the North Central Association Co-ordinator. During his visit Dr. McKeefery met with faculty and student groups to share ideas and methods with those of other colleges.

Five faculty members attended the Council of Boards of the General Conference Mennonite Church, November 30 to December 3, at Newton, Kansas. Attending were: Dr. L. L. Ramseyer, Dr. J. S. Schultz, Dr. P. R. Shelly, Carl Lehman, and Dr. R. S. Kreider.

Prior to the Christmas holidays Founders Hall will be the scene of the annual Gospel Team sponsored Christmas banquet on Dec. 15. Heading the program planning committee for the banquet are Marion Keeney and Paul Selman.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Rev. Heinrich Regehr, teacher of Religion and German in the MBBC, visited us on November 18, and spoke to us in chapel. His message was very practical and a blessing to many. Using as his text John 21:1-11, he based the message on the words of John, "It is the Lord." Rev. Regehr pointed out to us that it is not only in the times of blessing but also in the difficult situations that the Lord is present and working out His purposes.

On November 21 Rev. Peter Harder, Secretary of the Board of Education and of the Canadian General Conference, also visited us and gave us a challenging message on discipleship.

The college is a beehive of activity as the fall term is rapidly drawing to a close. Students are busily trying to complete their term assignments; the choir is putting in its last practices for the Christmas concert; and committees are planning and preparing the Christmas banquet and the program which follows it.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Rev. A. van Gilse, leader of the Dutch Peace Center at Heerewegen, Holland, spoke in Freeman, November 22. The next day he addressed the students in chapel. His message on a personal and deeper spiritual concept of nonresistance was a real challenge to all who heard him. Such contacts with peace leaders from other countries make valuable contributions to our own thinking and understanding.

Rev. John Thiessen, executive secretary of the General Conference Mission Board visited the campus recently. When he spoke to the students he centered his remarks on Numbers 23:23. He gave numerous examples of "What God Hath Wrought" in the lives of people on the mission fields of India. Man's physical heritage and social environment are important but there is yet another influence on him which is infinitely greater—that is the influence of God's spirit.

The meeting of the Northern District Conference Ministers in the Freeman Community brought several guest speakers to chapel the other week. Rev. Walter Gering, pastor of the Bethel Church of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, spoke on Monday. He reminded us that we are the light of the world and are to let our light so shine that our father in heaven is glorified. We will be able to do this best if we study diligently, ask God for His divine revelation, and then put our powers to constructive use. Rev. Arnold Nickel, pastor of the Bethesda Church at Henderson, Nebraska, was the guest for Thursday's services. He spoke on the importance of the Church. The function of the Church he suggested is to make Christ contemporary to every generation, and to be the conscience of society. The Church needs us as much as we need the Church.

Professor Marvin Riley, a member of the Department of Rural Sociology at South Dakota State College spent an afternoon on the Freeman campus last week. He plans to do a research project on the Hutterite Colonies of South Dakota in connection with the Extension Department at State College.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

Thanksgiving Day had an added meaning for Donald and Patricia Wismer this year in that twin girls, Christine Frances and Catherine Laura, were born to them on Nov. 24.

Mrs. Jakob Duerksen, Paraguay, and Walter Eisenbeis, Waterloo, Ont., spoke to those assembled on Thursday morning, Nov. 24, for the Thanksgiving Service at the Woodlawn Mennonite Church. The Seminary Fellowship held its annual Thanksgiving Dinner in the church auditorium. Some hundred persons attended the dinner. The offering received was donated to the European Mennonite Bible School. The afternoon's program featured a sound film on the work of the Quakers in Korea.

The Educational Institutions Committee met at the Seminary on Nov. 26. D. C. Wedel, L. L. Ramseyer, Harold Gross, S. F. Pannabecker, and Andrew Shelly represented Bethel, Bluffton, and Freeman Colleges, and the Seminary. Elmer Richert represented Rosthern Junior College and I. I. Friesen represented the Canadian Mennonite Bible College. Others present were Maynard Shelly and Sister Mueller of Newton, Kansas.

MCC news & notes

RECONSTRUCTION IN KOREA

In spite of the reconstruction in Korea during the last two years, there are still thousands and thousands of Koreans who do not have adequate shelter, food, and clothing—particularly refugees who have not been able to find permanent employment. The MCC program for continued reconstruction is organized around these needs.

Valentine Yutzy, Plain City, Ohio, works with the Heifer Project in teaching the Koreans how to care for the livestock they receive. Howard Burkholder, White Cloud, Mich., visits the 4-H clubs and has begun a program of regular meetings with these groups.

The Widow's Project is supervised by Clara Eshleman, Harrisonburg, Va. The women learn how to cut patterns, use a sewing machine and make clothes to earn a living. After the course is completed the MCC helps them to purchase a sewing machine and set up their own business.

The Kyongsan Vocational School for Orphan Boys takes about 170 junior-level boys from the streets to give them a Christian home and teach them a vocation. Middle school subjects are also taught.

Seven MCC workers are loaned to other agencies: five nurses work in hospitals; James Hostetler, Louisville, Ohio, and Helen Tieszen, Marion, S. D., work for Christian Children's Fund. While these professional people are working they are also training Koreans.

These projects are all significant in the long-range rehabilitation of the refugee.

Besides this, there is the material aid distribution. The welfare institutions — orphanages, hospitals, old peoples' homes, and nurseries—are needy. Harry Harms, Sardis, B. C., surveyed the 60 institutions in the Taegu area, of which 38 are orphanages. (It is reported that the orphanages in the Taegu province house a total of 7000 children.) These 38 orphanages receive a monthly allocation of food, varying with the specific needs. Six hospitals and 16 other institutions also receive some food. Powdered milk is distributed regularly to 1200 persons in refugee areas, eight kindergartens, and 3000 children in Bible clubs. These are church-sponsored day schools for children unable to enter the regular primary schools. Christmas bundles will also be distributed in the orphanages.

In November the unit discovered 13 resettlement areas where about 15,000 persons had been forcibly moved outside the city. These people had been living in temporary illegal shelters. The government gave 15 days grain ration, 60 boardfeet of lumber and 540 sq. ft. of land to each family and moved them far from the city center, generally on hills and other waste land. As high as 56-60 per cent of these people face critical food shortages, and some are starving.

During the next three months MCC will ship 60 tons of powdered milk and 15 tons of butter from government surpluses for Korean refugees. They will also ship two carloads of canned meat and one carload of flour.

Thus the total program of MCC in Korea includes giving food and clothing to those in need and working with the Koreans to find employment and better living conditions. When we see others who lack these necessities of life, and we are able to help them, can we do less?

MATERIAL AID SHIPPED

During the last six months of the MCC fiscal year (June through November), material aid shipped throughout the world totaled 427½ tons and was valued at $492,866.91. This included shipments of food, clothing, medical supplies and Christmas bundles to Austria, France, Formosa, England, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hong Kong, Indo-China, Java, Jordan, Korea, and Paraguay.

Included in these shipments were 116½ tons of government surplus powdered milk, cheese and butter which the American government grants to voluntary service agencies. The material aid shipped abroad by MCC during 1955 totals 228 tons. The total value was about one million dollars including the government surplus foods.

As December draws to a close preparations are made to close the books of the Central Treasury. Contributions received before Dec. 31 will be recorded as given in 1955. We mention this to remind those who wish to have their contributions recorded as gifts for this year. Although contributions should usually be channeled through the local church treasurer, when time does not permit this they may be sent direct to the "General Conference Office, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas."

Jottings

—Saskatchewan Ministers' Conference: Days of blessing and fellowship were the 25th and 26th of October when the annual Ministers' and Deacons' Conference of Saskatchewan was held in the Mennonite Ebenfeld Church at Herschel. From far and near came approximately 50 brethren for these important days. Since many of our brethren had attended the recent conference in Chicago and received such great blessing there, it was decided to have the same theme, "The Believers' Church." Elder C. J. Warkentin opened the conference. Besides the devotions, business, election, and reports, four well-prepared papers were presented, followed by discussion periods: "The Development of the Believers' Church, from its Origin to the Present," by J. J. Nickel; "Standards of Admitting Members," by H. T. Klaassen: "Administration in the Church according to the Scripture," by P. Schroeder, and "Relationship of Church to Conference," by P. G. Sawatzky. There was also a report on Home Missions by G. G. Epp, one of the Board members. The possibility of opening a mission station among the Indians in north Saskatchewan is being investigated. In the evening services, Henry Friesen of Rosthern Youth Farm, and Paul Dyck, missionary candidate for India, spoke the first evening; Korn. Wiebe of Herbert and Arthur Regier, Tiefengrund, the next. The closing remarks of the president from 2 John 1:8, were "Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward."

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kan.: Our annual Mission Festival was held Oct. 23. Mission messages were brought by Miss Marie Duerksen and J. R. Duerksen, both of India, in the forenoon. Dr. Joe Duerksen had the opening devotion for the afternoon service. Ben Rahn, pastor of the Inman Church, gave a very appropriate message on home missions, and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen of experiences on the mission field in India. At the evening service, Harris Waltner gave a report of the G. C. Young People's Union, and O'Ray Graber, pastor of the Hebron Church, showed slides and told of relief work. The relief committee reports that 895 cans of meat were canned on Oct. 25, for the relief program. The wedding of Miss Mary Wiens from here, and Bill Goossen from Beatrice, Neb., took place here Oct. 28. Miss Sara Penner returned from South America, Oct. 8, where she had been working for the MCC for a little more than two years. A daughter, Beverly Jean, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Guy Riffel of Newport, Wash., on Oct. 25. A son, Alan Ray, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Neufeld of Chicago, on Nov. 14. Brother Peter J. Dyck conducted a series of evangelistic meetings here, Nov. 14-20. The main theme for his inspiring messages was "Life in His Name," based on the Gospel of John.—Mrs. A. F. Enns, Corr.

—Inman Church, Inman, Kan.: Our minister, Ben Rahn, conducted a series of meetings at two neighboring churches, so John Thiessen and P. K. Regier served our pulpit those two Sundays. Rev. and Mrs. Walter Dyck reviewed their work in South America through lecture and pictures. Seven churches in this community observed World Community Prayer in the Andover Lutheran Church near here. The meat canner functioned in this community the latter part of October. Five churches filled 3,097 cans. Annual turkey supper, sponsored and prepared by our laymen, was served successfully to around 500 people, Nov. 8. Mission Festival was observed Nov. 13 with three sessions and a noon meal. Andrew Shelly of Chicago was the very challenging speaker of the day. In the evening he showed slides of his recent visit to the mission fields over the world. Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Schroeder observed their golden wedding anniversary with open house at the church, Nov. 20.—Corr.

—Ebenezer Church, Bluffton, Ohio: Greetings with Ps. 92:1, 2: "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and sing praises unto thy name, O most High: To shew forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night." Bible Conference, sponsored by Tri-County Evangelistic Association was held at the church nightly, Oct. 26 to Nov. 6, with Richard Wolff, Hebrew Christian, as speaker. Orlo Sprunger of Ada, Ohio, was song leader, accompanied on the piano by his wife, with Mrs. Milo Lora at the organ. All the meetings were well represented by the churches. Recent births: Oct. 29, a son, Gary Lee, to Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Lugibill; Oct. 21, a daughter, Mary Ethel, to Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Bucher of Lima, Ohio; Nov. 6, a daughter, Patricia Ellen, to Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Amstutz; Nov. 9, a daughter, Jane Marie, to Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Bixel; and a son to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Fraught. Miss Jeannie Amstutz became the bride of Delbert Hall, Oct. 25. A Sunday School Workers Conference was conducted with the aim, "How to build a more effective Sunday school." Pastor W. J. Flickinger and J. P. Suderman presented topics. Nov. 2, an all day sewing of comforters and quilts was held at the church. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Geiger gave the evening message, Sunday, Nov. 13. The sympathy of the congregation is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Warren and family, and to Dr. and Mrs. Bradford Steiner and family, in the death of their father, Rev. Ezra E. Steiner, missionary of Landour, Mussoorie, India.—Florence Lora, Corr.

—Walton Church, Walton, Kan.: P. P. Tschetter of Kingman, Kan., was our speaker for evangelistic services during the week of Nov. 13. The Walton school patrons have decided to adopt the released time plan for religious instruction. The Tabor Church and the Highland Evangelical Church cooperated with the Walton churches in planning for this instruction. Mrs. Clarence Spangler and Mrs. Gilbert Guthrie of the Walton Methodist Church, Mrs. Arthur Schmidt, of the Tabor Church, and Mrs. Gail Reusser of our church are teachers. Harold Graber and Mrs. J. R. Duerksen were speakers at our Harvest Festival, Nov. 20. Pastor and Mrs. C. D. Boese represented our church in Beatrice, Neb., at the Western District Conference.—Harold Peters, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: Frank S. Harder, pastor of the Emmanuel Church of Pratum, Oregon, was the speaker for our Young People's Conference, Nov. 6-11. Brother Harder is a new man in the Pacific District Conference and we are glad to get acquainted with him and enjoy his spiritual messages. Prior to the service on Thursday, Nov. 3, the King's Daughters sponsored their annual Harvest Thanksgiving dinner. The proceeds amounted to $337.46 and will be used for various mission projects. Otto Stadler of Wenatchee, Washington, formerly of Pocatello, Idaho, laid on our hearts the work of the Sunday School Union. He had charge of the evening worship service here, Nov. 13. A new staff of teachers took up the work of the week-day Bible classes Thursday, Nov. 17. Children from grades 1 through 7 have been encouraged to attend. The annual business meeting of our church will be held on the evening of Dec. 7.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pa.: A carry-in supper was a feature of the Youth Fellowship for project night recently, after which Christmas corsages and decorations were made. Several of our members accompanied the busload of people from the eastern churches who journeyed to Richfield to attend the Men's Brotherhood meeting. Harry Detweiler showed pictures of Japan after a carry-in supper for the Church Council Saturday evening. John Purves of the Brook Lane Farm told us of the work of the Mennonite Mental Hospital, Sunday morning, Nov. 13. While our pastor and family were attending the meetings at Bluffton, Ohio, the pulpit was filled by Vernon Neufeld, former pastor of Zion Mennonite Church, Donnellson, Iowa, now doing post graduate work at Princeton Seminary. Thanksgiving Day worship service was observed Thanksgiving evening.—Corr.

—First Church, Paso Robles, Calif.: Dr. and Mrs. Zook were with us shortly before leaving for Belgium for further training. They highlighted their service with transparencies showing the many phases of service required on the mission fields. July 24, nine young people were baptized and received into our church fellowship. They are: Mrs. Robert Toevs; Joan, Janice, and Jerlene Thiel; Arlene Quenzer; Sharon Smiley; Alvena Quenzer; Gerald Claassen; and Ronald Lichti. The Young People's Retreat was well attended by our young people at Camp Gaines, Lake Sequoia. The Home Builders Retreat over the Labor Day week end at Cambria Pines is another special event of the year. The Sunday school picnic was held in the Tempelton Park, and the July "Family Day" took place at Shandon Park. In August, it was our church's turn to sponsor a social evening in a cottage of the boys school. The boys look forward to this contact with the different groups from the outside. The Union C. E. program with the Willow Creek Mennonite Church took place in our church Oct. 30. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Quenzer had open house on their golden wedding anniversary in October. All the children except Paul and Lydia celebrated this memorable day with them, also many relatives and friends. While pastor and Mrs. Galle were on their vacation in September, the Sunday services were brought by Rev. and Mrs. Aron Jantzen, and Chaplain E. A. McQuire from the Boys School. Nov. 7, Pastor and Mrs. Galle were in a car accident, and Mrs. Galle was hospitalized four days, whereas Mr. Galle was released the next day. We are thankful that they were not critically injured and that they are able to be up and around again.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Twelve of our young people attended the YPU Workshop of our Eastern Ohio Mennonite Churches at the First Mennonite Church at Sugarcreek, Ohio, on Nov. 12 and 13, where the theme of the discussions was "Youth Problems." Our fourth annual missions conference was held at the church Nov. 17-21. The opening service was sponsored by the Men's Brotherhood with J. N. Byler, director of Relief, MCC, bringing the message. Friday evening services were sponsored by the Women's Missionary Society with Andrew Shelly, director of Public Relations, Mennonite Biblical Seminary, bringing the message in word and with pictures concerning conditions on the mission fields. Marie Duerksen, missionary to India, brought a fine message to our congregation on Sunday morning and the evening service was sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Society with Orlo Kauffman, leader of the MCC Voluntary Service Unit at Gulfport, Miss., showing slides and telling of the work that is being done among the Negro people there. The final service was held at the Oak Grove Mennonite Church near Smithville, Ohio, with Andrew Shelly speaking at the union meeting of our Eastern Ohio Mennonite Churches at that place. Amos Diller accompanied his daughter, Miss Jennie Diller, R.N., to Bradenton, Florida, where they will spend some time. Mother's Study Group met at the home of Mrs. Victor Gerber in Dalton, Ohio, on Monday evening, Nov. 14, for a discussion of the topic "Parents are also Husbands and Wives." They brought articles of food to prepare baskets for the needy for Thanksgiving. Ten of our members attended the Missionary Conference at Bluffton College on Nov. 16 and 17. They visited Will Tschantz Eli Kirochofer, and Mrs. Matilda Fankhouser at the Mennonite Memorial Home and several of the ladies also visited Mrs. Caroline Tschantz at Findley, Ohio. Pastor and Mrs. James Reusser are the proud parents of a son, Mark Snyder, born Nov. 26. The proceeds of the collection at the Thanksgiving Service and the Annual Sale that followed, on the morning of Nov. 24, totaled $474.80 which will be divided equally, between relief and missions. On Thursday evening, Nov. 24, an evening of fellowship was held at the Menno Zuecher home by several of the Sunday school classes in honor of John Mani who is leaving the community to live with his daughter at Dover, Ohio. The Milton Falb family gave a program of music, pictures, and spoke of their recent work on the mission field in Puerto Rico at the evening service on Nov. 27. —Mrs. Earl Hofstetter, Corr.

Among the things some folks may have intended to do in 1955 was to look into the matter of making a will. Some of them have done this. Have you? If you need suggestions about making a will, and including a bequest for some Conference cause, contact the "Office of the Treasurer, 722 Main St., Newton, Kansas."

DO YOU WANT A PROJECT?

Do you wish to take a mission project in 1956?

The entire enterprise which our Heavenly Father has entrusted to our General Conference should be every church member's concern, yes, even every child's because it is our Savior's concern. We want to pray for the whole cause of our Conference and we also want to contribute for the upkeep of the whole cause and for means for moderate expansion.

Yet as limited human beings we often like to localize our specific interests a bit. We have a list of suggested projects, all within the orbit of our Conference responsibility, which individuals, Sunday school classes, C. E. and Young People's groups, Women's Missionary Organizations, or Men's Brotherhoods would be glad to sponsor. Will you please write to: Board of Missions, Christian Service, or Education and Publication, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, for suggested lists of projects for 1956.

May our Lord inspire us all to lift up our eyes and look (John 4:35) to lift up our hearts and pray (Matt. 9:38)

to lift up our hands and give (Acts 20:35) and encourage our young people to life up their feet and go (Matt. 28:1a).

PRAYER

We pray, O God, for the purity of the faith of Thy Church in China. May Thy living and active Word, which discerns the thoughts and intentions of the heart, so speak in the hearts of Christian leaders that they may turn away from all false doctrines of man, and speak with boldness the pure and wholesome truth that comes from Thee. Amen.

Christmas

A moonlit land
Where white sheep slept,
A shepherd band
That vigil kept.

A radiant light
All round the fold,
An angel bright
Good tidings told.

A choir above,
A splendid throng!
A song of love,
A thrilling song!

A stable bare,
Where oxen fed,
A manger there,
A lowly bed.

A maiden mild
Who knelt in awe,
A little child
Laid on the straw.

From heav'n above
'Twas even thus
That perfect love
Came down to us!

HIS NAME

There are over two hundred and fifty words and titles throughout the Bible to designate something of the matchless character of Christ. We consider the familiar group as found in Isaiah 9:6.

Wonderful Counselor

This is often considered as two titles, but as there is no punctuation in the Hebrew it could also be considered as one term. Christ is a Counselor; how up-to-date is that term. A good counselor must know his field, take a personal interest in each one desiring help, and make clear the problem and offer real help. We all need much counseling in the important things of life. We know too little and become baffled, confused, and "frustrated." We need some one to help us out.

Such a Counselor we have in Christ—a Wonderful Counselor who is familiar with our sins, our problems, our anxieties, and our conflicting loyalties. Why do ourselves the wrong of not embracing the opportunity of counseling with the most Wonderful Counselor?

The Mighty God

With this name we at once acknowledge the divinity of Christ. He is God, coming down on that first Christmas Day veiled in flesh that all the world may know what He is like. He is all-powerful and so we designate Him as Mighty.

But His might is much more than holding the universe in His Hand. In Christ we see the mighty patience of God. Why does He bother with us stubborn and selfish people? But out of His patient, long-suffering loving-kindness He does not give us up. More real might is shown in such mercy than in blasting us off the earth.

But consider also how mighty He is in His forgiveness. Great spiritual forces are required to truly forgive.

But the greatest force in Christ is His Almighty Love. Here we see this terrific power exemplified as nowhere else. Christ proved God's love by submitting to the cross and bearing our sins. Truly Christ is the Mighty God.

The Everlasting Father

Christ shows us the fatherliness of God. Like a father He provides and protects; He disciplines and teaches; He understands and knows; He is concerned and cares; He loves and forgives. His love is never exhausted, it is everlasting. His fatherliness is eternal. As prodigals we arise and return to our Father this Christmas season. And the loving Christ—the everlasting Father—is watching to receive us back and take us unto himself.

The Prince of Peace

The whole world is hungry for peace; peace among nations, among individuals, and between the soul and God. Peace is not blasted into the world by exploding bombs; real peace is brought in only by the Prince of Peace. This is the message Christmas brings.

To give that peace right of way in the world we need to make our peace with God, our fellow men, and with ourselves. We are to be living demonstrators of true peace. This we can do only by giving ourselves completely to the Prince of Peace and serving Him.

Christmas recalls for us again the nature of the Christ: a Wonderful Counselor; the Mighty God; the Everlasting Father; and the Prince of Peace. For such a Gift we reverently thank God and open our hearts to receive Him.

The Council of Boards

DAVID SCHROEDER*

Host Church

The Council of Boards met this year at Newton, Kansas, in the Bethel College Church. Even though the church is not yet completed it served well for the meetings. Each Board was assigned to a large room and the smaller rooms were used for individual committees meeting during this time. Meals were served in the Student Union Room of Memorial Hall.

The meetings were not only a time of fellowship and sharing of work that had been done during the year but it was a time when each Board wrestled seriously with the problems the church is facing today. Let us notice some of the concerns as they are brought to our attention by the Executive Secretaries of our Boards, John Thiessen, Willard Claassen, Elmer Ediger, and August Epp speaking for the Boards.

Concerns

Of the Mission Board:

1. How can we bring the total cause of missions, as entrusted to us by our Heavenly Father, more effectively before our constituency?
2. How can we increase our intercessory prayer for our total Conference work?
3. How can we achieve greater concentration in systematic giving?
4. How can we know which, of the many open doors and challenging opportunities, to accept and which to reject, seeing that we cannot accept them all because of a limited budget?
5. How can we find the best qualified mission candidates for the exacting and demanding work of present day missions?
6. How best can we guide our prospective visitors from India, Brother and Sister Samuel Stephens, as they visit us next summer?

Of the Board of Education and Publication:

1. How can we complete the great task of providing Graded Sunday School Lessons for our churches, both in the English and German language?
2. How can we get each home to purchase and use the new Mennonite Encyclopedia?
3. How can we further enlarge our ministry through our Bookstore services?
4. How can we develop more and better writers for our Conference publications and work?
5. How can we balance the output of Conference publications so that we will have material in every field and in front of the church's ministry?

Of the Board of Christian Service:

1. The need for expanding mutual aid resettlement services.
2. The urgent MCC relief needs in Far East and Jordan in the light of decreased giving.
3. How to expand Voluntary Service on a district and local basis.
4. The need for a Mennonite peace film for a wider witness.
5. Civil defense and disaster service.

Of the Board of Trustees and Finance:

1. How to meet our ever increasing budget.
2. How to co-ordinate solicitation by our various boards and institutions.
3. The establishing of a finance corporation because of the great amount of work being done.
4. Ministerial Aid and Pensions

How can the work be performed?

As the members of the various Boards wrestled with the problems before them they took whatever steps they could to solve them. Those items which did not lend themselves to an immediate solution were usually assigned to members or committees for further study and counsel. There was always present the realization that the work could not go forward except as every member of the Conference accepts his share of the responsibility. Let us listen and see what some of the members of the Boards have to say to the churches:

> "If every born-again Christian in America would catch the vision of the purpose of God for his life, namely missions, and would give himself to that task, we could see the entire world evangelized in about twenty years. Our work is to fulfill the command of Christ. Such are the concerns of the Board of Missions. We covet your help." P. A. Wedel
> "Local churches can help to implement the work of the Board of Education and Publication by: 1) Becoming informed concerning our own publications such as the Hymnary, Junior Hymnary, Sunday school material, and material on the home and in youth work; 2) Informing the Board on local church needs in the field of education and by constructively criticizing our materials; 3) Keeping the doors open to representatives of the Board who are willing to give help in the local church and in the Sunday school program." L. L. Ramseyer
> "If the trustees and deacons, or comparable organization in the church, would take the time to analyze the budget of each Board and note for what purposes the money is given they would receive a very good understanding of the work of our Conference. It would be just as helpful as a visit by a Conference representative and less expensive." Clinton Kaufman

Impressions Received

As one attends the meetings of the various Boards certain lasting impressions are received. Almost invariably one feels that it has been good to be here. Certainly the leading of the Spirit of God was felt and there was the assurance that even though we could not see exactly how the great tasks entrusted to us would be done, God would open the way, mak-

Let Us Go--

Even Unto Bethlehem

HENRY FUNK

". . . Let us now go
Even unto Bethlehem . . ." Luke 2:15.

The night is still. Softly the sinking snow is folding itself like a blanket around the slumbering land. Here and there a shimmering light sets off the whiteness of its crystal purity. There is a sweet loneliness in the air, and as I stand and drink deeply of the peaceful scene, a strange feeling settles in my breast. I feel constrained to sing and praise the greatness of His Majesty, and yet, restrained as well, I can but breathe a mute and silent prayer.

Faintly, and infinitely pure, the strains of a hymn peal forth from the chimes of a nearby church. Listen,

"Silent Night, Holy Night,
All is calm, all is bright;
Round yon virgin Mother and Child;
Holy infant, so tender and mild;
Sleep in heavenly peace;
Sleep in heavenly peace. . . ."

In reverie my mind's eye can almost see the sleeping town—fair Bethlehem. On the hill nearby are shepherds tending their sheep. In the moonlight they can barely catch the soft white glimmer of the houses that lie spread out in the valley below. In their hearts lies an old, old burden. Would Messiah ever come? And so the tale goes on . . . a sudden brilliance . . . an angel's voice . . . the majesty of heaven's choir . . . the sudden silence . . . the quaking in the shepherds' breasts . . . and on "to Bethlehem."

As they enter the lowly stall, I follow too. Behold, He lies in a manger—a little child! They say His name is Jesus. They are calling Him that because He is to be the Savior. The Savior . . . this little babe a Savior?

With the quickness of thought I see the babe, now no longer a babe, walking the roads of Galilee. Ever working, living, teaching, giving, He busily seeks to win the hearts of men. Sometimes they hail Him, sometimes they rail Him, yet ever the same is He. I see Him treading the last long way to Jerusalem. I see Him in the garden—alone! I see Him under beating rods! I see Him dying—for me!

Ever so gently I feel a caressing snowflake on my face, and then another, and another. Slowly I am brought back to reality as the last lines of the hymn reach my ear.

". . . Christ the Savior is born;
Christ the Savior is born."

It is Christmas, and somehow I feel as though the shepherds have beckoned me to Bethlehem. In that call, however, it seems there was a stronger call, a deeper meaning. I feel as though the Savior himself was inviting me to His manger and also to His cross, there to show me anew His love and His power to forgive and to purify. He cleanses white as snow.

As I wend my way homeward through the billowed snow, I know I have been to Bethlehem. There is new zeal in my heart for I have caught the true spirit of Christmas.

Come, "let us now go even unto Bethlehem" and unto the Savior.

So Few Were Wise

There were so few that night who saw Thy star!
Oh Christ—so few were wise enough . . . Instead
Men went about their usual busy ways,
Unheeding as before, with lowered head.

So selfishly enjoying all life's good,
Its heights of happiness, its beauties, love—
Accepting all ungratefully, as due!
Forgetting God! So few cast eyes above.

Some were perhaps too burdened with their cares,
Too weary to look up into the night,
And some were blinded by their sins, or shame;
While tears of grief for others dimmed the light!

The centuries have wrought but little change,
Still blindly selfish is the world today,
So few are wise enough to seek the King.
To heed the signs, and walk the Starled way!

Comes the Year to Christmas

Carol—Tune: "Now the Day Is Over"

Comes the year to Christmas
Jacob's well o'erflows
Eden's joy returning,
Blooms the Sharon Rose.

Morn of peace and mildness,
Heav'n embracing earth
Angels downward winging,
Hail the Savior's birth.

Black man—white man—brothers—
Now as one adore
East and West together
Learn to war no more.

Prayer of ages answered,
Hush, God's children, hush
Lo, the infant Jesus,
'Stead of burning bush!

Because Christ Came

When Christ was born, manhood was not esteemed. A foreigner was an enemy. To the Greeks, all other men were barbarians; to Romans, they were slaves; to the Jews, they were dogs. The Jews are reported as saying: "Other nations are like spittle, and a single Israelite is worth more in God's sight than all the nations of the world." But now, thanks to what went on nineteen hundred years ago on that wonderful night, men are coming to a sense of the equality of all mankind the whole world over. No man who believes that God came in human flesh can despise any human creature. In our hearts we believe that doctrine to be true, and the day is not far distant when we shall act as though it were true, that the purpose of God in redemption is the restoration of lost man into the image of God.

I

When Christ came into the world, most men were slaves, and the slave was nothing but a piece of property. The Romans had a law that exacted the penalty of death from a man who killed a plowing ox, but if a man murdered his slave, he was called to no account whatever. Trajan, one of the best Romans of his day, made ten thousand slaves fight in the arena simply for the amusement of the people, and the ghastly spectacle went on day after day for one hundred and twenty-three days. Now and then, some philosopher like Seneca would say that it seemed unnatural for one human being to own another. Now and then, some good man would urge the merciful treatment of slaves. But the fact stands that when Christ was born there were slaves everywhere. Sometimes they were far the larger part of the community. Gibbon tells us that under Claudius the slave population of the empire was equal to the free —sixty million free people and sixty million slaves. And a slave was often amazingly cheap. The ninety-seven thousand Jews sold by Titus after the capture of Jerusalem brought less than Judas got when he sold his Lord. Often fine young men and young women were bought and sent into the fields and worked to death, because it was cheaper to buy more slaves than it was to feed those one already had.

Then Christ came and His message laid stress on the value of a man simply as a man. Slaves were welcomed into Christian congregations. Prayers for slaves were inserted in the litanies. The emancipation of slaves was encouraged. First the slave's soul was emancipated, and then his body was set free. Under Christian tuition, the world has come to say that no matter what a man's rank or lack of rank, no matter what his wealth or poverty, no matter what his culture or ignorance, a man's a man.

II

When Christ came, childhood was little esteemed. Cicero spoke as though it was the general feeling and the perfectly natural feeling that if a child died young it was no cause for grief, and if it died in the cradle it was a matter of entire unconcern. No doubt there were some in that day whose children were a pride and joy to them, and, if the child was weak or sick, there were some whose hearts were all the tenderer and more compassionate toward the helpless little creature. But that was by no means common. If children were not acceptable, they might be exposed on the mountainside to death, or might even be sold into slavery. The power to decree a child's death was vested in the father.

Now, every child's life is as sacred as an adult's. Christ was the discoverer of the value of childhood. He took a child and set it in the midst of His disciples, and the child has been in the center of Christian life ever since. Only under Christian civilization could a great teacher say as Froebel did, "Come, let us live for our children." That is what we do today, when we are at our best.

III

When Christ was born, womanhood was not esteemed. Aristotle looked upon woman as halfway between freeman and slaves. Plato thought so little of woman's love that he thought the race ought to have their wives in common. Pericles said that a woman's glory was that no one should speak of her. Metullus, the Roman censor, one of Rome's most honored men, declared in a public oration that if nature allowed man to exist without woman, he would have been spared a most troublesome companion, and that when men married they sacrificed their comfort for the public good. Woman, thus trodden under foot, retaliated in the character she developed.

Christ came and sanctified womanhood by being born of a woman. He had women among His devoted followers. He accepted their service. As soon as Christian congregations were formed, women were active among them. When persecution raged, women were among the noblest martyrs. The effect was immediate. Women's character and her moral aspirations were lifted at once and became permanently high, so that when Libanus, a brilliant and cultured pagan teacher, saw the mothers and sisters of some of his pupils, he said: "What women these Christian have!" The high position to which Christ lifted women has never been lost. Christ did so much for women that it gives one a sort of a shock to look upon a woman not a Christian.

IV

When Christ was born, war was the normal condition of nations. He said, "Blessed are the peacemakers." But that was not acceptable teaching then. Even Plato, who was as good a man as seen outside the Bible, had no good word for men who loved peace. He looked upon that as degeneracy.

Film Review

IN THE FACE OF JEOPARDY, 16 mm., black and white or color, Religious Film Libraries, 220 W. Monroe, Chicago, Illinois, rental $8.00 and $12.00.

This film depicts the struggle that is going on in Southeast Asia between Christianity and Communism. Doug Crane, an American tin miner in that area, is concerned primarily with his work rather than with the function of missions. His houseboy, Ah Chin, saves the life of Doug Crane as the communist bandits attempt to take his life. In discussing the reason for saving Doug Crane's life, Ah Chin reveals to him that he did this because he was a Christian. Doug Crane does not understand the source of the peace and courage that Ah Chin possesses in the midst of personal danger.

Doug Crane is acquainted with Phil Johnson, a missionary in this part of the world, and goes to him to discuss the source of the kind of faith which Ah Chin possesses. They visit the village from which Ah Chin came and meet the missionary there and see some of the mission work. As Doug Crane and the missionary approach Doug Crane's home they discover that Ah Chin has been killed by the Communist bandits. Doug Crane too has now discovered the source of a faith which enables a person to live triumphantly in the face of jeopardy.

The committee recommends this film very highly to be used particularly by groups from high school age on up. It is a film which poses situations which are beyond the experience and comprehension of people younger than the high school age.

Silent Night! Holy Night!

Silent night! Holy night!
All is calm, all is bright,
'Round yon Virgin Mother and Child!
Holy Infant, so tender, and mild,
Sleep in heavenly peace,
Sleep in heavenly peace.

Silent night! Holy night!
Shepherds quake at the sight,
Glories stream from heaven afar,
Heav'nly hosts sing, "Alleluia;"
Christ, the Saviour, is born!
Christ, the Saviour, is born!

Silent night! Holy night!
Son of God, love's pure light,
Radiant beams from Thy holy face,
With the dawn of redeeming grace,
Jesus Lord, at Thy birth,
Jesus Lord, at Thy birth.

Flashes of Thought

Thanksgiving Afterglow

Walter Gering

That little piece of bread—the longer I held it the more loudly it spoke. It was one of those occasions when conversation flows freely. We had just completed an abundant meal and were now sitting around the table in happy Christian fellowship.

Strange, is it not how some of the finest visits are made during those moments at the table after all have been satisfied. There is a warm glow of friendliness which bursts forth into flame as hearts open to each other. So it was on this occasion. We represented various countries and professions. India, China, and the United States were represented; missionaries, nurse, housewife, Sunday school teacher, minister—all these were knit together in this circle of friendship.

We were still in the afterglow of the Thanksgiving season. Everywhere homes had been lighted up brightly and the festive spirit prevailed everywhere. Students and friends had come home for the holiday bringing a note of gladness into the home and community. While Thanksgiving Day was officially over we were still in the spirit of the season.

Then suddenly there appeared that piece of bread. From hand to hand it passed around the table. Each one passed it on; no one tasted it nor even made any pretence of being interested in partaking of it. There was only one piece. But that was not the reason for passing it on; it was not the desire to be polite which left it untouched.

You see, this was "beggar's bread." It was hard as a stone. Only by soaking in hot water or milk for some time would it be edible. Even then it would be only a beggar's portion to be cast at their feet in contempt. To be sure, it was nutritious. It did have food value for the nourishment of the body. But not one of us desired to even taste it. This was for beggars in China.

Almost instinctively my fingers again picked up this unwanted, stony piece of bread. How strange—how accusing it looked in the presence of the overabundance of our Thanksgiving table. Sobered by the thought the piece took on new meaning. No longer mere "beggar's bread" it became a symbol of God's goodness and abundant mercy to us who were no more worthy than beggars.

LORD, GIVE US THANKFUL HEARTS

"How silently, how silently
The wondrous gift is given.
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of his heaven.
No ear may hear his coming,
But in this world of sin
Where meek souls will receive him, still
The dear Christ enters in."

Relief in Jordan

For five years MCC has worked among the Arab refugees in Jordan. These people had fled from their homes for temporary safety during the warfare in 1948. Then when Palestine was partitioned, nearly one million Arabs could not return to their homes. Half of them became refugees in Egypt, Syria, Lebanon, and the Gaza strip; about one-half million congregated in the camps, towns, and villages in the hilly part of Palestine or Trans-Jordan which remained for the Arabs.

The Arab refugees have not been paid for the properties they lost nor for the money which some of them had in the banks of Palestine. Very few of them can find employment. Resettlement possibilities on the land are limited by the lack of water; commerce is difficult because the partitioning left Jordan without a readily accessible seaport; and Jordan is not an industrial country. The refugees can only wait in the camps, hoping for an answer to their plight; hoping justice will bring them some compensation for the loss of their homes and livelihood.

Since 1950, therefore, MCC has been trying to help these people. During the past year this work has included:

Clothing Distribution. About 50,000 persons received some clothing. Each family receives a bundle according to the number and ages of the members of the family. The plan is for each person to receive two basic garments a year. This does not adequately supply the need, but it is all that is available. Christmas bundles are also distributed to some of the poorest children.

Clothing distribution can be rather discouraging, for no permanent improvement in conditions seems visible. A refugee's clothing wears out faster than we can replace it. But on the other hand, conditions would certainly be much worse if it were not for such clothing gifts.

Distributing Surplus Foods. This spring and summer MCC co-operated with three other American relief agencies to distribute American surplus foods—butter and cheese. The Mennonites distributed in the southeast desert area of Jordan. About 10,000 families of non-refugees who had been cut off from their farm and grazing land in Israeli territory were also included.

Sewing Classes for the Women. Each week about six different sewing classes are held in Jericho for the benefit of expectant mothers who come to sew layettes. The Mennonite sewing circles in the U.S. and Canada supply much of the material for these projects.

Over thirty girls regularly attend a class in embroidery. The articles they complete are sold to tourists and the girls are paid for their work.

Some of the refugee ladies in Jericho also meet weekly to sew garments for especially poor in the

Christmas Bridges

HERE'S MY CHRISTMAS PRESENT FOR AN ORPHAN IN KOREA—or for a refugee child in Austria or a blind girl in Jordan perhaps. The distance between this American Mennonite child and the needy children pictured here is being bridged many times during this Christmas season as Mennonite relief workers distribute Goodwill Christmas Bundles. There are many "ah's" and "oh's" as children inspect the contents of the bundles wrapped in brightly-colored towels. There are smiles from faces with eyes that cannot see and there are parents with tears rolling down their cheeks because they are so glad their children have some Christmas. And there are boys and girls for whom these bundles are their first Christmas gifts. These are also joyous days for the relief workers who tell the recipients of the bundles that American boys and girls prepared because of their love for the Christ of Christmas. This year boys and girls in Austria, England, Formosa, France, Germany, Holland, Hong Kong, Java, Jordan, and Korea are hearing the story of Christ—thanks to the nearly 28,000 Christmas bundles prepared in His name. Gratitude from Germany

Dear unknown givers:

The Mennonite Central Committee has done a lot of good in all quietness through work projects, neighborhood centers, and the distribution of relief goods. It gives us a deep feeling of gratitude that we too who are working for non-recognized refugees have been helped by your organization.

But now I will have to explain first to our friends in America what non-recognized refugees are. I am sure you know that since several years people from the Soviet Zone of Germany have been coming into the Federal Republic seeking shelter. Thus a continuous flow of people from the East to the West is to be registered. Most of them cannot flee to West Germany. They seek refuge in West Berlin, "the isle in the Red Sea," which can be reached from the Soviet Zone rather easily. An average of 500 people register daily in West Berlin.

Here they have to prove that they have been in a special political calamity and danger. Then they are recognized and arrangements are made to take them to West Germany.

It is an altogether different matter, however, with those refugees who are not able to prove a special political oppression. They remain in West Berlin as non-recognized refugees; have the right for asylum but not for work, lodging, or voting. At the present time there are about 40,000 of these non-recognized refugees living in West Berlin. A small portion is living in camps, but the greater part are in settlements which are built like apartment houses. Others live in a poorly furnished room, in basements, huts, or somewhere in the attic.

More than 80 per cent of all refugees are members of the Protestant church. They need assistance and help from the Word of God. In the camps the camp pastors take care of the non-recognized refugees. But it is difficult to reach those in the settlements and especially in private lodgings. The non-recognized refugees often feel bitter. They are as people without a country, as outlaws. And only in a few cases do they themselves try to contact a church community.

Thus we have organized a group of lay brothers who visit these people. Right now we have 30 lay brothers who each take care of several church congregations. All these lay brothers are unemployed men, refugees and pensioners themselves, but they are closely connected with their church and have a strong and firm faith.

When visiting these people the lay brothers find great material need. When leaving the East the refugees could hardly save anything of their property. If they live in private apartments they can only receive the very small amount of social security. Furniture, house equipment, underwear, and clothes—everything is missing. For quite a long time the refugees received their food from a central kitchen and only a little pocket money was handed out to them monthly. They almost forgot how to handle money. Thus there is always a danger of spending too quickly the money they get.

In all these cases the lay brother cannot approach the people with Bible verses only. The treatment for soul and body cannot be separated. The people have to see and to feel that the word of Christ's love and of charity is something real. Only then can the conversation about spiritual things be fruitful and credible. Only then can a real contact with the church congregation and with the gospel be possible.

Quite a large amount of clothing and food stuffs donated by the Mennonite Central Committee has enabled our lay brothers to give refugees what they need most urgently. If only all the unknown donors could see once with how much joy and gratitude everything is accepted. The material things should never become the center of our work, but they can become a sign pointing out the possibility of starting life anew, of a new start under God's order. Especially the non-recognized refugees—who have lost everything they had owned so far and for whom the future is dark and uncertain—are looking for a firm and sound basis on which they can start a new life.

We wish that all the givers of the MCC could feel some of the deep gratitude and the good wishes with which the non-recognized refugees of Berlin—whom we are able to serve here through your relief work—remember them.

When Christ was Born

The stars were silent and the hills
Stood dark against the sky,
When Mary rode to Bethlehem
With Joseph walking by.

To David's town of Bethlehem,
Full many years ago,
Came down the everlasting God
To find a manger low.

The Angels stood in ranks of eight,
The stars together sang,
When Christ was born the little hills
With God's high rapture rang.

Today we apologize for war. Ruskin called war imbecility. We agree with him. Soon wars will be over forever. Our Lord will return and put an end to all wars. It is true that the love of peace grows slowly, but it has grown, and that we have it at all is due to the fact that Jesus Christ was born so many years ago.

Many Christmases

ROBERT RAMSEYER
Missionary, Honshu Island, Japan

"Kurisumasu? Ah, yes of course. It is a great American holiday. It comes in the last part of the year I believe."

This could be the reply of almost any non-Christian Japanese, and it is one which is essentially true, for this is one variety of Christmas. Christmas is many things to many different people. There is not one Christmas, but many different Christmases. This man's answer describes one of them.

Catalog Christmas

This is the Christmas of the Sears' Christmas Catalog and the department store window, of Santa Claus and the red-nosed reindeer. America has done an excellent job of exporting this Christmas all over the world. Here in Japan, Santa Claus is everywhere in the cities. In fact this year already in October he had begun to rear his snowy head. The radio urges us to ship our gift packages soon or they will not be home by Christmas. This is the Christmas of gifts and good fellowship; the greatest holiday in America. This it is, should it be more?

Habitual Christmas

There is another Christmas. It might be called the Christmas of too many good Christians.

This is the Christmas of many of us who would say, "Yes, there should be more. The Christmas of the Sears' Catalog is not enough. There should be Christmas programs in the schools and in the churches, with little children singing praises to the Christ Child and reciting verses from the Bible. There should be Christmas caroling in the streets on a snowy evening. There should be manger scenes in the houses and stars on top of Christmas trees."

This is the Christmas of us who are careful to see that Christmas is kept as a fine Christian day, who are careful that Christ is kept in Christmas. It is a fine Christmas. Most of us know it very well. It is the usual Christmas of us who grow up in fine Christian homes and are active in the Church of Jesus Christ. We know that Christmas is a Christian day, we do not forget that it is the birthday of Jesus who is the Christ.

We do not have to remember to keep Christ in Christmas. We do it habitually and automatically, and herein lies the rub. Christmas has become very much of a habit for us. We have celebrated it every year for as long as we can remember. The year would not seem complete without Christmas. Christmas is a time for remembering the birth of the Christ, it is a fine spiritual habit. This it is. Should it be more?

Experienced Christmas

There is still another Christmas which is essentially different from these. It is not a holiday, nor is it a celebration. This Christmas is an event within the soul of man. It is the original Christmas of Bethlehem made real in me. It is God who became man for me, becoming a fact in my own life. This Christmas comes with awe and wonder, surrounded by mystery. Why the sovereign God became man for us, we can never understand, but that He did we can know. This is the Christmas within each soul, the essence of Christmas made real in us.

As I sit here and write of Christmas, I think also of the two fine young people whom we will baptize tomorrow, young people who have broken with the past and formed a completely new life with God through Jesus who is the Christ. These young people have made a great sacrifice in terms of friends and family and have placed all that they have and are before God as He is revealed in God become man, Jesus Christ. They have staked their lives on Christmas.

For these young Christians, Christmas is not a fine spiritual habit. For them Christmas, the coming of Christ, has a new meaning. It is full of awe and mystery. To think that God would humble himself and come to earth as a man in order to save them! Here is the heart of Christmas and here is mystery. Why should God come to earth to suffer as a mortal man for me?

The Greatest of All Mysteries

For Christians to come from foreign lands to tell them of God and to live with them in Japan is itself strange and at first incomprehensible, but then it is after all really normal for men to love each other and this is not so great a mystery. The world in spite of war and hatred knows much of love of man for man. But for God, the Almighty, the Lord of Creation, to come and live with us and to suffer for us, this is all a mystery. It is "a great and mighty wonder." God has done this for me!

Again as I sit here and write of Christmas, I think of the young people in Japan and America and everywhere for whom Christmas is the greatest holiday in the western world—only this and nothing more. That God came to earth for them they do not know. I think of this and pray that soon they may know and believe and trust.

As I sit and think of Christmas, I remember the young people who take the coming of the Christ for granted. For them God's coming in Christ is a fine and happy thing, but they have grown accustomed to it. It is neither awesome nor mysterious. It is like the sunshine and the rain, something which we gladly accept. I think of this and pray that they may be filled with the reality and fulness of what God has done for us in the Christ.

"Kurisumasu?" Yes my friend, it is a great American holiday, the festive high point of every year. It is a time of gifts and good fellowship, of family reunions and Christmas trees. Christmas is a high point in the Christian family and in the Church of Jesus Christ. It is a fine thing to have Christmas plays and children's programs, manger scenes and Christmas stars, caroling in the streets and worship in the home. But Christmas is more than all of these. Christmas is the greatest of all mysteries. Christmas is God become man for me!

New Carols for Christmas

How much Christmas has given to music, and music has given to Christmas, we seldom realize. This season encourages moods and feelings which music is compelled to express; it incites feelings which if developed logically end in music. The mood is often a tender one . . .

> ". . . the Babe in Bethlehem's manger laid, > in humble form so low."

Arising out of it are lullabies and cradle songs . . .

> "Upon my lap my Sovereign sits > and leans upon my breast . . ."

Sometimes it spills into the exuberance of "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen." Behind it all is the aura of mystery . . .

> "What Child is this, who, laid to rest > on Mary's lap is sleeping?"

. . . which the three kings are able to sense, which

PENCIL POINTS

TELL THEM "HELLO"

My conscience troubles me.

A number of moons ago I attended a conference where many of the folks I met instructed me to take home greetings to a mutual friend.

"Tell him I said 'Hello,' " was the instruction easily given and lightheartedly received.

Now I am in a pickle. I can't remember who said to hello whom. Racking my gnarled brain, I hear echoing through the empty corridors of my mind the words, "Tell him I said 'hello . . . hello . . . hello . . . .' " The voice is familiar, but I don't recognize the face.

My problem may be similar to that of my friend, the pastor of the Last Mennonite Church who came to me and said, "Everyone I met at conference said to tell you 'hello.' I can't remember who they all are, but in order to get it over with I'll give it to you in one big," and here he leaned back to give his diaphragm fuller expansion, "HELLO."

To bring some order out of this chaos of unsystematic salutation sending I have purposed to prepare a hello-book for all sensitive souls who have not mastered the art of remembering who said hello to whom. This book would have two columns: one for the name of the "hello-er"; and one for the name of the "hello-ee."

As greetings are given to be shared with absent friends, the proper notations could be quickly made. My nose may ever after be continually in this book looking for the names of people whom I had vowed to accost, but at least I would finally rid myself of that gleeful yet haunting voice that rings in my cranium.

I must ask you to withhold your orders for this book for at least six months until I am able to raise sufficient capital to print this aid to civilization's progress and boon to all salutation bearers.

Until that time you may wish to study a rather ancient and unique hello-book that has been in circulation a number of years, from which we may gain a number of suggestions for our production. While the supply of the Bible is limited in some sections of the world, you may find it in most bookstores if you do not already possess a copy.

In checking this book you will notice that one of the central events described in this volume is an incident called the Incarnation, which is frequently remembered in our world today in spite of a holiday known as Christmas.

Defined in its simplest terms it means that God sent His Son to sinful man with greetings. While my friends may not take too seriously the greetings they convey through me, God took the sending of these messages of love through Christ quite soberly.

For the folks He was greeting all feared that they might have to live apart from God because of their sins—a condition which we certainly deserved. But with the coming of Jesus Christ to earth the greetings He bore can be hailed with jubilant rejoicing. It means that God remembers us and wants us back. It means that we can pass from a death-like kind of life to real life.

This may be severe over-simplification, I admit, but if you will allow only a slight stretching of a point, we can well believe that when the Father dispatched the Son to the dark world of mankind He gave this final reminder, "Tell them I said, 'Hello.' " the shepherds quake at. It is an underlying fact. Music is especially able to convey it that way.

NEW CAROLS FOR CHRISTMAS

Look at the vast amount of Christmas music. Each season impresses some previously unknown carol into our minds. And the short season is a kind of guarantee against its losing its freshness. Should we unwittingly confine ourselves to familiar carols, this freshness and vitality which is characteristic will pound at our senses until they open. If, for instance, Bach's Christmas Oratorio lies among the unknown, it will sometime arouse us in a way that is as unexplainable as the reason for its being . . .

> "Break forth, O beauteous heavenly light > and usher in the morning!"

Penetrating our lethargy, the Coventry Carol sings its "Lullay" with a shifting and quaintly-flavored harmony. We come upon a lonely boy who sings "Touro-louro-louro" into the snow which zigzags through the cold air, cheering himself on a pilgrimmage to Bethlehem by night. The symbols remain—starry night, simple shepherds, rich kings, the cradle. The story takes many turns, joins with the spontaneous expression that becomes folk music; it may be a majestic treatment of Scripture itself; it takes us back to Bethlehem or brings the manger to us; time and place become irrelevant in the retelling of this story.

Perhaps Christmas is more than other seasons a time of buoyant spirit, and a time of intense feeling instead of intense thinking. It is made to order for singing.

Because Christmas has called for the best from music—has drawn from the ultimate source of all genuine music, the heart of mankind—that which we sing around the piano and beneath windows in the snow, that which we listen to in performance, has durable qualities. But what we want to do is not necessarily to account for origins. More than that we want to take stock of what music's peculiar ability has given to us, and to look again at the extra dimension it adds, and will add, to this truth.

Christmas waits again to sing itself and we have the good fortune to be able to sing with it.

> "This Child now weak in infancy
> Our confidence and joy shall be;
> The power of Satan breaking,
> Our peace eternal making."

Students who are members of the Lima symphony are: Larry Conrad, Connie Diller, Marvin Dirks, Jr., Dorothy Garwood, Marjorie Rose, and Charles Spencer.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

Nick Friesen of Aldergrove, B. C., who has been doing evangelistic work throughout Manitoba, stopped in for a visit on November 23. He challenged us with the great possibilities for Christian service now available in northern B. C. For three days, Nov. 25, 28, and 29. A. J. Schulz, a retired minister from Kitchener, Ontario, brought us the chapel message. He also showed us some of his relics from Palestine and Africa.

The male octet led by G. Wiebe made its second visit Thursday, Nov. 24, when they brought a program at Steinbach. Henry Poettcker, one of our instructors, brought the message. Pres. I. I. Friesen has not been teaching his classes this week as he is attending the Council of Boards at Newton, Kansas. Two members of our student body have also been in Newton this week at the YPU cabinet meeting; Peter Letkeman, representing our college and Peter Klassen, the Ontario Youth Organization.

The annual Christmas Concert will be presented on December 11 in the First Mennonite Church, corner of Alverstone and Notre Dame at 7:30 p.m.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Founders' Day Festivities were celebrated at Freeman Junior College on December 14. Dr. Robert Kreider of Bluffton, Ohio, was the speaker of the day. He spent 1946-1949 in Europe in the service of MCC and CRALOG. Both in European Universities and at the University of Chicago he has done research work on the early Anabaptists. As a young Mennonite scholar he is well qualified to speak on occasions of this nature .

The morning program started at 10:30 while the afternoon session began at 2:00. Dr. Kreider spoke at both meetings. The college music department under the direction of Walter Jost rendered appropriate selections for both of these sessions. During the noon hour the college was host to all guests at a noon luncheon in the dining hall. The Museum and the Library were open for inspection during the noon hour.

At 8:00 p.m. the academy choir and the band gave a joint concert in Pioneer Hall. They are under the direction of James Faul. This was the first concert appearance of the year for the 68 voice choir and the 31 piece band. In order to promote the instrumental program at Freeman, a freewill offering was taken which will be used to add some much needed band instruments and equipment.

50 ENROLL IN EUROPEAN MENNONITE BIBLE SCHOOL

Fifty students enrolled in the European Mennonite Bible School at Basel, Switzerland, when it opened Nov. 20.

The school has grown rapidly from its beginning with 27 students and a four-week term in 1950. Now, in its sixth year, the term will be ten weeks and the enrollment has almost doubled.

The European Bible School is a co-operative venture of French, German, Swiss, and North American Mennonites through MCC. It is an unprecedented development in Europe to see students and teachers from various Mennonite churches and different countries study and learn together. In its training young people as workers in European churches, the school offers courses in Bible study, church history, Sunday school and youth work and the mission of the church.

Brother Cornelius Wall, who with his wife recently visited many Mennonite churches in Canada and United States, is again principal of the school.

MCC IN INDONESIA IN 1955

Since the beginning of MCC work in Indonesia, the clinic program in Java has been the major project. In addition to this, the MCC has been giving some assistance to the Javanese and Chinese churches in Java and to the small Mennonite church in Sumatra. This past year we also began relief work on the island of Celebes in East Indonesia.

THE MEDICAL CLINICS

Until August of this year we operated three medical clinics in three different parts of the Muria Mountain area. During the busiest time these clinics examined and treated as many as 6,000 patients per month. Although these clinics are located in Christian villages, most of the patients are Moslem. Through the help of the local preachers and colportage work we also try to give a direct witness to Chrirst as our Savior.

Ten Indonesian workers assist the MCC doctor and two nurses in these clinics.

In September the Javanese Church took over the one clinic at Margoredjo. With the two extra days per week this gives us, we plan to go from school to school examining and treating the children for eye ailments and diseases. This section of Java is a heavy trachoma area.

RELIEF WORK IN CELEBES

In February MCC began investigating the situation in Celebes, the island east of Borneo. For about five years Celebes has been in a state of civil war. Bands of rebels have crippled the island, harmed the economy, burned the houses and ruined the crops of thousands of innocent people. The area of heaviest rebel activity is around the port of Palopo in south Celebes. There is a large Christian church in this area. There are about 93,000 refugees and the majority of them are Christians.

In June an MCC shipment of 100 bales of clothing and 30 cases of soap arrived for these refugees. A shipment of 120 cases of beef and chicken is now being forwarded on to Palopo. In this program of relief MCC is working with Church World Service which is supplying milk and medicines and paying the administrative costs of the program. The distributions in Palopo are in charge of a Dutch doctor and an able Indonesian Christian.

ASSISTANCE TO NATIVE CHURCHES

MCC is grateful for the fellowship with Javanese and Chinese Christians here. To help these churches, MCC has been giving some support to the Javanese Theological School in Pati and their parochial schools. They also help to support several young people as they study now in preparation for future church work. Herman and Jo Tan who spent several years studying in American Mennonite schools have recently returned to Java. They will be working in the Chinese Church.

FUTURE PLANS

In the near future Leonard Kingsley and family of Berne, Ind., will join the unit in Indonesia. Brother Kingsley will do agricultural work on the island of Timor in East Indonesia. In response to requests from the Timorese Church and other churches in East Indonesia, there is a proposal to send six PAX men to East Indonesia to join Kingsley as an agricultural team.

ADMINISTRATIVE ASISTANT FOR VS

Arlene Sitler, Hespeler, Ont., recently returned from MCC assignment in Korea and is now assisting the Voluntary Service Section at Akron headquarters. She is an administrative assistant in charge of the summer Voluntary Service program.

While in Korea Arlene was on loan to the Christian Children's Fund as an administrator of the Korea program.

In the evening he discussed alternate service and military trends in light of his experiences in Washington. At the November meeting of the Missionary Society, Mrs. Ivy Dobbie spoke of mental health as she knew it from her work at the Elkhart County Mental Health Center. The Union Thanksgiving service of Nappanee was held in our church. Speaker was Thomas Douglas of Mt. Tabor Church of God. The special Thanksgiving offerings were: children—school supplies for MCC young people—YPU projects; adults—for Camp Friedenswald.—Elva May Schrock, Corr.

—First Church, Allentown, Pa.: We are very happy to announce that David Habegger has graciously accepted our call to become the pastor of our church. He will be with us about Jan. 1, 1956. J. Harold Sherk, who is in charge of the Peace Section of the MCC in Akron, Pa., and Vernon Neufeld, who is attending Princeton University, have been supplying our pulpit. On Oct. 30, John H. Purves of Brook Lane Farm, brought us a message and told of the work there, the need for expansion and better facilities. Oct. 9, Miss Anna Boerg, missionary to the Hopi Indians in Arizona, spoke at our evening service. Nov. 13, Aron Jantzen, Supt. of the Leper Home in Champa, India, home on furlough, told of the work there, and during the Sunday school session showed slides of the home. A letter from the Maynard Shellys, (former pastor) reveals that they are enjoying the work and life at Newton, Kan.—Mrs. Francis Geisinger, Corr.

—Friedensfeld Church, Turpin, Okla.: We had a wonderful Christian Endeavor program based on Thanksgiving. The committee had gone to extra work putting up a Thanksgiving scene of a couple "giving thanks" as they were seated at the table. All lights were out, but the spotlight on the scene, and a Thanksgiving hymn was played by Miss Jay Dirks. Thanksgiving morning we had breakfast together at the church. The service was held around the table. After eating the rolls and drinking coffee or cocoa, almost each one expressed their "thanks" to God in poem, song, with a Bible verse, or whatever was in their heart. There were about eighty-five present. Nov. 30 was the big Christmas parade in Liberal, Kan. There were twenty-three floats of "Scenes from the Life of Christ," and twenty-three bands participating.—Mrs. Chester Windsor, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kan.: Leonore Friesen, missionary from Japan, spoke during the Sunday school hour, Nov. 20. The Sunday school junior department brought their mission banks which amounted to $128.26. During our regular morning service, J. E. Hartzler spoke on "The Everlasting Hills," stating that if we get high enough in our spiritual life the line fences of denominationalism will disappear. After the fellowship meal the young people had charge of the afternoon service, having as guest speaker Miss Helen Kornelsen of India, and William Gering, youth worker. Miss Kornelsen challenged youth to "come to India and help" and also stated that "by being a better Christian at home you will be missionary to all. Who, then, is willing to consecrate his service to the Lord?" William Gering based his message on Matt. 28:19 and Acts 1:8. Nov. 20-25 at 7:30 each evening, J. E. Hartzler showed pictures of his world travels and at 8 o'clock based his message on "Basic Christian Beliefs." Thursday morning his topic was "Our National Thanksgiving." Two members were taken into our church fellowship, Nov. 27.—Mrs. Walter Lindteigen, Corr.

—Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio: Members of the Women's Christian Service and Mennonite League served breakfast to twenty-five of the Middletown Council of Churches on Nov. 3. Following the breakfast the Women's Christian Service held its regular meeting and had an all-day sewing in the social rooms of the church. Mrs. Wright and Mrs. Beatty were hostesses and served a delicious lunch during the noon hour. Wednesday, Nov. 9, the choir and the Mennonite League held a coffee klatch and bazaar. The junior choir under the leadership of Francis Howe, occupied the choir loft on Sunday, Nov. 6, and gave a special number. On Sunday, Nov. 27, the annual Thanksgiving service was held. Marvin Dirks of Mennonite Biblical Seminary was the guest speaker. The offering was given to the Seminary. In the evening Prof. Dirks, accompanied by his son who is a student at Bluffton College, gave a sacred concert. The Mennonite Brotherhood sponsored the project of putting on siding on the home of shut-ins, members of the church. The senior and junior choirs are busy preparing for the Christmas program.—Edna M. Kinsinger, Corr.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pa.: On Sunday afternoon, Sept. 18, we held our very first meeting in the new church to give everyone an opportunity to see the progress that is being made. Reports from the different committees were given including a report on the building fund campaign. There was a short program and a time of fellowship. Since that time, work has been continuing rapidly on the new church building. The lawn has been graded and work on the interior is moving along toward completion. The date for the services of dedication has not yet been decided upon but we are anticipating one of our former pastors, the Reverend Olin Krehbiel of Berne, Indiana, to be with us for that happy occasion. Miss Anna Baerg, missionary to the Hopi Indians of Arizona, was with us for a missionary service on Wednesday evening, Oct. 19. Our annual thank offering was received and dedicated to the Lord on Sunday morning, Nov. 20, which was designated as Stewardship Sunday. We joined with the other churches in Lansdale for the annual union Thanksgiving Day services on Thanksgiving Day morning. Pastor Friesen brought the message of the morning. We have two worship services each Sunday morning; the first at 8:15 and the second at 10:30. Our choirs are busy preparing a Christmas Cantata to be given Sunday evening, Dec. 18. The annual Christmas program of the Sunday school will be held Sunday evening, Dec. 25.—Corr.

—First Mennonite Church, Bluffton, Ohio: The messages brought to us by Dr. George Gibson, McCormick Theological Seminary at our annual Bible lectures, were much appreciated. The two day conference for the Ministers' and the Women's Missionary Conference were also a great inspiration to all who attended. At the annual thank offering of the Women's Missionary Society Nov. 20, we were privileged to hear Mrs. Andrew Shelly relate experiences on our mission fields during an extended tour during the last year. Week Day Religious Education classes from the elementary schools gave a very fine program Wednesday afternoon before Thanksgiving Day. Mrs. Verne Walker is the teacher. Union Thanksgiving services were held in the Church of Christ this year with W. J. Hannum, pastor of the Presbyterian Church as the speaker. Thursday night, Dec. 1, Andre Trocme, pastor of the Reformed Church of France, and traveling secretary of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, spoke in our church. Dec. 4 there was a union service in Founders' Hall, preceded by a potluck supper at 6:30. The worship was informal with each of the participating churches contributing some special number. Dec. 8 the annual Christmas meeting of all the women's groups of our church was held in the church basement. This year the Friendship Circle was in charge of the program. The real true spirit of Christmas is ushered into our community with the rendition of Handel's "Messiah" by the Bluffton Choral Society. Prof. Russell Lantz, head of the music department at the college is the director. Many from the surrounding community participate.—Mrs. B. D. Smucker, Corr.

Into the Beyond

MARIE DELIA (MRS. PAUL) DAHLENBURG, of Avon, South Dakota, and member of the Friedensberg Church of Avon, was born February 9, 1878, and died November 19, 1955.

RELIEF IN JORDAN

orphanages or other institutions. They deliver these garments in person.

Orphanage for Boys at Hebron. Fourteen orphan or very poor boys about first grade age were cared for during the past year. This year fourteen more first graders will be admitted. This is one of the long range projects.

Workers Loaned to Other Agencies. Mennonite doctors, nurses, office workers and teachers are loaned to other agencies which have hospitals or schools for the refugees.

Prospectus. As the 17 MCC workers look forward to another year of service in Jordan they find a perplexing challenge. The needs here are for long-term rehabilitation. Finding permanent homes and employment is the primary need. Any training in crafts or skills is useful in leading toward self-support, but it is only a small part compared to the need.

In the meantime, compassion leads Christian people to continue to give food and clothing to relieve immediate suffering. Our presence and help among these people gives assurance that someone is working on their problems. To these who feel deeply the futility of life, we must witness of the One who came that we might have life "more abundantly."

ing the decision of the boards a real step of faith and trust.

But let us hear what the impressions of others were:

> "During attendance at the Council of Boards meetings, again and again I found myself harking back to John's solo in the symphony of the Gospels. "And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not," (1:5). Darkness — yes, especially as one viewed budget deficits. Light greater than the darkness—yes, when we realized that more money had been given up to now than last year by this time in spite of falling prices for produce. Light—yes, in the quiet moments of sharing, hoping, evaluating, and listening to what God hath done. It was and is marvelous in our eyes. The Holy Spirit sends me back to my work strengthened, for the light is greater than the darkness—in our God, in Jesus Christ, in the Conference work, and among the people who do the work and faithfully support it." Loris A. Habegger
> "Every year the Board of Missions faces a tremendous challenge. As we faced the needs of the mission fields of our Conference, and as we prayed, we became more and more aware of the fact that the work of the Board of Missions is a work of faith." John P. Suderman

The Challenge

The evening program on Dec. 4 was held in Memorial Hall where Rev. Olin Krehbiel and Rev. Peter Dyck gave the closing challenge.

Rev. Krehbiel, speaking on "What Did I See" pointed to the following things observed in his visit to Europe. I saw:

1. A vision of Mennonite Co-operation.
2. A vision of the tremendous work of the MCC.
3. A vision of our mission opportunity and responsibility.

Rev. Dyck in a challenging message stated that all of the work entrusted to our Conference could be accomplished if only we had a greater love to Christ.

A New Start

I will start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;
I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;
I will waste no moment whining, and my heart shall know no fear.

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;
I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze.
I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;
I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;
I will cease to preach your duty, and be more concerned with mine.

CHRISTIAN MINISTRY EMPHASIS

January 15 to February 12, 1956, has been designated as a special period of emphasis on the Christian Ministry. Each church is being asked to select the Sunday most convenient to stress this essential phase of the work of the Conference. The Sunday suggested is January 15.

The purpose of this special period is to remind our people of the need of new recruits for the Christian Ministry. This is not to be regarded, however, as an emergency measure. Rather, it is a recognition of the ongoing need in the work of the Church.

It is hoped that young men will feel the call of the Lord. Also, parents are being asked to renew their dedication so that the home and church atmosphere may be such that the Lord can readily call young men into this phase of His service.

NEW DORMITORY NEEDED IN FERNHEIM, PARAGUAY

Since the enrollment in the Zentral Schule of Colony Fernheim in Paraguay has grown to 119, the boys' dormitory is no longer large enough. The Mennonite colonists propose a building which would also include a library room and assembly hall for school activities, devotions, and programs. The present boys' dormitory could then be used for kitchen and dining space. The students are now eating in the colony meeting hall, and there is no library room or assembly hall.

The Zentral Schule in Filadelfia is the high school and normal training school for all the young people in the Chaco colonies. The elementary teachers of the five Paraguay Mennonite colonies are trained here.

It is difficult to raise sufficient capital in Paraguay for this new building. The Paraguay Mennonite leaders have asked whether their North American brethren might be interested in helping them meet possibly half of the total estimated cost, or up to $4,000. Should there be interest in contributing toward this special need, additional information is available from MCC, Akron, Pa.

EIGHT IN VS ORIENTATION

Eight Mennonite young people participated in the Voluntary Service orientation school at Akron, Pa., Nov. 29 to Dec. 16. From this school they scatter to serve in hospitals and among underprivileged groups.

Rubena Barkman, Enid, Okla., will work at Brook Lane, one of the MCC hospitals for the mentally ill; Betty Jane Barkman, Hillsboro, Kan., is going to assist in the kindergarten at Gulfport, Miss. William Gingerich, Plain City, Ohio, and Verne Goering, Moundridge, Kan., had worked with the builders' unit in the tornado disaster area at Cheyenne, Okla. Now William is going to the Maine General Hospital at Portland, Me., and Verne to a hospital in Denver, Colo. Alvin Penner, Inman, Kan., is also going to Denver.

Loren Eden, Valleyford, Wash., had worked during the past summer on the new men's dormitory at Akron headquarters. He is now joining the "normal control" volunteers at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. Meta Ann Janzen, Ritzville, Wash., is temporarily doing secretarial work for the Relief Office at Akron; later she will transfer to Wiltwyck, a school for delinquent boys. Tina Warkentin, Superb, Sask., will join the unit working among the migrants at Coalinga, Calif.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

New mercies, new blessings, new light on thy way,
New courage, new hope, and new strength for each day;
New notes of thanksgiving, new chords of delight,
New praise in the morning, new songs in the night;
New wine in thy chalice, new altars to raise,
New fruits for thy Master, new garments for praise;
New gifts from his treasures, new smiles from his face,
New streams from the fountain of infinite grace;
New stars for thy crown, and new tokens of love,
New gleams of the glory that waits thee above;
New light of his countenance, full and unpriced,
All this be the joy of thy new life in Christ.

—Francis Ridley Havergal

WHAT'S NEW?

We wish all our readers a "Happy New Year." But what do we expect to be new? Certainly more than the year's calendar or a new date to write.

We could cultivate a new sense of concern for the work of Christ's kingdom; a new feeling of responsibility for the spread of the gospel; a new concept of God's will for our personal lives, and a new dedication to that will as revealed.

There could be a new sense of interest and love for our neighbors and fellow men; a new spirit of friendliness for all; and a new sympathy for the problems and troubles of others.

There could be a new spirit in the home; a new appreciation for our dear ones; a new love that would change the atmosphere of many a home that has fallen into the rut of merely taking each other for granted.

We could acquire new courage for the tasks ahead; a new assurance of the help of God in meeting life; a new strength as our feeble strength is joined to His limitless might.

We could develop a new faith in God; a new trust in His unfailing love; a new appreciation for His forgiveness; and a new gratitude for all His goodness. A new and wholehearted loyalty to Christ would result in a new life.

The New Year could be Happy if we determined to make it really New.

Happy New Year!

The Young People's Union of the General Conference Mennonite Church presents—

A Calendar for Prayer

The 1956 YPU Prayer Calendar is off the press. Soon if it has not happened already, this calendar will be handed to you by your minister or your young people's leader.

Why do we have another YPU Prayer Calendar? Surely we are all convinced that Christian young people need to cultivate the spiritual aspects of their lives. We are just as convinced that there is much power in the applied prayers of Christian youth. The YPU Prayer Calendar is to aid and to stimulate in both of these areas. Through the suggested Scripture readings our periods of meditation can be enriched, and through the prayer guides, the concentrated, simultaneous prayers of over twelve thousand young people can be brought to bear upon the various phases of our life and environment.

As soon as you get your calendar, look it over! For each month you will find a general motto and a general theme. For each month you will also find a little calendar which stresses a certain specific prayer area for each day of the week.

There will also be a Scripture reading for each day, which, as much as possible, has been harmonized with the prayer suggestion for that day. On each page there is also some room for your personal prayer memos. On the back cover you will find some vital information about your Young People's Union. This, we hope, will help you pray more efficiently for your YPU program.

On January the first take your Prayer Calendar, put it into your personal Bible, and then use it once a day, every day, throughout 1956! Each day, remind yourself first of the theme for the month, and also of the prayer theme for the day. Then turn to the Bible passage indicated in the Calendar, and use it as a meditative reading. After that, as you pray, remember all your personal concerns (some of which you may have jotted down on the prayer memo) but please remember also to pray, at least briefly, for the areas suggested in the Calendar for that day. In this way it can become a very helpful tool in some part of your devotional life, as well as a blessing to the work at large. This Prayer Calendar has been produced for you and for me. It is ours, so let us use it wisely and faithfully.

A special "thanks" goes to all those people who have helped to produce this Calendar. Some worked out the Scripture selections, others edited them, and still others have helped with the mailing. A special word of appreciation should go also to the printers, D. W. Friesen & Sons, who for the second year have given us expert professional service with much more interest and concern than "good business" calls for.

Prayer is the preface to the book of Christian living; the text of the new life sermon; the girding on of the armor for battle; the pilgrim's preparation for his journey. It must be supplemented by action or it amounts to nothing.—A. Phelps

BETHEL COLLEGE

The German Christmas program given by the German department in the Fellowship Hall of the Bethel College Church, Dec. 6, attracted a full house. The German carols and Christmas play were enthusiastically received.

Plans are in progress for the dedication of the new men's dormitory on January 15. Named the "Adolph G. Goering Hall" the building is in the final stages of completion and the men who will occupy the rooms in this dormitory moved in before leaving the campus for Christmas vacation, Dec. 16.

Applications for degrees are now being received and processed in the office of the registrar at Bethel College according to Dr. Eldon Graber, registrar.

At present the number applying for degrees is nearing 75.

The annual all-school Christmas banquet was held Wednesday in the college dining hall. The faculty was host at this banquet and took care of the clean up chores after the banquet.

Instead of a Christmas pageant given in former years, the music and drama departments co-operated this year in presenting Menotti's opera, "Amahl and the Night Visitors," on Dec. 14 and 15.

Students enrolling for the winter quarter at Bethel are, Albert Fast, Kenneth Kliewer, Orrie Klassen, Donald Hostetler, Barbara Shoup, freshmen; A. Lawrence Voth, Duane Klassen, Carl Hege, Orlando Goertzen, William Buller, Dean Schrag Dietrich Rempel, Donald Friesen, Myron Goering, Kenneth Hege, sophomores; Donald Goertzen, Henry Paul Toews, Cleo Troyer, Orlan Buller, Arlis Schrag, Marjorie Schrag, juniors; and Jane Nyce, senior.

Jakob Duerksen, soon to return to Paraguay, spoke in chapel Tuesday morning, December 13.

play production. Miss Kathryn Kaufman directs the play.

Rev. Andrew Shelly from Mennonite Biblical Seminary visited on the campus December 7 and served as chapel speaker. He based his remarks on Matthew 16:24. He stressed the importance of following Christ no matter where this following may lead. He urged young people to give serious consideration to church vocations.

Missionary Aron Jantzen of India spoke in chapel on November 30. He showed movies of the work among the lepers which is under his direction. He also spoke of the Penner Memorial being constructed in connection with the hospital for lepers. Rev. P. A. Penner who pioneered in the work with Indian lepers is especially well remembered at Freeman because he taught Bible at the college for a while after retiring from the mission field.

President Ronald von Riesen and Dr. Harold Gross attended the meeting of the Council of Boards at Newton, Kansas. They were delayed on the way home by the snowstorm which hit Nebraska and the Dakotas.

Professor John Ewert spent December 6 to 9 visiting the Education Departments of Black Hills Teacher College, Northern Teachers College, State College, Huron, and Augustana College. This is a part of the research project on Teacher Education Programs in South Dakota that he is doing for his doctor's degree at the University of Wyoming. Jericho Warehouse Burned

Due to the growing internal tensions in Jordan the MCC workers have moved from Jericho to temporary quarters in Jerusalem. On Sunday, Dec. 18, Akron, Pa., MCC offices received a cable from Ernest Lehman, director in Jordan, informing that the MCC house in Jericho had been looted and the warehouse burned. However, none of the workers were injured.

Further details will be released later. The temporary mail address is MCC, Jerusalem, Box 188.

Remember our workers in prayers as they serve in this center of uprisings and tensions.

Good News

In connection with mission work, there are many occasions when we call out "praise the Lord." But there are events which cause us to cry this praise out in a loud voice and with special gratitude to our Heavenly Father. Such special expression of gratefulness has occurred in our mission field in Cachipay, Colombia. Our school there has received a license which means Government permission to continue. Our missionaries and we were indeed concerned that grave hindrances would be in the way with respect to the furtherance of this blessed work with the children of Colombia. Now the way is open again.

Brother Arthur Keiser writes as follows: "We just received the license for the school here this week for which we praise the Lord. I believe it is the first Evangelical license that has been granted."
